It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Building contract—Extension of time — Ejection of con- tractor—Measure of damages.

This was an action to recover damages for breach of contract. The declaration was as follows:—

1. The plaintiff is a builder and contractor carrying on business at East London. The defendant is a Company duly registered under the Companies' Act, 1892 and carrying on business at East London and elsewhere in South Africa.

2. On or about the 17th June, 1903, the parties entered into a certain contract to which the plaintiff craves leave to refer when produced at the trial, whereunder the plaintiff agreed in consideration of the sum of £17,829 to be paid him by the defendant to erect in accordance with certain plans and specifications certain buildings at East London, one portion of which buildings was to be an hotel to be known as the “Grand Hotel” and the other portion a brewery depot.

3. It was provided by the said contract that the plaintiff should complete the brewery depot on or before the 17th December, 1903, and the whole of the buildings on or before the 17th May, 1904, unless the work should be delayed by reason of any inclement weather or causes not under the control of the contractor.

4. The plaintiff commenced work under the said contract on or about the 23rd June, 1903, and thereafter duly proceeded with the said work and continued so to proceed until the defendant broke and cancelled the contract and took possession of the site with all materials and plant thereon and ejected the plaintiff and his workmen as hereinafter set forth in paragraph 9.

5. The progress of the work was delayed by reason of certain causes for which the plaintiff was not responsible, but which arose through the acts or defaults of the defendant or his architects whereby it became and was wholly impossible to complete the brewery depot building by the 17th December, 1903. The said causes are more particularly set forth in paragraphs 6, 7, and 8 hereof.

6. The defendant after the execution of the said contract failed and neglected to deliver to the plaintiff forthwith possession of the whole of the site for the said buildings, but remained in use and occupation of a certain portion from the date of the said contract until early in November, 1903, and of a certain other portion from the date of the contract until on or about the 16th December, 1903. By reason of the retention by the defendant of the said portions the plaintiff was delayed and hindered in proceeding with the work.

7. After the execution of the contract the defendant caused a survey to be made of the site, which survey showed a length of frontage on a street known as Cambridge Street differing from the length of frontage shown on the plans annexed to the contract. The plaintiff duly applied to the defendant's architects for instructions as to what length of frontage he was to adopt, but the said architects unduly delayed to give him such instructions until September, 1903, when they supplied him with an amended plan showing an increased length of frontage. By reason of the said delay in giving instructions and of the said alterations of the plans, the progress of the works was hindered and retarded.

8. It was provided by the specifications that the defendant should supply certain iron and steel work for the buildings. The defendant failed and neglected duly to supply the said iron and steel work and the plaintiff was for a long time kept waiting for it and was delayed in his progress with the buildings.

9. In or about January, 1904, the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully broke and cancelled the said contract and took possession of the site and works to wit, both the "Grand Hotel" and the brewery depot and of the material and plant thereon and ordered the plaintiff and his workmen to leave the said site and works and refused to allow them to return thereto.

10. There is due to the plaintiff the sum of £3,092 15s. 3d., being for work and labour done, materials supplied and disbursements made in, about and for the said buildings. Particulars of the said sum have been supplied to the defendant.

11. Further by reason of the aforesaid breach and cancellation of contract the plaintiff has sustained damages by way of loss of profit on the contract in the sum of £1,755 19s. 9d.

12. All things have happened, all times have elapsed and all conditions have been fulfilled necessary to entitle plaintiff to payment of the said sums but the defendant refuses to make such payment.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims:—

- (a) Judgment for £3,092 15s. 3d.
- (b) £1,755 19s. 9d. damages.
- (c) Interest a tempore morae.
- (d) Costs of suit.

To this declaration defendant's plea and claim in reconvention were as follows:—

1. Paragraph 1 is admitted.

2. The defendant company admits that on or about the 17th day of June, 1903, the parties executed a written contract contained in a certain document of the said date together with certain general conditions and specifications embodied therein and attached thereto. The defendant company crave leave to refer for greater certainty to the terms thereof when produced at the trial, but save as above admits the allegations in paragraph 2.

3. Subject to the matters hereinafter set forth, the defendant company admits the allegations in paragraph 3.

4. By clause 15 of the said general conditions it is provided that "The contractor is to complete the whole of the works by the seventeenth day of May, 1904, unless the works be delayed by reason of any inclement weather, or causes not under control of the contractor, or in case of combination of workmen, or strikes, or lock-out affecting any of the building trades, for which due allowance shall be made by the architect, and then the contractor is to complete the works within such time as the architect shall consider to be reasonable, and shall from time to time in writing appoint, and in case of default, the contractor is to pay or allow to the employer as and by way of liquidated and agreed damages the sum of £5 per day for every day during which they shall be in default, until the whole of the works (except as aforesaid) shall be so completed, provided the architect shall in writing certify that the works could have been reasonably completed within the time appointed."

5. By clause 16 thereof it is further provided:—

"If the contractor shall become bankrupt, or compound with or make any assignment for the benefit of their creditors, or shall suspend or delay the performance of their part of the contract (except on account of causes mentioned in clause 15, or on account of being restrained or hindered under any proceedings taken by parties interested in any neighbouring property, or in consequence of not having proper instructions for which the contractor shall have duly applied), the employer, by the architect, may give to the contractors or their assignees or trustees, as the case may be, notice requiring the works to be proceeded with, and in case of default on the part of the contractor or their assignees or trustees for a period of three days, it shall be lawful for the employer, by the architect, to enter upon and take possession of the works, and to employ any other person or persons to carry on and complete the same, and to authorise him or them to use the plant, materials, and property of the contractor upon the works, and the costs and charges incurred in any way in carrying on and completing the same are to be paid to the employer by the contractor or may be set off by the employer against any moneys due or to become due to the contractor."

6. By the said specifications it is provided that the work is to be carried out so as to allow the employees (meaning the defendant company) to carry on the business of the hotel as far as the temporary bar is concerned and the present temporary bar is to remain until portion of the new building is ready for occupation.

7. The plaintiff did not commence work under the said contract until the 29th day of June, 1903, and did not prosecute the said work with due diligence, and thereafter from time to time wrongfully, unlawfully, and in breach of the said contract suspended and delayed the said work.

8. The defendant company admits that in consequence it became impossible to complete the brewery depot by the 17th December, 1903, but specially denies any responsibility, or act or default causing or contributing thereto.

9. The defendant company admits that in terms of the said contract it remained in possession and occupation of a small portion of the site of the said buildings, but gave up the said possession and occupation when requested so to do. It denies that the plaintiff was thereby hindered or delayed in proceeding with the work.

10. The defendant company also admits that the length of frontage on Cambridge Street as ascertained by actual survey differed slightly from the frontage shown upon the plans but the plaintiff was duly instructed in accordance with the terms of the contract and was not hindered or delayed thereby.

11. The defendant company admits that certain girders were not available upon the 31st October, 1903, when due, and admits that the plaintiff was delayed thereby but says specially that the period for the completion of the brewery depot building was upon the arrival of the said girders on or about the 11th day of January duly extended to the 27th day of February, 1904, under the provisions of the contract and the plaintiff acquiesced therein.

12. Thereafter the plaintiff continued to unreasonably delay the performance of his part of the contract, and on or about the 21st day of January, 1904, the defendant company, by its architect, gave due notice to the plaintiff in terms of the said clause 16, requiring the said works to be proceeded with.

13. The plaintiff did not proceed with the said works within three days thereafter or at all, but continued to delay the same, and on or about the 27th day of January, 1904, the defendant company acting lawfully and under the terms of the contract entered upon and took possession of the works, material, and plant in and about the said building.

14. There is due and owing to the plaintiff in respect of work done, and materials supplied, and disbursements made after deduction of payments made from time to time the sum of £2,547 19s. 11d. and no more against which the defendants are entitled and claim to set off the sum of £1,638 14s. 11d., being the lawful and reasonable costs and charges incurred by the defendants in carrying on and completing the works as in the claim in reconvention set forth. After deduction of the said sum of £1,638 14s. 11d. there remains a balance of £909 5s. which the defendants tender to pay the plaintiff with costs of suit.

15. The defendant company denies the breach of contract alleged in paragraph 4 or that the plaintiff has sustained any damage for which they are liable.

15. The defendant company denies the breach of contract alleged in paragraph 4 or that the plaintiff has sustained any damage for which they are liable.

16. Save as above and save that they admit that they refuse to pay the sums of £3,092 15s. 3d. and £1,755 19s. 9d., the defendant company denies each and every allegation in paragraphs 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 as specifically as if herein set out.

Wherefore subject to the above tender the defendant company prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

And for a claim in reconvention the defendant company (now plaintiff) says:

1. It craves leave to repeat the allegations contained in the several paragraphs of the above plea.

2. In consequence of the matters set forth in paragraphs 12 and 13 of the plea the defendant company was compelled to incur reasonable costs and charges in and about the carrying out and completing of the said works amounting to the sum of £1,638 14s. 11d., which said sum the defendant company is entitled by the terms of the said contract to set off and has claimed to set off against its hereinbefore admitted liability, but the plaintiff after lawful demand duly made has refused to allow the said set off or to pay the said sum or any portion thereof.

3. By reason of the premises the defendant company, which had to the knowledge of the plaintiff, let portion of the said buildings at a rental of £150, has lost the said rent for a long while, has been deprived of the use and occupation of the whole of the said buildings and has been put to expense in rent of stores and offices, has lost large profits from the supply of beer to the said hotel and has otherwise sustained damage in the sum of £2,000 sterling.

Wherefore the defendant company (now plaintiff) claims:

(a) Judgment for the said sum of £1,638 14s. 11d. so set off;

(b) £2,000 damages;

(c) Alternative relief;

(d) Cost of suit.

The replication was general.

John Batchelor said he was a qualified building and quantity surveyor. He came out to this country in April, 1903. The contract in question was entered into between the defendants and witness's brother, Herbert Batchelor, who had been in this country for some years. Witness managed the whole of the work for his brother. They began work on the 23rd June; certain bricks had to be removed, having been gathered together when the debris had been removed after the fire. When witness went to the site he found certain of the premises still in occupation. It was arranged that the temporary bar should remain until the new premises were ready. There was also an old store. Witness, on the 23rd June, asked the architect to give them possession of the site. On the 24th witness's brother received a letter from the architect complaining that the work had not been begun. About the second week of November they received possession of the remaining portion of the site, and the other bit they only received on the 16th December. This delay in handing possession to them of the entire site caused the contractor to be delayed in his work. He considered that if the site had been delivered to them properly they would have been able to complete the brewery portion in two months and the hotel portion in four months. Certain excavations had to be carried out; these operations were begun without block plan. There were no pegs at the commencement of the work. The architect should have supplied them with a block plan. They did not make an application to the architect for a block plan; they asked him to peg the site. The pegging was carried out between the 9th and 12th of 98 feet. The pegs on the hotel site showed a frontage to the street of 103 feet, while the plan showed a frontage of 98 feet. The pegs on Cambridge-street showed a frontage of 67 feet 2 inches, while the plan showed a frontage of 66 feet. The amended plans providing for increased rooms were received on the 4th September. When he got the plans on September 4 the work was proceeded with immediately, but up to that date the work was delayed. On September 14 the architect objected to the class of bricks that were being used. Between September 15 and September 29 he could not get the class of bricks the architect wanted. Until the excavations were finished there was no need for any material. The architect was aware that witness had great difficulty in getting bricks. Some of the broken bricks were used on the building by the new contractors, and others were used on another building. When witness received the letters he told the architect he could not understand the complaints; nothing had ever been said to witness, his brother, or the foreman on the works. On the 31st October the work in connection with the breweries was stopped. It was impossible to go on with the work until proper drawings were supplied; the girders were shorter than those specified in the bills of quantity. The architect was anxious that witness should use certain material from the Electric Light Works, and there was no reason, if witness thought it equal to what he was using from Blaney, why he should not have it. During the last week of January, when witness was cleared out, the wages were practically double what was paid in December when no complaint was made. The work could not possibly be done in forty-seven days; the new contractors had been on the job eight months. Witness's brother asked for £600, although work to the value of £1,250 was on the ground, and received £100. About February a request was received from the architect suggesting arbitration, but witness could not see that arbitration was necessary. Witness could not make anything of the counter claim put in by the defendants. After repeated requests for particulars the defendants' attorneys furnished a statement, in which there was little or no information. The contractors who contracted for the work on the second occasion were given quantities that were misleading. According to plans supplied to witness, no excavation was shown. As a matter of fact, a quantity of excavation was done. The plaintiff claimed £3,092, while the defendants said he was only entitled to £2,547. They were agreed as to quantity fees. There was a dispute under the heading of general conditions. Plaintiff made an allowance for certain things in his bill of quantities for the whole period of the contract. He took a proportion on the basis of the actual time they were engaged upon the contract. Under this head, plaintiff's amount was £156 8s.; defendants' amount was £79. Under the head of work done at the hotel buildings, the plaintiff charged £3,079, and the defendants allowed £2,972. In regard to the brewery depot, there was no disagreement, both parties making the amount due £1,150 5s. 10d. For works generally, the plaintiff charged £317 13s., which he now reduced to £234, while the defendants allowed £214. Upon working materials on site, the plaintiff charged £195 13s., against £152 9s., allowed by defendants; on scaffolding and plant plaintiff charged £160, against £110 allowed by defendants. There was also a dispute as to the centres for carrying the concrete floor. The amount was £2 12s. 6d. A dispute had arisen in regard to a number of 6-in. drain pipes, the plaintiff claiming £35 8s. The defendants' architects said that the pipes were not in accordance with the specification. Witness contended that the pipes were quite up to specification. He estimated that if they re-sold the pipes they would lose £10. There was a further item of £90 for bricks. The plaintiff also claimed £40 for delay through being hindered in his work. Witness produced figures in order to indicate the profit he would have made on the contract. The amount expended on the work up to the time they were turned of the contract was £4,842 2s. 2d. This amount did not include quantity fees, which were £435. The sum they were entitled to when they finished work was £5,666 19s., leaving a balance of £824 16s. 10d., thus working out at 17 per cent. on the total outlay. He calculated that their profits on the uncompleted portion of the contract would have been in still greater proportion, because of the fall in the prices of bricks and timber that had since taken place. Witness considered that his brother was able to do work more cheaply than the second contractors, Rochelle and Smith.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He was not financially interested in the contract, but received a salary of £7 per week. This was not entered in the time sheets, but appeared under profit and loss account. Witness was looking after three or four other jobs at the same time. Witness would deny that the site was covered with debris when the surveyor went to the spot in August. They asked to have the site pegged out in the early part of July. Witness denied that the site had not been cleared at the end of July. On the 2nd October they expected to be well up to time with the contract. Witness admitted that no letter was written by his brother or himself to the defendants or their architect, complaining of being delayed. He knew the specification provided that not alone was the temporary bar to remain, but the work was to be carried on so as to allow defendants to carry on the hotel business. He had never asked the manager of the breweries to give them possession of the whole site. He repeated that they had asked the architect more than once to give them possession of the whole site. If the architect said that they did not make such an application to them, he was in error. The portion that the breweries continued in possession of until the middle of December was at the back of the temporary bar. They were aware on the 4th September how things stood in connection with the brewery frontage. He remembered the letter of the 28th September from the architects complaining of the rate of progress of the work, and threatening to put them off the works. They had been delayed owing to the difference of frontage in Cambridge-street. His brother, in his reply, pointed out that he had had great difficulty in obtaining bricks, but added that he expected to be well up to time in his contract.

Mr. Upington: Why didn't your brother in that letter complain about the site not being given up?

Witness said that the facts were well known to both sides. The architect made deliberate misstatements in his letter in September, when he said that he had repeatedly had to complain of the rate of progress. On the 23rd October they applied for a sum of £500.

on account of work they had done. In reply, the architect wrote stating that the rate of work was unsatisfactory, and that, unless an improvement took place, it would be necessary to take the job out of their hands. On the 13th January they received an extension of time until the 27th February to complete the brewery buildings; on the 14th January they received a letter stating that no extension of time for the hotel buildings could be given. Witness admitted that his brother did not reply by letter, but said that a conversation took place between his brother and the architect. He admitted that a letter was afterwards received from Mr. Walker stating that, inasmuch as he had had no answer to his previous letter, he took it that plaintiff acquiesced in the proposed extension of time. In February plaintiff intimated that if he were to understand that the contract had been cancelled, he was prepared to go to arbitration. Subsequently he refused to go to arbitration unless defendants admitted that, as defendants had turned them off, they had acted illegally and broken the contract. Replying to further questions, witness said that the defendants had not shown any details as to how they arrived at their estimate of the work done, in response to plaintiff's claim.

Mr. Upington: Are you prepared to have that claim referred to some competent person to go into the details?

Witness: I am perfectly prepared to say that any man will uphold it.

Mr. Upington: It will be necessary to go into the various items which make it up.

Witness: All the prices are according to contract.

Mr. Upington: Personally, it seems to me to be a thing that certainly ought to be referred to some accountant to deal with.

[Hopley, J.: But how are you to do that in the middle of a jury trial.]

Mr. Upington: That particular issue of amount could, by consent, be withdrawn from the jury.

[Hopley, J.: The trial is by jury, and as far as I can see we shall have to go through with the whole thing.]

Sir H. Juta said that if defendants had only done what plaintiff asked them to do the whole matter could have been whittled down. He did not see by what process they could withdraw this issue from the jury, and bring it back again.

Mr. Upington quoted section 21 of the Arbitration Act (No. 29), 1898.

[Hopley, J., said he thought they had better proceed with the case.]

Witness was cross-examined at some length on the various items of the claim. He admitted that the item of £34 4s. due to the Municipality for water should go out of the claim if it had been paid by defendants. Plaintiff charged £24 5s. for boardings. The hoardings consisted of barrels filled with earth and planks on top.

Mr. Upington: But surely £24 5s. is an excessive figure for such a hoarding?

Witness: It is the price in the contract, and the hoarding satisfied the Municipality. A portion of the wall at the beginning had, he said, to be pulled down again, because the architect insisted only on whole bricks being used. When they left the job, they left uncondemned bricks on the ground. They had charged for these bricks in the claim. He did not see how they could have charged the second contractors for these bricks, because the Breweries took over everything that was on the ground.

Mr. Upington: As a matter of fact, you took this contract too low?

I most decidedly say not. This return shows there was a good profit on it.

In spite of all the delay, you have made a profit?

Witness: We have made a good profit on what has been done. Answering further questions, witness said he had seen the bills of quantities of another builder for the second contract, but he declined to say who he was, because he might be accused of animus by the architect. The quantities were lent to him by the builder, and he copied them. He declined to disclose the builder's name, except on paper to his lordship.

Mr. Upington pressed his right to have the question answered.

Sir H. Juta said rather than that anything said by witness should recoil on this unfortunate builder, he would withdraw the papers in question from the record.

Mr. Upington said he did not know whether there was any process whereby that could be done.

[Hopley, J.: I rule that it may be withdrawn.]

Witness, further cross-examined, said that they had actually done £7,000 worth of work, and the total amount of their tender was £18,000.

Mr. Upington intimated that, although he did not question the witness at present in regard to the measurements, it was not to be assumed that he did not intend to impeach witness's figures.

Re-examined, witness said that when they were ejected from the contract they left about 39,000 bricks on the ground. The cost at that time was from 70s. per 1,000 downwards. They left all their plant and materials on the ground when the defendants took possession.

Herbert Batchelor (the plaintiff) said that he had had six or seven contracts running at the time of the breweries contract, representing about £40,000. All the contracts had been completed except the one in dispute. Witness spoke to the architect several times about giving up full possession of the site. He also spoke to Mr. Walker about pegging out the site. They were delayed by the failure to give up the site and to peg it out. Witness had also had to ask for the stanchions for the brewery depot. Witness tried to meet the architect in regard to getting suitable bricks from the 15th to 29th September. The reason why he only mentioned the bricks in his letter to the architect of October 2 was because Mr. Walker said he wanted a letter to show to the Breweries Company. Witness detailed a conversation that he had with the architect on the 26th January. The architect said he would suggest to the Breweries Company that the time for the hotel contract should be extended two months, and that he would let witness know.

Cross-examined: At the interview he had with the architect he neither accepted nor refused the extra 47 days for the brewery depot. It was unreasonable to expect that he would be able to complete that part of the contract in 47 days.

Frederick Elliott, builder's foreman, formerly in the employ of the plaintiff on the breweries' contract, said that he had spoken to Mr. Letellier, defendant's manager, about being given possession of the whole site. Witness also gave evidence as to the pegging out of the site, and the discrepancies between the original plan and the survey. Witness did not receive an amended plan until afterwards. As a consequence the work was delayed.

Cross-examined: There was what he called a "store" on the site when they went there containing empty and full barrels, bottles, etc. The store had neither roof nor windows. Witness spoke to Mr. Walker about the pegging out about a week after they had been on the site.

By Hopley, J.: The liquor barrels would be exposed to the rain and sun. What sort of liquor would be kept there?

Witness said he did not know what kind of liquor would be kept there.

George Ernest Kay, a foreman now in plaintiff's employ, said he had examined from time to time the work done by the second contractors, Rochelle and Smith. He corroborated the statistics put in with three exceptions.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

Leonard K. Walker, of the firm of Cordeaux and Walker, architects, East London, was called. He said that his firm prepared plans and specifications, and drew out bills of quantities of the Grand Hotel and brewery depot. Plaintiff's tender, which was the lowest, was accepted. Work was begun on the 28th June, 1903. When the contract was signed the lower portion of walls of an old building still remained, a considerable quantity of brickwork being still on the site. There was no difficulty in ascertaining what the site was, which had to be cleared of the wall. At the outset a start was made to clear the hotel site, but nothing at all was done in regard to the brewery depot site. When the contract was entered into, Mr. Ellis, the licensee, was occupying the temporary bar. The clearing of the site of the old building was performed in a very dilatory manner; it had not been cleared when the survey was completed on the 13th August. A portion of the old hotel walls had not been removed. On the 13th July witness was asked by Mr. Herbert Batchelor for the pins for the brewery depot. Witness told the plaintiff that there was a pin in, but on going down they were unable to find it. Witness then wrote to the surveyor; the survey did not take place until the 13th August, the reason of the delay being that there was some question of the deeds of the adjoining block. Witness saw the site on the 12th August; it was not then sufficiently clear for the contract to be gone on with. No complaint had been made by plaintiff, his brother, or foreman that they were being delayed through the site not having been pegged out. Witness had before the 13th August spoken to plaintiff about getting blue bricks and other material. He gave to plaintiff verbal instructions after the difference between the original plan and the survey had been found. This was on the 14th August. There was no reason why the excavations should not have been gone on with. The reason why the plan of the 4th September was given was because the girders had been ordered from Home, and if they extended the building 13 inches it would require piers to carry the ends of the girders. The plan was given to show the distances between the piers and their actual position. Witness found it necessary to order some red bricks to be taken out and blue bricks substituted. On the 15th September witness wrote to plaintiff complaining of the rate of progress of the work, and on the 28th September he gave notice to the plaintiff that unless an improvement took place within three days the contract would be taken out of his hands. The plaintiff had a conversation with witness about the letter. They discussed the rate of progress of the work, but no mention was made by the plaintiff that he had been delayed in any way, excepting that he said he had had great difficulty in getting blue bricks. Plaintiff admitted that the work was not going on as it should do. The only excuse he made was that it was impossible to obtain the right class of bricks in sufficient quantities. Witness gave evidence as to further communications that he had with plaintiff, and said that the work dragged along sometimes, while sometimes it went quickly. The management was unsatisfactory. Witness had only previously known two persons in connection with the contract—the plaintiff and his foreman Elliott. He had not known John Batchelor as a responsible person in connection with the contract until this case had come on. The only complaint made by plaintiff as to the site was that he had not access to an old stable. That matter was put right on the following day. Under the contract certain iron and steel work was to be supplied by defendants; that material was not available until early in January. Batchelor was delayed on the brewery depot through the late arrival of steel and iron work. On the 31st October plaintiff had reached the level at which he wanted the girders, but he did other work after that. Witness admitted that Batchelor was delayed to a certain extent through the non-arrival of the stanchions. The delay on the brewery depot began on the 31st October. On the 13th January, witness wrote to plaintiff granting an extension of time, for the brewery depot contract for 47 days; he reckoned from the 31st October to the end of the contract time, and also took the period up to the arrival of the girders. On the 14th January, witness informed the plaintiff that no extension would be allowed on the hotel contract, because the work was not ready for the girders. Even after the girders had arrived, nothing was done for about a week either on the hotel or depot. On the 26th January, the plaintiff called on witness at his request. Witness then read over certain of the letters he had sent to plaintiff. Plaintiff waved his hand, and said that was "ancient history"—using a political term going about East London at the time. Witness asked plaintiff what he had to say, and for the first time the latter then said he had been delayed by the survey. Witness admitted that he had been delayed through the girders. Plaintiff said he considered that 47 days was too short an extension, and mentioned three months' extension on the hotel. Witness told him that he had not been delayed on that at all. He was willing to give plaintiff additional time rather than have a rupture, but plaintiff got up and said he could not do any thing more, and that the contract had been broken, and he (plaintiff) could do as he liked. After the notice of ejectment, the plaintiff continued on the contract until the 10th February. Witness also gave evidence in reference to certain of the materials left on the ground by plaintiff, which defendants refused to take over—the drain pipes, arches, etc.

Cross-examined by Mr. Uppington: Plaintiff says that he estimated his profit on the work done at £842 odd. What do you say as to that?

Witness: I hope he has; but I doubt it very much.

Can you give some reasons?—The work was not carried on in a payable way at all; it was dragged along. From the time of starting to the time they left, they were on the job six months, and the actual amount of work done by them was about £5,000. During further evidence, witness said he thought that 17 per cent. profit on ground work, as estimated by plaintiff, was a very large figure. He had taken out bills of quantities for the second contract by taking from the original contract the work actually done by the plaintiff. Messrs. Rochelle and Smith's tender was accepted for the second contract, the amount being £14,167. He thought that was a reasonable figure. The contract price had been paid, but the extras, amounting to about £500, had still to be paid.

Witness gave evidence in regard to a report presented by the plaintiff on the work done by the second contractors in its relation to the original bills of quantities. The alterations in the work thus made represented £546. The extras for which Rochelle and Smith had sent in an amount were £563 5s. 5d. Deductions had been made in consequence of considerable alterations under clause 7 of the general conditions of contract. Witness was then examined in regard to the disputed items of the plaintiff's claim. He declared that the plaintiff never provided hoardings to his satisfaction. He considered that £12 10s. was quite sufficient for the hoardings and lights; the plaintiff had charged £24 17s. 3d. Witness was further examined in some detail in regard to various items.

Sir H. Juta suggested that these details should be submitted to an architect, and that, after hearing Mr. Batchelor and Mr. Walker, he should give evidence to the Court.

Mr. Upington consented.

The suggestion was also approved by Hopley, J., and the jury.

It was agreed that the following questions be submitted to a quantity surveyor, to be dealt with in the course of the afternoon, and that he should hear Mr. John Batchelor and Mr. Walker: (1) General conditions of contract; (2) work done on hotel; (3) work done on brewery depot; (4) work generally; (5) working material on site; (6) scaffolding and plant. Counsel intimated that they would mutually decide upon a quantity surveyor, whose evidence should be regarded as final.

Mr. Leonard Walker stated that he produced the certificates of Batchelor's contract and also of Rochelle and Smith's contract. He stated that the first entry of shingle in plaintiff's materials book was on the 8th September; shingle was to be a constituent of the concrete used on the job. Concrete would be used for the foundations; that would be the first thing done after the trenches had been got out.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Witness usually put in writing his complaints as to works under his supervision. He did not address any letters of complaint to the plaintiff in November or December, 1903; he made complaints verbally to the plaintiff that the work was not being pushed on sufficiently. He desired to give the plaintiff as much latitude as possible during November and December.

Sir H. Juta: By why this sudden generosity of latitude after you had been giving the plaintiff notice? Had it anything to do with the girders not arriving?—Witness: No.

In answer to further questions, witness said that he was not being pushed so much during November and December by the breweries. That, he thought, was one reason why he did not address letters of complaint to the plaintiff.

Sir H. Juta: Can you suggest any reason why the employer suddenly dropped his great urgency in November and December, and woke up again in January?—I think he came in in December and made complaints. The plaintiff did very good work from October to the 20th November.

You granted them an extension of time on the 13th January, and then on the 14th January you launched this thunderbolt, threatening that if they did not go more quickly, you would take the work out of their hands?—I did not consider it a thunderbolt.

Didn't you consider it a farce to give an extension of time till the 27th February, and then the day after to send that notice threatening to take the work out of his hands?—I did not send a notice; I sent a letter telling him that he must push on, or he would not get through with it.

Now you knew perfectly well that after the contract time had expired, you could not give an extension?—No, I did not know that.

Didn't you know, what every other architect knows, that you cannot give an extension of time when the contract time has expired?—I did not know. That is a legal point, and I am not a lawyer.

In further cross-examination, witness said that he declined to give the plaintiff more money in January, because he was not satisfied that he was entitled to more upon the work done. He had not measured the work exactly.

Sir H. Juta: How dare you withhold from these men money that is due to them?

Witness: If I had paid more than the work justified, what would have been my position with my client? Replying to further questions, he said that he regarded it as possible on the 21st January that he would have to take the work out of plaintiff's hands, but he was going to wait. He thought that plaintiff wanted to get rid of the contract.

Sir H. Juta: Yes, and you were going to help him?—Witness: I did not want him to get rid of the contract.

Cross-examination continued: On the 26th January, he made a further offer to the plaintiff. He offered to give plaintiff an additional month's extension on the brewery depot, and two months' extension on the hotel contract. He was desirous that the contract should be proceeded with.

Sir H. Juta: Notwithstanding that these contractors were such a dilatory bad lot, you were prepared to give them extensions rather than let the contractors go?—Witness: We offered the extensions.

Eliminate the period, 15th September to 2nd October, when there was a dispute between you as to bricks, and show me one single serious complaint of delay in the work on the brewery.—There was no written complaint.

No. Now what becomes of this big case of accumulated complaint of delaying the work?—It is very plainly shown by the amount of work he did.

Is that all you can answer on that?—Yes. A number of the condemned centres were used by Rochello and Smith on the building, after the centres had been reboarded. Witness had allowed the plaintiff £20 for them.

Arthur Thomas Babbs, quantity surveyor, Cape Town, gave evidence in reference to the questions submitted to him, by consent of parties, for determination. Under the general conditions of contract, plaintiff claimed £156 9s., and witness found for £91 10s. As to works executed on the hotel portion, plaintiff claimed £3,079 10s. 11d., and witness found that he was entitled to £3,036 17s. 10d. As to works executed on the brewery depot, plaintiff claimed £1,150 5s. 10d., and witness found that he was entitled to payment in full. As to works generally, plaintiff claimed £317 12s. 8d. and witness found that he was entitled to £214 1s. 2d. As to contractor's working material on site, plaintiff claimed £195 13s. 2d., and witness allowed £173 16s. 10d. As to contractor's plant, plaintiff claimed £160 14s. 4d., and witness allowed £135.

By the Jury: He could not express an opinion as to whether the plaintiff would have been able to make a profit of £1,700, if he had carried out the entire contract. The prices in the schedule seemed to him to be fairly well cut. He would not call them "fat prices."

Mr. Uppington said that the tender made by the defendants seemed to be about £160 below the findings of Mr. Babbs.

Geo. Thornsby Atherstone, of Murray and Atherstone, surveyors, East London, gave evidence as to finding debris on the site when he carried out the survey in August, 1903.

Alfred Letellier, formerly defendants' manager at East London, described the condition of affairs on the site in the early period of the contractor's operations. As to the alleged "store," he declared that only empty casks and cases were placed in the space between the old walls. He left defendants' service of his own free will. Witness had no complaint either from the plaintiff or architect about these casks being on the premises. When plaintiff wanted casks removed witness had them removed in half an hour. He was absent from East London between August 19 and September 26, and on his return he was astounded at the small amount of work which had been done on the contract. For the temporary bar, Ellis, the licensee, was paying £40 a month. His lease extended to September, 1907. Ellis was "tied" to the breweries for draught beer. The defendants paid £5 a month for temporary offices. An extra store at £3 a month had to be hired for cases and boxes.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Witness was at present out of employment, but he was expecting when this lawsuit was over to go to the Central Hotel, King William's Town. He was not to be backed by the South African Breweries. He had not yet settled up with the Breweries. He had sold his hotel through the Breweries, and he was expecting a balance of about £230. He did not know whether any question had arisen between the Breweries and the auditor at East London. He admitted that he had been asked to give an explanation in regard to various items on vouchers. He was told about the matter at the end of last month. He wrote a letter to the head office, saying that the plaintiff had admitted having broken the contract. He did not know who informed him of that. He could not be expected to remember every incident ten months afterwards.

Henry John Ellis, East London, said that he was the lessee of the Grand Hotel, and paid a rent of £150 a month. For the temporary bar during the building operations, he paid £40 a month. His manager occupied a sleeping apartment on the site. His last month's account with the Breweries Company was £142; during the rebuilding, his account for the temporary bar was £30 to £40 a month.

Witness: I suppose about 50 per cent. No doubt the profit would be considerable, or they would not be able to pay such good dividends.

Charles Maple Polmear, manager for Rochelle and Smith's, said his firm had practically completed the contract. There was a balance owing of £563 over and above the contract price. Assuming that that was allowed, their profit on the work would, he calculated, be about £700.

Cross-examined: There was some difference of working between contractors. His firm had properly-kept books.

Sir H. Juta: Then I should be glad if you would arrange for your books to be sent here from East London, ready for Monday's hearing.

Witness said he did not see how their books would help matters much.

Sir H. Juta: Yes, but I do.

Hopley, J., requested witness to telegraph to his firm for the books dealing with this contract.

Witness, in answer to Sir H. Juta, said that he believed their original tender for the contract was £18,000, or a little over.

John Rochelle, of Rochelle and Smith, said that their original tender was £19,000, or a little over. The firm's books would show the amount of profit made on the second contract. He had not estimated the profit.

Cross-examined: They took the second contract at a cheaper rate than they adopted in their original tender. He could not, however, say that of his own knowledge.

Mr. Upington intimated that, as desired by the other side, wires had been sent to Rochelle and Smith, at East London, asking them to send their books dealing with the second contract. The books had been sent by Saturday night's train, which was due in town this (Tuesday) morning.

Sir H. Juta asked for copies of the telegrams sent to Rochelle and Smith to be produced. There were, he understood, three wires despatched, and he desired the Court to authorise the telegraph office to give to his attorney copies of telegrams to Rochelle and Smith, other than that sent by Mr. Souter.

The necessary authority was given by the Court.

Mr. Upington then called further evidence.

Charles Thomas Mouat, accountant, Cape Town, said that he had examined certain books in the hands of the Registrar, these being a copy of the wages books of the plaintiff, and memoranda of materials and plant delivered to the Grand Hotel Works, contained in three books. The books were very inaccurate, so far as additions were concerned. There were many errors, making, he calculated, a difference of about £170.

By the Court: The difference meant that the profit of the plaintiff would be smaller than appeared from the materials books, inasmuch as the materials had cost more than the additions showed.

Witness detailed several cases of shortage in the additions. He found shortages amounting to £174 11s. 9d., and excesses amounting to £5 15s. 7d., thus showing a shortage of £168

16s. 2d. The correct addition of the materials books was £2,420 5s. 4d., and of the wages books £1,663 18s. He did not think it possible to compile a profit and loss account from the books produced. He should want the man's journal, cash books, and so forth. There was no cost of supervision shown in the books produced, which were really informal memoranda. A certain amount should also be allowed for depreciation of plant.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Plaintiff's payments for the hotel and brewery contract were: For wages, £1,663 18s.; material and part plant, £2,420 5s. 4d.; imported goods, £711 16s.; carting, £69 1s.; water, £26 1s. 10d.; use and depreciation of scaffolding plant, £25; and management expenses, £85. He did not think that £85 would represent a fair charge for management on such a large contract for eight months. There would be clerical and office expenses to add, and charges for stationery. The total of the items he had mentioned was £5,000 2s. 2d., from which £160 was to be deducted for bricks sold on the site, leaving a sum of £4,840 2s. 2d. Witness considered that 15 per cent. should be added for management expenses, that was to say, £726.

Mr. Upington said that Mr. Walker (the architect), who was to be re-called, to give evidence on a certain point, was unable to attend the Court. Counsel put in a medical certificate, showing that Mr. Walker was suffering from dysentery and would not be able to attend before Wednesday. He added that he could not, of course, ensure the health of his witnesses.

Sir H. Juta, in answer to his lordship, said he would rather go on with the case than have another adjournment, the absence of the books of Rochelle and Smith, and certain evidence he wanted from Mr. Walker notwithstanding. He hoped that the telegrams sent to Rochelle and Smith would soon be in court. Counsel then proceeded to address the jury in support of the plaintiff's case. The whole crux of the case was, he urged, whether the architect was justified in giving plaintiff notice, and taking possession of the works. That question involved two points—one of law and the other of fact. As regarded the legal aspect, his first point was that the contract time for the brewery depot having expired on the 17th December, 1903, the architect could not in January extend the time. He quoted Hudson on Building Contracts (Vol. I. page 447), and cited the cases of Walker (Law Reports I., Common Pleas Division, p. 518), Roberts v. Bury Improvement Commissioners (5 Common Pleas Division, p. 310), Wells v. Army and Navy Co-operative Society (Law Times Reports, vol. 86, p. 764). In point of fact, Mr. Walker was quite wrong in extending the time on the 13th January. It was very significant that Mr. Walker should have been anxious to have an acknowledgment from the plaintiff that they acquiesced in the extension. The only power the architect had under the contract was that if the work were not proceeded with, he should be able to apply penalties of £5 a day. The contract said nothing as to the rate of progress being within the arbitrament of the architect. The notice given to the contractor had nothing to do with past delays. He submitted that in the month of January, when the notice was given, the rate of progress was better than it had been before. Wages paid in January were 100 per cent. more than in the previous period. Counsel went on to review the principal features of the evidence, and submitted that the amount of profit claimed by the plaintiffs was not excessive.

Mr. Upington said that this was really the first opportunity he had had of putting the defendant's case before the Court. The position of the architect under the contract, he submitted, was that of a judge between the contractor and employer. That there was cause of complaint against the contractor from the outset, there could be no doubt. He contended that the evidence of the surveyor as to the debris on the site on the 12th August was entitled to the utmost consideration. He dealt with the causes of delay alleged by the plaintiff, and submitted that it had been shown to be highly improbable that the plaintiff was ever delayed either as regarded anything kept on the site by the defendants or the course to be adopted in regard to the additional land in Cambridge-street found upon the survey. These so-called causes of delay were an after-thought in the mind of Mr. Batchelor. As to the non-arrival of the steel-work, the defendants admitted this, and for the sake of argument, he would admit that they were to some extent liable, but he contended that the whole of the period when the plaintiff might have been delayed had been allowed in the extension of time granted by the architect. As to the question of the architect's right to extend time of contract, counsel submitted that the correspondence showed that, in the absence of an explicit reply by the plaintiff or his brother, the plaintiff was taken to have acquiesced in the architect's proposal granting an extension on the brewery depot, and declining to give an extension on the hotel. If that statement was unchallenged, Mr. Batchelor could not now be heard to say that he did not accept the extension offered on the brewery depot. If the plaintiff did accept that extension, as counsel submitted he did, then the question of Walker's authority to give the extension went out of the case altogether.

Then the question arose whether Batchelor did or did not after that continue the work at a reasonable rate of progress. Of that question, the first judge was the architect. Plaintiff's own memorandum book showed that in January the wages paid on the contract did not during any week show a fluctuation of a £10 note. On his own figures, there was nothing to show that plaintiff made any improvement while the six days' notice given in January was running. He might be asked what were the reasons why plaintiff had got into these difficulties? He did not wish to go into these matters, but it did not seem improbable that their contract was not so profitable as they wished to make out, that, as a matter of fact, theirs was the lowest tender, and that they cut things a little too fine. If defendants had not acted illegally, counsel contended that they were entitled to damages, and especially in relation to the difference of rental that they received through being kept out of the Grand Hotel until November. He submitted that the evidence given by plaintiff in support of his claim that they would have made 10 per cent. profit on the entire contract was unsatisfactory. Counsel quoted from Hudson on Building Contracts (Vol. II., p. 132).

Hopley, J., said they must all feel that this was a case which it would have been much better to have referred to some practical, common-sense man at East London, who could have gone on the spot and entered into every detail. Such a man he was sure would in two days have been able to deal with the case in a more satisfactory way than a judge and jury sitting five days in Cape Town could do. Touching on the question of the architect's right to extend the contract time on the brewery depot, his lordship said it seemed to him that the view contended for by Sir H. Juta was the correct one. It seemed to him from the case quoted that if the employer wanted to forfeit a contract it must be done during the period of the contract. His lordship dealt with various other aspects of the case, and indicated the legal bearing of the issues to be tried by the jury. The measure of damages, if the jury found that the defendants had committed a breach of contract, would be the profit that plaintiff was likely to have made on the contract, and that alone. Then there was also a sum of £2,835 that it was admitted would have to be awarded to the plaintiff provided certain materials were included that the architect had rejected. After all the architect was the sole arbiter in the matter of the materials. As to the bricks, it seemed that if there were £90 worth of bricks left on the site by plaintiff, and if these bricks were used by the second contractors, whether improperly or not, then the plaintiff should be allowed that sum.

His lordship afterwards gave directions to the jury as to the question of damages to defendants should it be found that plaintiff had been rightfully ejected from the works.

The jury intimated that they had found for the plaintiff for £2,783 7s. 4d. on the account, and £750 as and for damages.

Sir H. Juta formally moved for judgment for £3,533 7s. 4d., with costs. He also mentioned the question of the costs of previous applications.

After hearing counsel further,

Hopley, J., said that judgment would be entered for the plaintiff for £3,533 7s. 4d., with costs, to include costs of previous applications, and plaintiff's expenses as a necessary witness. The question of John Batchelor's expenses as a witness would be dealt with by the Taxing Master.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

ADMISSIONS. { 1905.
Jan. 12th.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for the admission of Gerald Molyneux Swift, as an advocate.

Application granted, and oath administered.

Law Society—Attorney—Admission.

Where the Law Society raises difficulties in respect of the admission of an attorney: it should directly oppose and produce definite facts in support of its opposition.

Mr. Close moved for the admission of Herbert Stanley Jones as an attorney-at-law. Mr. M. Bisset appeared for the Law Society, who, although they did not object, desired to put in certain correspondence, from which it would appear that the secretary of the Law Society, London, wrote to the effect that while there was no record against the applicant there had been one or two complaints against him, but they could not be made out. His name was still on the rolls. From Natal there was correspondence to the effect that he was confidential clerk to Robert Greening, an attorney, who was at present under suspension, and that when Greening absconded from Natal in 1900, the applicant saw him off.

The applicant admitted having been clerk to Greening, and in support of the application correspondence was put in showing how he had been employed in this country.

Mr. Close pointed out that the correspondence should have been put on affidavit. Mr. Jones was in court, and was perfectly willing to answer any questions.

Mr. Bisset said he was not instructed to oppose the application. He would leave the matter in his lordship's hands.

De Villiers, C.J., in granting the application, said that of course it was competent for counsel to object to the correspondence going in, but once it was put in the Court was bound to give full effect to it. It was a matter for regret that the Law Society had not taken any definite stand in the matter. If the Law Society after ascertaining the previous career of this petitioner, had come to the conclusion that the society ought to oppose his admission, then there would have been something for the Court to consider. He thought the Law Society ought to take some responsibility on itself. Upon the whole, as there was no opposition, and there was nothing tangible against the applicant, the only course open to the Court was to grant the petition.

The oath was administered.

Mr. Sutton moved for the admission of Herbert Alexander Payn, as an attorney-at-law and notary public.

Application granted, subject to the birth certificate being filed.

Mr. Sutton moved for the admission of Frank Robert Baker, as an attorney-at-law.

Application granted, and oath administered.

Mr. Close moved for the admission of Alfred Allan Baxter Pocock, as an attorney-at-law and a notary public.

Application granted, the oath to be taken before the R.M. of Oudtshoorn.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the admission of Francis Hamp Adams as an attorney-at-law.

Application granted, oath to be taken before the R.M. of Komgha.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the admission of Claude Bernhard Schultz, as an attorney and notary public.

Application granted, the oath to be taken before the R.M. of Colesberg.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the admission of Howard Murray Layton, as an attorney-at-law and notary public. Application granted and oath administered.

Mr. P. Jones moved for the admission of Walter Reid as an attorney-at-law and notary public. Application granted and oath administered.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the admission of William Knox Baxter, as a conveyancer. Application granted and oath administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

VAN DER SPUY V. KAISER. { 1905.
Jan. 12th.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £5,500, with interest at 6 per cent. from 1st July, 1904, less £161 9s. 1d. paid on account, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable. Granted.

MCNAUGHTON V. SMELLEKAMP.

Mr. Sutton moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against the defendant on an unsatisfied judgment of the Supreme Court for £19 12s. 3d., being the amount of taxed costs.

The defendant appeared in person, and said that the case was due to the irregular and vexatious conduct of the plaintiff, who had obtained judgment fourteen days after full settlement had been made, when he was well aware that the matter of costs was in dispute. He was not prepared to pay this amount; his intention was to bring an action for damages against the plaintiff, and contest the claim. The sheriff's officer at Kimberley was informed that there was sufficient movable property at Durbanville, which he could attach. Before witness was barred, the plaintiff was fully paid.

De Villiers, C.J., said that if the plaintiff knew or had any means of knowing, that the defendant had a property which might without any difficulty be attached, the plaintiff should not proceed to such an extreme measure for the payment of such a paltry sum. Application refused.

COWLEY AND CO. V. VASSIS.

Mr. Close moved for provisional sentence for £96 1s., with interest and costs. The claim was one by edictal citation, and there had been considerable service. Granted.

WEINTROUB AND ANOTHER V. STEER.

Interdict—Servitude—Possession
— Aquaeductus — Sewerage and drainage.

The applicants, as owners of land, having a right of sewerage and drainage over neighbouring land, laid a pipe thereon for conveying water to their property. After the pipes had been so laid for a year, the respondent bought and received transfer of the neighbouring land, and thereafter cut the pipe on the land so transferred to him.

Held, that the servitude of sewerage and drainage does not embrace the right of laying pipes for leading water on to the applicants' land.

Held further, that the acquiescence of the former owner of the respondent's land for less than the period of presumption does not prejudice the respondent as the bona fide purchaser of the land.

Held further, that although the fact of the pipe having been used for leading water over the respondent's land for a year might afford prima facie proof of the applicants' right so to lead the water, it does not entitle them, in the face of the facts actually proved, to the Praetorian edict de aqua quotidiana.

Mr. M. de Villiers moved for an order directing the restoration of a certain water-pipe upon ground adjoining Beach-road, Three Anchor Bay. Mr. Struben appeared for the respondent, Frederick Beecher Steer.

From the affidavits, it appeared that the land of the applicants was originally bought at auction from the respondent, and that the water leading had been carried under the houses of the respondent's predecessor-in-title. The respondent had now objected, and he had the pipes taken out. He offered, it appeared from correspondence that was read, to allow as an act of grace the applicants to lay a water-pipe to flush their sewers along the side of his houses, but they declined to avail themselves of this tender.

Mr. De Villiers: See regulation 124 of the Town Council Regulations. In the first place a servitude of drainage comprises the right of water leading. (2) The respondent is bound by the acquiescence of his predecessors in title. (3) The respondent should have proceeded by action, and not have taken the law into his own hands.

As to my first point. Drains must be flushed and that cannot be done without water. Moreover, it would have been unreasonable to expect the adjoining proprietors to take their pipes round by the main road.

As to the second point. Kennedy, Steer's predecessor in title, acquiesced in these pipes being laid. They had been in situ more than a year, and in such a case no private person has any right to interfere on his own authority; see Voet (43-20 and 8-3-8). As to the regulations; when these pipes were laid there were no houses in the vicinity. We do not insist on any right to lay pipes under the respondent's house, but we ask for costs and for an order directing the respondent to reconnect the pipes. We are spoliati and therefore ante omnia restituendi.

Mr. Struben (for respondent): A servitude must be registered. We admit the right of sewage, but we deny the right of leading water, and say that these servitudes are distinct. Then again there is no necessity for leading water under our house. They can get water without coming on our property. They must be held bound by their grant, and cannot vary it by parol evidence. As to acquiescence; we are not bound by our predecessor in title.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Will you allow them to lead water along your wall?]

We have offered that concession as an act of grace, but they would not accept it on our terms. We were prepared even to grant a licence in perpetuity as an act of grace. Even if they can establish their right to a servitude to lead water across our ground it is for us to point out the way by which it must be led. Van der Byl v. Myburgh. (2 Juta 77.)

Mr. de Villiers (in reply): Counsel has avoided the question of spoliation. We claim restitution of our connection.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Then if a man has gone over my property for a year, I cannot interfere with him?]

Not forcibly; and then that would be an interim servitude; ours is continuous.

[De Villiers, C. J.: There is no evidence of forcible interference. You are willing to accept their offer, and the whole matter appears to be merely a question of costs.]

That is so; but we had to make this application.

[De Villiers, C. J.: I do not see any necessity for coming to the Court. Why not have accepted their offer?]

The offer was only conditional.

De Villiers, C. J.: In this application, which was heard on the 12th inst., and was decided in favour of the respondent, the question of costs was reserved, because of the point raised by counsel for the applicant that on the authority of Voet, the applicant had a right to a water pipe over the respondent's land, because he had enjoyed such a privilege uninterruptedly for more than a year. The passage quoted from Voet might be so construed, but he was referring to the Roman law, and he does not say that the Dutch practice followed that of the Roman law. On the contrary in another passage dealing with interdicts in general (43.1.9) he clearly intimates that the Dutch "mandament" had taken the place of the Roman interdict, but was much more limited in its operation. In none of the books dealing with the Dutch practice do I find anything to support the contention that the Praetorian interdict de aqua quotidiana was obtainable in Holland. The fact that water had been led over a person's land for a year might afford prima facie proof that a right existed so to lead it, but it would not prove the existence of such a right in the face of evidence such as that given on behalf of the respondent in the present case.

The servitude of sewerage and drainage which the applicants certainly had over the respondent's land does not embrace the right of laying pipes over that land for leading water on to the applicants' land, nor can the period of prescription prejudice the applicants as the bona fide purchasers of that land.

The application must therefore be refused with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

PROVISIONAL CASE.

ESTATE SERRURIER V. { 1904.
ABRAHAMS. { Jan. 18th.

Mr. Russell mentioned this matter, which was ordered to stand over from the previous day for notice to the defendant. Counsel now moved for provisional sentence for £36, amount of interest on a bond, and £2 premium insurance, with costs.

Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte REDELINGHUYB.

Mr. Roux moved for an order on the Registrar of Deeds to have certain property purchased privately, from the estate of the petitioner's late father, registered.

De Villiers, C.J., said he would grant a rule, giving the opportunity to anyone to object, calling on all persons concerned to show cause why transfer should not be passed, the rule to be published once in English and Dutch in the "Oudts-hoorn Courant."

Ex parte WALKER.

Mr. M. Bisset moved, on behalf of the petitioner, to have a certain interdict set aside. The interdict was granted at the instance of Mrs. Martin, restraining her husband, against whom she intended proceeding for judicial separation, from passing transfer of certain property at Mossel Bay. Six months had now elapsed, and no such action had been instituted.

[De Villiers, C.J.: A better course would be to order transfer, and let the purchase price be paid to the Registrar.]

Mr. Bisset: That would be perfectly satisfactory to Mr. Walker. Walker, however, has arranged to pay some of Martin's creditors, and hand over the balance to Martin.

De Villiers, C.J.: I think the only solution is that an order should be granted as prayed, on condition that the petitioner pay the purchase price into the hands of the Registrar of the Court, pending a further order.

Ex parte NEL.

Mr. Close moved to have a certain rule nisi for the cancellation of certain old bonds made absolute.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte SMITH.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for leave to the petitioner to execute a certain bond on the property of her late husband.

MOLINE PLOW CO. V. SACKS AND OTHERS.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved to make absolute a rule nisi restraining the respondents from using the words "Flying Dutchman" in regard to ploughs, or from exhibiting agricultural or horticultural instruments with the words "Flying Dutchman." The respondents' attorneys had written to the effect that the "Flying Dutchman" was sent to their clients direct, who were entirely ignorant of the fact that the title was registered. As soon as the rule was served they gave instructions to erase the name from the stands, catalogues, etc. The agent of the respondent firm now undertook to discontinue the use of the words, and tendered costs to date, reserving the right to his principals to reclaim the costs if there was no previous infringement.

De Villiers, C.J.: If the respondents had given any indication of their desire of contesting the right to this trade-mark I should certainly have reserved the right, because the rule was granted upon an ex parte statement, and there is always a possibility that the respondents may prove that the applicants had not the full right which upon the ex parte statement they would appear to have. I think, however, you are entitled to the rule being made absolute, with costs.

Ex parte BREDEKAMP.

Mr. P. Jones moved, on behalf of the petitioner, who is executrix dative in the estate of her late husband for an order authorising her to pass a first mortgage bond for £1.250 on the estate.

De Villiers, C.J., said he would like to have further information as to the condition of the estates concerned, and whether or not there were any minors.

BREABLEY V. FAURE, VAN (1905.
EYK AND MOORE. (Jan. 13th.

Incola—Security for costs—Plaintiff proceeding by motion.

A person, not resident in the Colony, who makes a claim in the Supreme Court is not entitled to be relieved from the necessity of giving security for costs, on the ground that he is proceeding by way of motion and not by action.

Mr. Close was for the applicant and Mr. Bisset was for the respondents.

Mr. Bisset said at the outset he would take the objection that the applicant was not entitled to take any proceedings unless he gave security for costs beforehand, as he was not domiciled in this country, neither had he any immovable property here.

His Lordship: Is he not entitled to have his costs taxed?

Mr. Bisset: Oh, yes, provided he paid the necessary disbursements.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

De Villiers, C.J., said it was not denied on behalf of the applicant that he had left the Colony, that he was at present absent from the Colony, and that he stated before leaving the Colony that he did not intend to return to the Colony. It was clear therefore if the applicant instead of proceeding by motion had proceeded by action, he would have been bound to give security for costs. In his opinion it made no difference whether it was by action or motion, otherwise a person might always in these cases in which, by the practice of the Court, either motions or actions might be brought, chose the form of procedure by motion, and evade his liability for costs. In the present case he found on the 15th December the respondents gave notice to the applicant that if he proceeded with his motion there would be a demand for security for costs of the motion and the notice of motion was given on the 7th January, three weeks after the applicant knew that the security for costs would be demanded. Of course in the case of a motion the costs were not generally so heavy as in the case of an action, and that would be reason for not demanding heavy security, but certainly no reason for dispensing with the security. In the present case he considered heavy security need not be required, but that some security should be given. The Court therefore held that the applicant was not entitled to proceed with this motion unless he gave security to the satisfaction of the Registrar of the Court for the sum of £25. As to the question of costs of this motion, he thought it should stand over.

Ex parte ROOS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved, on behalf of the petitioner, in his capacity as secretary to the Board of Executors, for an order confirming the sale of certain property, which had been purchased by the trustee in an estate after it had been put up for auction.

De Villiers, C.J., in granting the order, under special circumstances disclosed, characterised the practice of trustees purchasing in their own estates without disclosing full particulars to all concerned as pernicious.

GREEFF V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

This was an application to have a certain award of arbitrators made a rule of Court.

Mr. Searle, K.C., for the applicants, said that the Government, he thought, did not oppose, but both parties wished an expression of opinion from the Court, whether upon the award being made a rule of Court, the £750 awarded for certain ground expropriated at Oudtshoorn should not be paid by the Government to the applicant. There would be a delay of some months in getting transfer, and as the Government had taken possession of the farm for some time, the applicant contended he was entitled to his money before transfer was passed.

Mr. H. Jones (or the Crown) pointed out that if the Government paid for the land now there might be a great amount of trouble and expense to get transfer in case of insolvency.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he thought the Government would be entitled to say that they would pay the purchase price, but they should only do so simultaneously with the transfer. He did not wish to suggest that the applicant might become insolvent; in fact, for all he knew the applicant might be a very wealthy man, but the principle must be upheld, and there would be an order that the purchase price should be paid upon transfer being given by the applicant. The Court would make the award a Rule of Court on condition that the transfer took place simultaneously with the payment of the purchase price, each party to pay half the costs of this application.

Mr. Searle mentioned the question of interest.

Mr. Jones said it was not the fault of the Government. They were willing to pay, but they could not get transfer.

De Villiers, C.J., said as it was a forced sale he thought the Government should pay costs from the date of the award being made a Rule of Court. If the Government ascertained that there was no chance of insolvency with Greeff, he did not see why they should not pay the money and get out of the interest.

Ex parte LE ROUX.

Mr. Close moved for an order releasing the applicant from a certain executorship by reason of the petitioner entering into a second marriage.

Granted.

Ex parte WILL

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the appointment of the petitioner as provisional trustee in the insolvent estate of James Wright, an hotelkeeper, of Colesberg. ESTATE DAVIDSON V. AURET. { 1905.
Jan. 16th.
" 24th.

Partnership—Dormant partner—

Insolvency—Sharing of profits—Proof by solvent partner.

By agreement between A. and D., the former advanced £300 to the latter, to be utilized for the purpose of a tailoring business, which was to be managed by D. at a fixed salary in addition to a half share of the profits. D. was to keep the books which A. was to be allowed to inspect. In consideration of the advance, D. was to pay to A. one half share of the annual profits in lieu of interest, and D. was to have the option of repaying the £300 in two years, and on such repayment A.'s share in the profits was to cease, but until such repayment A. was to receive his half share.

Held, that the agreement furnished prima facie proof of the existence of a partnership between A. and D.

This was an application by the trustee in the insolvent estate of Wm. Davidson for an order as to the ranking of certain claims.

From the affidavit of the applicant it appeared that the petitioner, Nathan Lionel Goldsmid, was sole trustee in the insolvent estate of William Davidson, of Queen's Town. In February, 1903, Davidson purchased a certain business from one Ryan for £450, obtained a loan from Auret of £300, and an agreement was entered into that at the expiration of each year the profits were to be divided. At the end of the first year, Davidson submitted a statement showing profits at £283 11s. 6d. Davidson could not pay one-half, and judgment was taken out against him. In July, Davidson filed a petition, claims amounting to £705 were filed, and at the third meeting Auret's claim was presented, and petitioner objected to the claim on the ground that Auret was an anonymous partner of Davidson. The R.M. accepted the claim without any reservation. The creditors instructed petitioner to take action to obtain an order that the respondent's claim was not entitled to rank concurrently with the other claims. In the course of the agreement it was stipulated that Davidson should receive a salary of £20 a month, the amount to be deducted out of the profits. Davidson, instead of paying interest, was to pay one half of the net profits. Auret at all times was to have access to the books, and Davidson was to have the option of paying the £300 in 1906.

The answering affidavit of the respondent denied that he was an anonymous partner. The £300 was advanced as an ordinary loan. Davidson could not give any security, and the agreement was drawn up.

The replying affidavit of Davidson asserted that the respondent and himself agreed to become partners in the business. The reason the respondent's name was not disclosed was because he was in the Postal Telegraph Department.

In a further affidavit, the respondent denied that his occupation prevented him giving his name.

Mr. Giddy, K.C., was for the applicant, and Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the respondent.

Mr. Giddy pointed out that to all intents and purposes Auret's name did not appear before the creditors. Auret had free access to the books, and he had, so to speak, a veto on Davidson's transactions; and it would be seen that he participated in the losses as well as the profits. If the interest was taken on £300, it would be a small sum in comparison with what half the property amounted to. Counsel submitted that so long as the agreement existed there was a partnership between the parties.

Mr. Searle said the point had never yet crisply come up before the Court. He submitted the Court had really to look at the agreement itself to gather from the terms of the agreement what was intended. The creditors knew nothing of Auret, and counsel urged that there was strong evidence in the terms of the agreement that it was merely a loan and not a partnership. There were the terms, "Davidson as owner," "the money to be utilised by him." Davidson was more like the agent of Auret than his partner, although counsel would not even admit that. According to the decision in the case of Watermeyer and Kindell's Trustees (3 Menz. 424) the Magistrate was clearly right in holding that there was no partnership.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (January 24).

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an application by the trustee of the insolvent estate of W. M. Davison for an order expunging a claim for £439, which Auret, the respondent, has proved against the estate or otherwise, postponing the payment of such claim, until all other claims against the same estate shall have been satisfied, on the ground that the respondent was a partner of the insolvent. No contract, purporting to be a contract of partnership, was entered into, but the applicant relies upon a written agreement made on the 7th of February, 1903, as virtually establishing such a partnership. The material portions of the agreement are the following: "The said Auret has advanced the sum of £300 to the said Davison, who, as owner of the tailoring business heretofore carried on in Queen's Town by John Ryan, acknowledged to have received the amount which is to be utilised by him for the purposes of the said business. The said Davison shall manage and carry on the said business, and keep proper books of account. In consideration of the said sum so advanced by the said Auret, the said Davison shall pay for, and, instead of interest, one-half of the net profits of the said business, such a division of the profits to be made every year, reckoned as from the 1st February, 1903. The said Auret, or his lawful nominee, shall at all reasonable times have free access to the books of the said business. As soon as the said Davison shall assume personal supervision of the said business, and for that purpose leave his present situation, then and from such date, he shall be entitled to £20 a month, which sum shall be deducted from the gross profits of the business before a division is made. The said Davison shall have the option of repaying the said sum of £300 on the 31st January, 1906, and on such payment the share in half of the profits of the said Auret shall cease, it being conditioned that the said Auret shall be entitled to such half-share of the profits until the amount be paid him." The respondent's counsel contends that this agreement amounts to no more than a loan by Auret to Davison, but it is remarkable that no time is fixed for the repayment of the £300 advanced by Auret. The money was advanced with the distinct object of being utilised for the purposes of a business to be carried on by Davison for the joint profit of himself and Auret, and the option is left to Davison of repaying the money on the 31st of January, 1906. Whether Davison paid the money on that date, or postponed the payment until a later date, Auret was to be entitled to his half share of the profits until the date of actual payment. The duties were imposed on Davison of managing and carrying on the business, and keeping proper books of account, in consideration of which he was to receive an allowance of £20 a month, to be deducted from the gross profits, and the right was reserved to Auret or his nominee to have free access to the books of the said business. Upon the evidence before the Court, the contract thus entered into would appear to be one of partnership, and not of loan. If a loan had been intended, there surely would have been some provision enabling the lender to recover back the amount of his loan. Supposing that Auret became dissatisfied with the manner in which the business was carried on, would he be bound to wait until Davison chose to repay the loan before he could lay claim to the capital sum advanced by him? Unless he were a partner with the ordinary right to claim a dissolution after due notice, he would in such a case seem to have no remedy under the agreement. Supposing, further, that without any fault on the part of Davison, heavy losses had been sustained in the business, with the result that the whole of the capital advanced by Auret had been lost, would Auret have been entitled to claim repayment of the capital? The agreement confers no such right on him in express terms, and no such right can be fairly inferred from the terms of the agreement. The decision of this Court in the case of Watermeyer v. Kerdell's Trustees (3. Menz., 424), has been relied upon by the respondent's counsel as negating the existence of a partnership in the present case, but no definite rule was there laid down by the majority of the Court which can assist in the determination of the present case. The complicated terms of that agreement differed very materially from the simple terms of the agreement now under consideration, which may be construed by the aid of the elementary principles of the law of partnership. What, then, is meant by a partnership. According to Voet (17, 2, 1), it is contractus super re honesta de lucri et damni communione. Literally translated, this means that it is a "contract concerning an honest transaction for the sharing of profit and loss," but freely translated, the author's meaning seems to be that it is "an agreement between two or more persons for the purpose of carrying on a lawful undertaking, and dividing its profits and losses between them." The definition given by Pothier (Partnership), and followed by Van der Linden (Institutes, B 4, ch. 1, 11), is that "partnership is a contract by which two or more persons put or engage to put something in common in order to make therefrom in common an honest profit with the mutual obligation of accounting to each other." The difference between the two definitions is that Voet says nothing about putting anything into a common stock, or about the parties having to account to each other, and that Pothier says nothing about sharing of losses, but when they proceed to enlarge upon their respective definitions there is no substantial difference between them. They are agreed that either labour or effects or both may be contributed by the partners, that he who carries on the business must render an account of his administration, and that generally each of the partners must bear the same proportion of the losses of the partnership as he ought to have of its profits, if it is prosperous. Voet (17, 2, 8) admits that this last rule may be evaded by a special stipulation to the contrary, and that it may be legally agreed that one of the partners shall have a share of the profit, and not bear any part of the loss, and he adds that such an agreement would not transgress his requirement of community of loss, because there can be no profit until the loss has been deducted. Whether this explanation be perfectly satisfactory or not, it is clear that he did not intend, under his definition of partnership, to exclude cases where community of loss is not expressly agreed upon. The main test in every case is whether there is an agreement to share profits, unaccompanied by circumstances showing that partnership was intended to be excluded. In the present case, the word loan is not used at all in the written agreement, but even if it had been so used, the Court, as stated in Treasurer-General v. Lippert (1 Juta, 302; 2 Juta, 173), would look to the real transaction between the parties, and not to what they have called it. The tendency at the present day would be to designate an advance for the purposes of a partnership business as a loan, in the same way as under the strict laws against usury, the tendency formerly was to disguise a loan at usurious interest as a partnership. I do not say that the disguise was fraudulently adopted—for the statement in Davison's affidavit may be correct that the reason for Auret's name not being disclosed was because of his being in the Civil Service—but I do say that the agreement includes the essential requisites of a partnership, and that, unless the actual dealings between the parties rebut the presumption arising out of the terms of the agreement, the Court will have to hold that a partnership did exist at the date of sequestration. An opportunity will, however, be given to both parties to produce further evidence on this point before the Resident Magistrate. I have made no reference to the English law, because the case must, of course, be decided under our law; but it is satisfactory to find that there is no substantial difference in the tests to be applied in order to ascertain whether a partnership exists or not. In the case of Mollivo v. Court of Wards (4 L.R.P.C., 419), it was held by the Privy Council that, although the right to participate in the profits of a trade is a strong test of partnership, and there may be cases where, from such perception alone, it may as a presumption, not of law, but of fact, be enforced; yet, whether that relation does or does not exist, must depend on the real intention and contract of the parties. In that case, a lengthy agreement in writing was relied upon to establish the partnership, but the Judicial Committee, looking at the whole scope of the agreement, came to the conclusion that the primary object was to give security to the alleged partner, an Indian Rajah, as a creditor of the persons, Watsons by name, who carried on the trade, and not to make him a partner. The agreement differed in several particulars from the present one, the most important being that all available proceeds had to be handed to the Rajah as received by the Watsons for the purpose of extinguishing the debt due to him. The Rajah did not advance a fixed sum, as was done by Auret, and as is usual in ordinary partnerships, but he stipulated that for such advances indefinite in amount as he had already made, and should from time to time make, he should have certain securities, the chief security being the right to recoup himself out of the proceeds, as they were handed to him. The option was certainly not left to the Watsons, as it was to Auret, of paying the advances when it suited them to put an end to the agreement for sharing the profits of the business. "The Watsons," said their lordships, "evidently wished the Rajah to continue his advances, and for that purpose were willing to give him the largest security they could offer; but a partnership was not contemplated, and the agreement is really founded on the assumption not of community of benefit, but of opposition of interests." In the subsequent case of Pooley v. Driver (L.R. 5, Ch. Div. 458), Jessel, M.R., held that in the absence of something in the contract to show a contrary intention, the right to share profits, as profits, constitutes, according to English law, a partnership. The agreement in that case contained a number of ingenious provisions to enable the dormant partner to get a share of the profits, without contributing to the losses, but the general tenour of the Master of the Rolls' instructive judgment satisfies me that he would have held that an agreement like the one in question creates a partnership, unless some other relation could be shown from the surrounding circumstances. Both these English cases were referred to in the judgments of the judges in the Transvaal case of Anderson v. Royce (2, Off. Reports, 266), where it was held that the mere fact that the lender stipulates for a share in the profits acquired with the money lent, instead of interest, does not make him a partner of the borrower. It was there

been obtained against the borrower and his known partner declared executable as against the lender, on the ground that he was a partner; but at the most he would have been an anonymous partner against whom the creditors could not have proceeded in respect of debts incurred in the name of someone else. The Court there held that a partnership did not exist, but there was no written agreement, as there is in the present case, containing provisions which support the presumption of partnership arising out of a participation in profits. At the date of the sequestration of Davison's estate, the agreement was still running and in force. The claim of £439 consists mainly of the capital sum of £300 advanced, and the half share of profits, which, according to a statement submitted by Davison to the respondent in March, 1904, had up to that date been earned. In May, 1904, the respondent issued a summons against Davison for the amount of such capital and profits, and judgment was accordingly given in default of appearance on the part of Davison. In July, 1904, Davison's estate was sequestrated on his petition, which stated that his liabilities were £1,105 and his assets £822; but the applicant, as trustee, is doubtful whether the assets will realise one-fourth of the amount set forth in the schedules. The Court has no information before it as to whether the account rendered by Davison in March, 1904, which showed a profit of £283, was a correct statement, or whether, at the date of the sequestration, the tailoring business had resulted in a profit or in a loss. Nor does it appear from the affidavits whether Davison advanced any capital in addition to contributing his time and labour to the management and supervision of the business. If, after allowing for liabilities lawfully incurred by Davison on behalf of the business there had, at the date of sequestration, been an actual loss, absorbing the capital advanced by Auret, and the profits alleged to have been made up to March, there is no express provision in the agreement entitling Auret to claim more than the amount of business assets left in Davison's hands after deduction of the remaining business liabilities. It is clear that Auret can have no greater claim against the insolvent estate than he would have had against Davison if, in the absence of insolvency, Auret had in July sought to enforce his judgment debt. From the amount of that debt would have been deducted any lawful debt capable of being pleaded in compensation (Voet, 16, 2, 2). It will be necessary, therefore, before finally deciding the case, to remit the same to the Resident Magistrate, for further proof in terms of the last proviso to the 27th section of the Insolvent ordinance. Before stating the terms of the reference, however, I have to make a few general observations upon some of the arguments used on behalf of the respondent. His counsel contended that if there was a partnership it was either a partnership en commandite, or an anonymous partnership, and that, in either case, the respondent should not be postponed to the creditors of the partnership. The partnership, if any, was not en commandite, because there was no express limitation, as between themselves, of the respondent's liability, but it was an anonymous partnership, because it had been agreed that the business should be carried on by the insolvent in his own name alone. The expression anonymous partnership is used by Van der Linden (Inst., 4, 1, 12), who appears to have taken it over from Pothier, but I do not find it used in any earlier books on Dutch law. Neither of these writers, however, supports the contention that an anonymous partner is entitled to claim payment of the debts due to him by the partnership concurrently with other creditors of his partner. He is not, it is true, liable for the debts of the partnership to the creditors, with whom the principal, or known partner, has contracted, but he is liable for them to the principal or known partner, who has lawfully contracted them. This doctrine, as pointed out by Pothier (sec. 102), is a result of certain well established principles of the Roman law, which were adopted by the Dutch as well as the French law. One of those principles was that whatever power one partner might have to bind the others by a debt which he has contracted, it was necessary that it should be contracted in the name of the partnership, and this principle was adopted to its full extent by this Court, in the case of Guardian Insurance Company v. Lovemore's Executors (5, Juta, 211). A necessary result of the principle is that, as stated by Voet (17, 2, 15), where one of two or more partners have incurred a debt not in the name of the partnership, but in his own name, he does not bind the remaining parties either severally or jointly with himself. It is, however, in the nature of an anonymous partnership that the administering partner manages the business, and contracts debts in his own name, and not that of the partnership, and, consequently, the anonymous partner cannot be sued by the creditors of the partnership for the debts incurred by the managing partner. He remains liable, however, to the managing partner, who has contracted the debts in his own name but for the benefit of the partnership. If the managing partner becomes insolvent by reason of losses sustained in the business, the very difficult question arises as to the manner in which the insolvency assets should be distributed. The question was considered by Menzies, J., in the case of Watermeyer v. Kerdel's Trustee (3 Menz., 436), and, although the other judges differed from him as to the existence of a partnership in that case, it does not appear that they differed from him on the point now under consideration. His remarks are as follows: "As to the limitation of the obligations of anonymous partners to creditors is an exception from the general rule, it is not to be extended further than there is express authority for so doing. And no authority has been produced to show that the creditors of an anonymous partnership are not entitled to have their debts discharged out of the assets of the partnership, no matter by which of the partners they may have been advanced, before the anonymous partner is entitled to claim out of those assets repayment of the capital advanced by him, or payment of debts due to him individually, either by the partnership or by his co-partner." The difficulty lies in the practical application of this principle, for, ex hypothesi, there is only one estate under sequestration, and, as all the creditors gave credit to Davison individually, it may be impossible to draw a distinction between the creditors of the business and the creditors of the individual. They are all creditors of the insolvent estate of Davison, and may have to rank concurrently in the distribution of the assets of that estate, which, I presume, consists of assets employed in the business as well as assets not so employed. Upon these points the Court will be in a better position to pronounce a final judgment after it has obtained the fuller information which will be asked for. It is to be hoped that the Court may be able to decide this case without the aid of the thirty-fourth section of the Insolvent Ordinance, because that section seems to me hopelessly obscure. The first part of the section is confined to cases in which an ordinary partnership estate and the estate of one or more of the partners have been placed under sequestration, and neither that section nor the ninth section appears to contemplate the sequestration of the estate of a partnership consisting of two persons, one of whom is an anonymous partner. In the case of Sellar Brothers v. Clarke (10 Juta, 171), I am reported have said that the ordinance makes no distinction between known and dormant partners, and confers on the creditors of an insolvent partnership estate the full right of obtaining satisfaction from any partner. The dictum was not necessary for the decision of that case, and if the latter part of it was correctly reported I must take this opportunity of withdrawing it, and leaving the matter fully open for future decision. Although the ordinance makes no distinction between known and anonymous partners, it is, after further consideration, by no means clear to me that the ordinance was intended to subject anonymous partners to liabilities from which they would have been free if the ordinance had not been passed. The first proviso to the thirty-fourth section might possibly be made applicable to a case like the present, but that could only be done by treating the words "if insolvent" as a misprint for "if solvent." The proviso would then read thus: "Provided, however, that no partner, if solvent, and no trustee of the insolvent estate of any partner shall under any circumstances rank for the amount of any such claim for contribution upon the insolvent estate of any other partner in competition or concurrence with any of the creditors of the company claiming upon any such last-mentioned estate, which creditors are hereby declared to be entitled to be paid in preference and priority to any such partner or trustee." This is probably what the Legislature intended to enact, and I find that in the fair copy of the Ordinance filed in the Registrar's office the first syllable in the word "insolvent" has been struck through in ink, but there are no initials or anything else to show that the amendment was made by authority of the legislature. The respondent is solvent, and would not be affected by the proviso as it appears in the Statute Book, and the adoption of the amendment suggested by me would not materially affect the decision of the present case. As to the last proviso to the 34th section it only adds to the obscurity of the section and offers no assistance in the elucidation of the law or in the decision of the present case.

The Court will remit the case to the Resident Magistrate with directions to obtain: (1) Production of all correspondence that may have passed between Auret and Davison relative to the tailoring business carried on by the latter; (2) any relevant oral evidence that may be tendered on either side upon the questions at issue with liberty to the opposing party to cross-examine the witnesses; (3) production of the statement submitted by Davison in March, 1904, and showing an alleged profit of £283 11s. 6d.; (4) an account prepared by some competent person, and sworn to by him showing (a) the capital, if any, paid into the business by Davison; (b) the actual amount and dates of advances made by Auret; (c) the sums, if any, obtained from the business by Auret, and the sums drawn by Davison as salary, as his share of the profits and for his private purposes; (d) the profits and losses made and incurred between the date of the agreement and the date of sequestration; (e) the value of the assets of the business and the value of assets not belonging to the business at the date of sequestration; (f) the amount of the liabilities of the business, and the amount of the other liabilities of Davison at the date of sequestration; and (g) generally the balance of either profit or loss of the business at the date of sequestration. The information thus obtained will be transmitted to the Registrar of this Court, and the costs of this application will stand over.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller; Respondents' Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn.]

DUTCH REFORMED CHURCH, CAPE TOWN V. CAPE TOWN COUNCIL.

Mr. M. de Villiers was for the applicants, and Mr. Close for the respondents.

Mr. M. de Villiers moved to have a certain award in the expropriation of certain property at the instance of the respondents made a rule of Court, with costs. Mr. Close appeared to consent.

Award made a Rule of Court, with costs.

Ex parte NEL.

Mr. Du Toit moved for the appointment of two commissioners, one at Robertson and one at Cape Town, to take the evidence of witnesses in the insolvent estate of Woolf Cohen, of Robertson. Counsel suggested the Resident Magistrate of Robertson as one.

Application granted, the Resident Magistrate to take evidence at Robertson, and Mr. P. Jones to act at Cape Town.

SONDOM V. SONDOM.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for leave to sue the respondent, petitioner's wife, by edictal citation, for divorce in forma pauperis. The parties were married in Johannesburg, in November, 1895, in community of property. In 1896, the respondent deserted the petitioner, took up her abode with another man, and in 1902 gave birth to a child, of which the applicant was not the father.

De Villiers, C.J., said he would first grant a rule calling on the respondent to show cause why the plaintiff should not be allowed to sue in forma pauperis, returnable February 1, personal service to be effected.

Ex parte OOSTHUIZEN.

Mr. P. Jones moved for an order authorising the transfer of certain property. The matter had been before the Master, and his report was favourable. In the joint will of petitioner's parents, a farm, 2,363 morgen, at Aliwal North, was bequeathed specially to the respondent, provided he paid into the estate £1,000 within one year of the death of his father.

Granted

Ex parte VAN WYK AND OTHERS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan applied for leave on behalf of the petitioner's to sell certain property vested in the Dutch Reformed Church, at Adelaide. The Church owned the square on which the church was built. At a Congregational meeting of the Church, held on June 18, the consistory was instructed to sell a number of erven on the Church-square and utilise the funds for the church. The Registrar wanted an order of Court, because the ground in question was marked on the diagram as a square.

De Villiers, C.J., said he would grant a rule calling on all concerned to show cause on the 1st February why an order should not be made as prayed, the rule to be published twice in a Dutch newspaper circulating in the district, and twice in an English paper circulating in the district.

Ex parte IMPEY AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Pyemont moved for an order directing the winding up of the Amoy Brick Syndicate, a company which was unable to pay its debts, and which was indebted to the estate of Emile van Heerden in a mortgage bond for £1,000, and to petitioner, who was chairman, in his private capacity, in £314. The Divisional Council valuation of the farm held by the syndicate was £1,800, and the liabilities amounted to £1,979. It was impossible to get a quorum of shareholders together. It was to the best interests of the company that official liquidators should be appointed, and the names of Harry Gibson and E. Syfret had been suggested, with Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton as attorneys.

Judgment as prayed, the gentlemen mentioned being appointed to act.

NEEDHAM V. NEEDHAM.

Mr. Sutton moved on behalf of the petitioner, Mary Ann Needham, of Observatory-road, for alimony. The parties were married in community of property in 1893, and there were four children of the marriage. Petitioner's attorneys, acting on instructions, wrote to the respondent suggesting that a private separation a mensa et thoro be arrived at, as it was absolutely impossible to live with the respondent.

De Villiers, C.J., granted an order for the payment of £25 to the applicant's attorneys, to enable the applicant to proceed with the action, the sum of £8 to be paid to the applicant per month towards the maintenance of her children, pending an action, costs to stand over.

Ex parte ROBERTSON AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Close moved for an order sanctioning a certain compromise with certain creditors of a company to whom the petitioners were official liquidators.

Granted.

WILSON AND CATHCART V. YOUNG.

Mr. P. Jones moved for an order calling on the defendant to show cause why an order should not be granted for the attachment of the person of respondent for contempt of Court. On the 15th December the respondent was ordered to deliver up certain household premises at Observatory, but he had failed to do so. The respondent forcibly took possession of the premises, and the Court ordered him to restore possession.

The respondent appeared in person, and pointed out that he had trouble in getting rid of his tenant. The applicant, Wilson had refused to give him specifications to be examined by a qualified man. The plumbing work had to be redone. The job was not finished until it had been passed by an architect and the engineer at Mowbray.

The respondent was ordered to give up possession in terms of the order of Court of the 15th December, on or before 28th February, and in the meantime the applicants to proceed with all despatch with their action to recover the amount claimed, costs of the application to abide the result of the action.

DRUMMOND V JONES.

This was an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court against a judgment of Justice Lange, in the High Court of Griqualand West. Judgment was reserved, and by the time it was delivered applicant was away on business, and the time for appeal had elapsed. Applicant (who appeared in person) proceeded to relate several criminal charges that had been brought against him, each of which had been withdrawn, and the action on behalf of the police accounted for the delay in bringing the appeal. He based his application on the Act for the Better Administration of Justice. Applicant then proceeded to read a petition which he was about to forward to His Majesty the King, for protection against the unrelenting persecution of the Cape Police. In two of the best years of his life he had been worried by the police, and he prayed of His Majesty for protection, so that he could go through the Colony as a loyal British subject without fear.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Have you paid the amount of the judgment?]

Applicant: I have not been asked for it.

(De Villiers, C.J.: Could you find security?)

I think I could manage that.

De Villiers, C.J., said the applicant would have leave to appeal to the Supreme Court if within three weeks from this date he gave security to the Registrar for the payment of the amount of the judgment of the High Court, and the costs awarded by that judgment.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ADMISSIONS. } 1905.
 } Feb. 1st.

Mr. P. Jones moved for the admission of Frederick Glanville Stapleton as an advocate.

Application granted, and oath administered.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the admission of Arthur Edward Carlisle as an advocate.

Application granted, and oath administered.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the admission of Arthur Hallam Davidson as an attorney-at-law. Mr. Uppington appeared to oppose on behalf of the Law Society.

Mr. Gardiner said the matter had previously been before the Court, when it was pointed out by the Law Society that the applicant had only been admitted in Scotland as a law agent in the Sheriff's Court, and certain allegations were made against him by the Law Society that he held himself out to be an attorney of the Supreme Court before he was admitted. There was now a certificate from Scotland that he was still on the roll of law agents. The application would now be for admission to read from the report Hopley's judgment, would appear that the apply for admission to it, but there were still unprofessional conduct there would be a chance of refuting the charges. proceeded to read an affidavit Alexander John Mac to the Law Society, to the society received certificate that the applicant was himself or lending his qualified man at Lady the office, a sign-board was put up with the inscription, "A. H. Davidson, attorney and notary public," and his name had appeared under a notice in the "Gazette."

Mr. Gardiner said his name had never been struck off the rolls, nor had he ever been suspended in Scotland or the Transvaal.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

His Lordship, in granting the application, said it had been clearly laid down that a person in the position of the applicant was entitled to be admitted as an attorney of the Circuit Court. In September the applicant filed an application to be admitted as an attorney of the Supreme Court, and in the same month, under an arrangement with Mr. Dell, he went to Lady Grey for the purpose of taking an office. The applicant stated that the signboard was put up without his knowledge, consent, or instructions, and it was taken down at once when it came to his notice. He considered, on the whole, that there was nothing to show that the applicant had committed any act which should debar him from being admitted. There would be no order as to costs.

Mr. Alexander moved for the admission of Mauritz Pasques George Elliott as an attorney-at-law and notary public.

Application granted, and oaths administered.

Mr. Pyemont moved for the admission of Charles Herman Maasdorp as a conveyancer.

Application granted, and oaths administered.

BLACK V. HURWITZ.

Mr. Pyemont moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £30, with interest and costs.

The defendant appeared in court, and said he never received value for the amount.

His Lordship instructed him to put his defence on affidavit, and the case to come on to-morrow morning.

Postea (February 16th).

Defendant appeared in person.

An affidavit had been filed by the defendant stating that he engaged the plaintiff to prepare plans of certain building, and it was agreed that the plaintiff should get the plans passed and approved by the Town Council. The Council only passed the plans provisionally. He verily believed the plans had not been finally passed by the Council. He said that plaintiff had since agreed to accept a lump sum of £80. He gave plaintiff £50, and a promissory note for £30. Until the plans were finally passed, he could not proceed with the building, and he was not prepared to pay the promissory note.

An answering affidavit by the plaintiff, Wm. Black, said that there was no special stipulation in their terms that the plans should be approved by the City Council. The defendant knew that the plans were passed provisionally, and agreed to the conditions specified by the Council as to the frontage in Sir Lowry-road, and Dorset-street. The plans had been returned to deponent duly approved, subject to the defendant carrying out his undertaking with the Council. Defendant subsequently said that he had found a difficulty in the financing of the scheme, and that he did not propose to go on with the building. Deponent believed that defendant wished to escape his liability for the preparation of the plans. Further affidavits by Owen C. Ludolph, employed by the plaintiff to prepare the plans, and Cecil E. Bradfield, of plaintiff's attorneys, were read by counsel.

An answering affidavit by the defendant was read.

Buchanan, J.: In this case the plaintiff asks for provisional sentence on a promissory note. The defendant says that this promissory note was given in part payment for preparing certain plans, the plaintiff being an architect, and that these plans were to be submitted to the Town Council, and approved by them. There is a great deal of force in the defendant's contention that an architect is not to be paid for plans which are futile and useless, but they must be such plans as would be adopted, and some benefit would accrue to the person, who has the plans made. It is common cause that these plans were prepared and submitted to the Town Council, and, according to Mr. Black's and his assistant's affidavits, they were approved by the Town Council, and the only question in dispute was the question of blocking the building on the land. The plaintiff has done his work. He has prepared plans, they are plans which have been approved, and the only remaining question is whether the defendant's plans are in the possession of the defendant or the plaintiff. The document produced by plaintiff supports his statement that he handed the plans to defendant, and the defendant has nothing to support his statement that he handed back the plans to plaintiff. Provisional sentence will be granted as prayed. Mr. Hurwitz, if he likes, may go into the principal case, words "Flying Dutchman." The respondents' attorneys had written to the effect that the "Flying Dutchman" was sent to their clients direct, who were entirely ignorant of the fact that the title was registered. As soon as the rule was served they gave instructions to erase the name from the stands, catalogues, etc. The agent of the respondent firm now undertook to discontinue the use of the words, and tendered costs to date, reserving the right to his principals to reclaim the costs if there was no previous infringement.

De Villiers, C.J.: If the respondents had given any indication of their desire of contesting the right to this trade-mark I should certainly have reserved the right, because the rule was granted upon an ex parte statement, and there is always a possibility that the respondents may prove that the applicants had not the full right which upon the ex parte statement they would appear to have. I think, however, you are entitled to the rule being made absolute, with costs.

Ex parte BREDENKAMP.

Mr. P. Jones moved, on behalf of the petitioner, who is executrix dative in the estate of her late husband for an order authorising her to pass a first mortgage bond for £1,250 on the estate.

De Villiers, C.J., said he would like to have further information as to the condition of the estates concerned, and whether or not there were any minors.

BREARLEY V. FAURE, VAN (1905.
EYK AND MOORE. (Jan. 13th.

Incola—Security for costs—Plaintiff proceeding by motion.

A person, not resident in the Colony, who makes a claim in the Supreme Court is not entitled to be relieved from the necessity of giving security for costs, on the ground that he is proceeding by way of motion and not by action.

Mr. Close was for the applicant and Mr. Bisset was for the respondents.

Mr. Bisset said at the outset he would take the objection that the applicant was not entitled to take any proceedings unless he gave security for costs beforehand, as he was not domiciled in this country, neither had he any immovable property here.

His Lordship: Is he not entitled to have his costs taxed?

Mr. Bisset: Oh, yes, provided he paid the necessary disbursements.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

De Villiers, C.J., said it was not denied on behalf of the applicant that he had left the Colony, that he was at present absent from the Colony, and that he stated before leaving the Colony that he did not intend to return to the Colony. It was clear therefore if the applicant instead of proceeding by motion had proceeded by action, he would have been bound to give security for costs. In his opinion it made no difference whether it was by action or motion, otherwise a person might always in these cases in which, by the practice of the Court, either motions or actions might be brought, chose the form of procedure by motion, and evade his liability for costs. In the present case he found on the 15th December the respondents gave notice to the applicant that if he proceeded with his motion there would be a demand for security for costs of the motion, and the notice of motion was given on the 7th January, three weeks after the applicant knew that the security for costs would be demanded. Of course in the case of a motion the costs were not generally so heavy as in the case of an action, and that would be reason for not demanding heavy security, but certainly no reason for dispensing with the security. In the present case he considered heavy security need not be required, but that some security should be given. The Court therefore held that the applicant was not entitled to proceed with this motion unless he gave security to the satisfaction of the Registrar of the Court for the sum of £25. As to the question of costs of this motion, he thought it should stand over.

Ex parte ROOS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved, on behalf of the petitioner, in his capacity as secretary to the Board of Executors, for an order confirming the sale of certain property, which had been purchased by the trustee in an estate after it had been put up for auction.

De Villiers, C.J., in granting the order, under special circumstances disclosed, characterised the practice of trustees purchasing in their own estates without disclosing full particulars to all concerned as pernicious.

GREEFF V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

This was an application to have a certain award of arbitrators made a rule of Court.

Mr. Searle, K.C., for the applicants, said that the Government, he thought, did not oppose, but both parties wished an expression of opinion from the Court, whether upon the award being made a rule of Court, the £750 awarded for certain ground expropriated at Oudeboorn should not be paid by the Government to the applicant. There would be a delay of some months in getting transfer, and as the Government had taken possession of the farm for some time, the applicant contended he was entitled to his money before transfer was passed.

Mr. H. Jones (or the Crown) pointed out that if the Government paid for the land now there might be a great amount of trouble and expense to get transfer in case of insolvency.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he thought the Government would be entitled to say that they would pay the purchase price, but they should only do so simultaneously with the transfer. He did not wish to suggest that the applicant might become insolvent; in fact, for all he knew the applicant might be a very wealthy man, but the principle must be upheld, and there would be an order that the purchase price should be paid upon transfer being given by the applicant. The Court would make the award a Rule of Court on condition that the transfer took place simultaneously with the payment of the purchase price, each party to pay half the costs of this application.

Mr. Searle mentioned the question of interest.

Mr. Jones said it was not the fault of the Government. They were willing to pay, but they could not get transfer.

De Villiers, C.J., said as it was a forced sale he thought the Government should pay costs from the date of the award being made a Rule of Court. If the Government ascertained that there was no chance of insolvency with Greeff, he did not see why they should not pay the money and get out of the interest.

Ex parte LE ROUX.

Mr. Close moved for an order releasing the applicant from a certain executorship by reason of the petitioner entering into a second marriage.

Granted.

Ex parte WILL

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the appointment of the petitioner as provisional trustee in the insolvent estate of James Wright, an hotelkeeper, of Colesberg. ESTATE DAVIDSON V. AURET. { 1905.
Jan. 16th.
" 24th.

Partnership—Dormant partner—
Insolvency—Sharing of profits—Proof by solvent partner.

By agreement between A. and D., the former advanced £300 to the latter, to be utilized for the purpose of a tailoring business, which was to be managed by D. at a fixed salary in addition to a half share of the profits. D. was to keep the books which A. was to be allowed to inspect. In consideration of the advance, D. was to pay to A. one half share of the annual profits in lieu of interest, and D. was to have the option of repaying the £300 in two years, and on such repayment A.'s share in the profits was to cease, but until such repayment A. was to receive his half share.

Held, that the agreement furnished prima facie proof of the existence of a partnership between A. and D.

This was an application by the trustee in the insolvent estate of Wm. Davidson for an order as to the ranking of certain claims.

From the affidavit of the applicant it appeared that the petitioner, Nathan Lionel Goldsmid, was sole trustee in the insolvent estate of William Davidson, of Queen's Town. In February, 1903, Davidson purchased a certain business from one Ryan for £450, obtained a loan from Auret of £300, and an agreement was entered into that at the expiration of each year the profits were to be divided. At the end of the first year, Davidson submitted a statement showing profits at £283 11s. 6d. Davidson could not pay one-half, and judgment was taken out against him. In July, Davidson filed a petition, claims amounting to £705 were filed, and at the third meeting Auret's claim was presented, and petitioner objected to the claim on the ground that Auret was an anonymous partner of Davidson. The R.M. accepted the claim without any reservation. The creditors instructed petitioner to take action to obtain an order that the respondent's claim was not entitled to rank concurrently with the other claims. In the course of the agreement it was stipulated that Davidson should receive a salary of £20 a month, the amount to be deducted out of the profits. Davidson, instead of paying interest, was to pay one half of the net profits. Auret at all times was to have access to the books, and Davidson was to have the option of paying the £300 in 1906.

The answering affidavit of the respondent denied that he was an anonymous partner. The £300 was advanced as an ordinary loan. Davidson could not give any security, and the agreement was drawn up.

The replying affidavit of Davidson asserted that the respondent and himself agreed to become partners in the business. The reason the respondent's name was not disclosed was because he was in the Postal Telegraph Department.

In a further affidavit, the respondent denied that his occupation prevented him giving his name.

Mr. Giddy, K.C., was for the applicant, and Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the respondent.

Mr. Giddy pointed out that to all intents and purposes Auret's name did not appear before the creditors. Auret had free access to the books, and he had, so to speak, a veto on Davidson's transactions; and it would be seen that he participated in the losses as well as the profits. If the interest was taken on £300, it would be a small sum in comparison with what half the property amounted to. Counsel submitted that so long as the agreement existed there was a partnership between the parties.

Mr. Searle said the point had never yet crisply come up before the Court. He submitted the Court had really to look at the agreement itself to gather from the terms of the agreement what was intended. The creditors knew nothing of Auret, and counsel urged that there was strong evidence in the terms of the agreement that it was merely a loan and not a partnership. There were the terms, "Davidson as owner," "the money to be utilised by him." Davidson was more like the agent of Auret than his partner, although counsel would not even admit that. According to the decision in the case of Watermeyer and Kindell's Trustees (3 Menz. 424) the Magistrate was clearly right in holding that there was no partnership.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (January 24).

De Vilhiers, C.J.: This is an application by the trustee of the insolvent estate of W. M. Davison for an order expunging a claim for £439, which Auret, the respondent, has proved against the estate or otherwise, postponing the payment of such claim, until all other claims against the same estate shall have been satisfied, on the ground that the respondent was a partner of the insolvent. No contract, purporting to be a contract of partnership, was entered into, but the applicant relies upon a written agreement made on the 7th of February, 1903, as virtually establishing such a partnership. The material portions of the agreement are the following: "The said Auret has advanced the sum of £300 to the said Davison, who, as owner of the tailoring business heretofore carried on in Queen's Town by John Ryan, acknowledged to have received the amount which is to be utilised by him for the purposes of the said business. The said Davison shall manage and carry on the said business, and keep proper books of account. In consideration of the said sum so advanced by the said Auret, the said Davison shall pay for, and, instead of interest, one-half of the net profits of the said business, such a division of the profits to be made every year, reckoned as from the 1st February, 1903. The said Auret, or his lawful nominee, shall at all reasonable times have free access to the books of the said business. As soon as the said Davison shall assume personal supervision of the said business, and for that purpose leave his present situation, then and from such date, he shall be entitled to £20 a month, which sum shall be deducted from the gross profits of the business before a division is made. The said Davison shall have the option of repaying the said sum of £300 on the 31st January, 1906, and on such payment the share in half of the profits of the said Auret shall cease, it being conditioned that the said Auret shall be entitled to such half-share of the profits until the amount be paid him." The respondent's counsel contends that this agreement amounts to no more than a loan by Auret to Davison, but it is remarkable that no time is fixed for the repayment of the £300 advanced by Auret. The money was advanced with the distinct object of being utilised for the purposes of a business to be carried on by Davison for the joint profit of himself and Auret, and the option is left to Davison of repaying the money on the 31st of January, 1906. Whether Davison paid the money on that date, or postponed the payment until a later date, Auret was to be entitled to his half share of the profits until the date of actual payment. The duties were imposed on Davison of managing and carrying on the business, and keeping proper books of account, in consideration of which he was to receive an allowance of £20 a month, to be deducted from the gross profits, and the right was reserved to Auret or his nominee to have free access to the books of the said business. Upon the evidence before the Court, the contract thus entered into would appear to be one of partnership, and not of loan. If a loan had been intended, there surely would have been some provision enabling the lender to recover back the amount of his loan. Supposing that Auret became dissatisfied with the manner in which the business was carried on, would he be bound to wait until Davison chose to repay the loan before he could lay claim to the capital sum advanced by him? Unless he were a partner with the ordinary right to claim a dissolution after due notice, he would in such a case seem to have no remedy under the agreement. Supposing, further, that without any fault on the part of Davison, heavy losses had been sustained in the business, with the result that the whole of the capital advanced by Auret had been lost, would Auret have been entitled to claim repayment of the capital? The agreement confers no such right on him in express terms, and no such right can be fairly inferred from the terms of the agreement. The decision of this Court in the case of Watermeyer v. Kerdel's Trustees (3, Menz., 424), has been relied upon by the respondent's counsel as negating the existence of a partnership in the present case, but no definite rule was there laid down by the majority of the Court which can assist in the determination of the present case. The complicated terms of that agreement differed very materially from the simple terms of the agreement now under consideration, which may be construed by the aid of the elementary principles of the law of partnership. What, then, is meant by a partnership. According to Voet (17, 2, 1), it is contractus super re honesta de lucri et damni communione. Literally translated, this means that it is a "contract concerning an honest transaction for the sharing of profit and loss," but freely translated, the author's meaning seems to be that it is "an agreement between two or more persons for the purpose of carrying on a lawful undertaking, and dividing its profits and losses between them." The definition given by Pothier (Partnership), and followed by Van der Linden (Institutes, B 4, ch. 1, 11), is that "partnership is a contract by which two or more persons put or engage to put something in common in order to make therefrom in common an honest profit with the mutual obligation of accounting to each other." The difference between the two definitions is that Voet says nothing about putting anything into a common stock, or about the

to participate in the profits of a trade is a strong test of partnership, and there may be cases where, from such perception alone, it may as a presumption, not of law, but of fact, be enforced; yet, whether that relation does or does not exist, must depend on the real intention and contract of the parties. In that case, a lengthy agreement in writing was relied upon to establish the partnership, but the Judicial Committee, looking at the whole scope of the agreement, came to the conclusion that the primary object was to give security to the alleged partner, an Indian Rajah, as a creditor of the persons, Watsons by name, who carried on the trade, and not to make him a partner. The agreement differed in several particulars from the present one, the most important being that all available proceeds had to be handed to the Rajah as received by the Watsons for the purpose of extinguishing the debt due to him. The Rajah did not advance a fixed sum, as was done by Auret, and as is usual in ordinary partnerships, but he stipulated that for such advances indefinite in amount as he had already made, and should from time to time make, he should have certain securities, the chief security being the right to recoup himself out of the proceeds, as they were handed to him. The option was certainly not left to the Watsons, as it was to Auret, of paying the advances when it suited them to put an end to the agreement for sharing the profits of the business. "The Watsons," said their lordships, "evidently wished the Rajah to continue his advances, and for that purpose were willing to give him the largest security they could offer; but a partnership was not contemplated, and the agreement is really founded on the assumption not of community of benefit, but of opposition of interests." In the subsequent case of Pooley v. Driver (L.R. 5, Ch. Div. 458), Jessel, M.R., held that in the absence of something in the contract to show a contrary intention, the right to share profits, as profits, constitutes, according to English law, a partnership. The agreement in that case contained a number of ingenious provisions to enable the dormant partner to get a share of the profits, without contributing to the losses, but the general tenour of the Master of the Rolls' instructive judgment satisfies me that he would have held that an agreement like the one in question creates a partnership, unless some other relation could be shown from the surrounding circumstances. Both these English cases were referred to in the judgments of the judges in the Transvaal case of Anderson v. Royce (2, Off. Reports, 266), where it was held that the mere fact that the lender stipulates for a share in the profits acquired with the money lent, instead of interest, does not make him a partner of the borrower. It was there sought to have a judgment which had been obtained against the borrower and his known partner declared executable as against the lender, on the ground that he was a partner; but at the most he would have been an anonymous partner against whom the creditors could not have proceeded in respect of debts incurred in the name of someone else. The Court there held that a partnership did not exist, but there was no written agreement, as there is in the present case, containing provisions which support the presumption of partnership arising out of a participation in profits. At the date of the sequestration of Davison's estate, the agreement was still running and in force. The claim of £439 consists mainly of the capital sum of £300 advanced, and the half share of profits, which, according to a statement submitted by Davison to the respondent in March, 1904, had up to that date been earned. In May, 1904, the respondent issued a summons against Davison for the amount of such capital and profits, and judgment was accordingly given in default of appearance on the part of Davison. In July, 1904, Davison's estate was sequestrated on his petition, which stated that his liabilities were £1,105 and his assets £822; but the applicant, as trustee, is doubtful whether the assets will realise one-fourth of the amount set forth in the schedules. The Court has no information before it as to whether the account rendered by Davison in March, 1904, which showed a profit of £283, was a correct statement, or whether, at the date of the sequestration, the tailoring business had resulted in a profit or in a loss. Nor does it appear from the affidavits whether Davison advanced any capital in addition to contributing his time and labour to the management and supervision of the business. If, after allowing for liabilities lawfully incurred by Davison on behalf of the business there had, at the date of sequestration, been an actual loss, absorbing the capital advanced by Auret, and the profits alleged to have been made up to March, there is no express provision in the agreement entitling Auret to claim more than the amount of business assets left in Davison's hands after deduction of the remaining business liabilities. It is clear that Auret can have no greater claim against the insolvent estate than he would have had against Davison if, in the absence of insolvency, Auret had in July sought to enforce his judgment debt. From the amount of that debt would have been deducted any lawful debt capable of being pleaded in compensation (Voet, 16, 2, 2). It will be necessary, therefore, before finally deciding the case, to remit the same to the Resident Magistrate, for further proof in terms of the last proviso to the 27th section of the Insolvent ordinance. Before stating the terms of the reference, however, I have to make a few general observations upon some of the arguments

Ex parte VAN WYK AND OTHERS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan applied for leave on behalf of the petitioner's to sell certain property vested in the Dutch Reformed Church, at Adelaide. The Church owned the square on which the church was built. At a Congregational meeting of the Church, held on June 18, the consistory was instructed to sell a number of erven on the Church-square and utilise the funds for the church. The Registrar wanted an order of Court, because the ground in question was marked on the diagram as a square.

De Villiers, C.J., said he would grant a rule calling on all concerned to show cause on the 1st February why an order should not be made as prayed, the rule to be published twice in a Dutch newspaper circulating in the district, and twice in an English paper circulating in the district.

Ex parte IMPEY AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Pyemont moved for an order directing the winding up of the Amoy Brick Syndicate, a company which was unable to pay its debts, and which was indebted to the estate of Emile van Heerden in a mortgage bond for £1,000, and to petitioner, who was chairman, in his private capacity, in £314. The Divisional Council valuation of the farm held by the syndicate was £1,800, and the liabilities amounted to £1,979. It was impossible to get a quorum of shareholders together. It was to the best interests of the company that official liquidators should be appointed, and the names of Harry Gibson and E. Syfret had been suggested, with Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton as attorneys.

Judgment as prayed, the gentlemen mentioned being appointed to act.

NEEDHAM V. NEEDHAM.

Mr. Sutton moved on behalf of the petitioner, Mary Ann Needham, of Observatory-road, for alimony. The parties were married in community of property in 1893, and there were four children of the marriage. Petitioner's attorneys, acting on instructions, wrote to the respondent suggesting that a private separation a mensa et thoro be arrived at, as it was absolutely impossible to live with the respondent.

De Villiers, C.J., granted an order for the payment of £25 to the applicant's attorneys, to enable the applicant to proceed with the action, the sum of £8 to be paid to the applicant per month towards the maintenance of her children, pending an action, costs to stand over.

Ex parte ROBERTSON AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Close moved for an order sanctioning a certain compromise with certain creditors of a company to whom the petitioners were official liquidators.

Granted.

WILSON AND CATHCART V. YOUNG.

Mr. P. Jones moved for an order calling on the defendant to show cause why an order should not be granted for the attachment of the person of respondent for contempt of Court. On the 15th December the respondent was ordered to deliver up certain household premises at Observatory, but he had failed to do so. The respondent forcibly took possession of the premises, and the Court ordered him to restore possession.

The respondent appeared in person, and pointed out that he had trouble in getting rid of his tenant. The applicant, Wilson had refused to give him specifications to be examined by a qualified man. The plumbing work had to be redone. The job was not finished until it had been passed by an architect and the engineer at Mowbray.

The respondent was ordered to give up possession in terms of the order of Court of the 15th December, on or before 28th February, and in the meantime the applicants to proceed with all despatch with their action to recover the amount claimed, costs of the application to abide the result of the action.

DRUMMOND V JONES.

This was an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court against a judgment of Justice Lange, in the High Court of Griqualand West. Judgment was reserved, and by the time it was delivered applicant was away on business, and the time for appeal had elapsed. Applicant (who appeared in person) proceeded to relate several criminal charges that had been brought against him, each of which had been withdrawn, and the action on behalf of the police accounted for the delay in bringing the appeal. He based his application on the Act for the Better Administration of Justice. Applicant then proceeded to read a petition which he was about to forward to His Majesty the King, for protection against the unremitting persecution of the Cape Police. In two of the best years of his life he had been worried by the police, and he prayed of His Majesty for protection, so that he could go through the Colony as a loyal British subject without fear.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Have you paid the amount of the judgment?]

made applicable to a case like the present, but that could only be done by treating the words "if insolvent" as a misprint for "if solvent." The proviso would then read thus: "Provided, however, that no partner, if solvent, and no trustee of the insolvent estate of any partner shall under any circumstances rank for the amount of any such claim for contribution upon the insolvent estate of any other partner in competition or concurrence with any of the creditors of the company claiming upon any such last-mentioned estate, which creditors are hereby declared to be entitled to be paid in preference and priority to any such partner or trustee." This is probably what the Legislature intended to enact, and I find that in the fair copy of the Ordinance filed in the Registrar's office the first syllable in the word "insolvent" has been struck through in ink, but there are no initials or anything else to show that the amendment was made by authority of the legislature. The respondent is solvent, and would not be affected by the proviso as it appears in the Statute Book, and the adoption of the amendment suggested by me would not materially affect the decision of the present case. As to the last proviso to the 34th section it only adds to the obscurity of the section and offers no assistance in the elucidation of the law or in the decision of the present case.

The Court will remit the case to the Resident Magistrate with directions to obtain: (1) Production of all correspondence that may have passed between Auret and Davison relative to the tailoring business carried on by the latter; (2) any relevant oral evidence that may be tendered on either side upon the questions at issue with liberty to the opposing party to cross-examine the witnesses; (3) production of the statement submitted by Davison in March, 1904, and showing an alleged profit of £283 11s. 6d.; (4) an account prepared by some competent person, and sworn to by him showing (a) the capital, if any, paid into the business by Davison; (b) the actual amount and dates of advances made by Auret; (c) the sums, if any, obtained from the business by Auret, and the sums drawn by Davison as salary, as his share of the profits and for his private purposes; (d) the profits and losses made and incurred between the date of the agreement and the date of sequestration; (e) the value of the assets of the business and the value of assets not belonging to the business at the date of sequestration; (f) the amount of the liabilities of the business, and the amount of the other liabilities of Davison at the date of sequestration; and (g) generally the balance of either profit or loss of the business at the date of sequestration. The information thus obtained will be transmitted to the Registrar of this Court, and the costs of this application will stand over.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller; Respondents' Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn.]

DUTCH REFORMED CHURCH, CAPE TOWN V. CAPE TOWN COUNCIL.

Mr. M. de Villiers was for the applicants, and Mr. Close for the respondents.

Mr. M. de Villiers moved to have a certain award in the expropriation of certain property at the instance of the respondents made a rule of Court, with costs. Mr. Close appeared to consent.

Award made a Rule of Court, with costs.

Ex parte NEL.

Mr. Du Toit moved for the appointment of two commissioners, one at Robertson and one at Cape Town, to take the evidence of witnesses in the insolvent estate of Woolf Cohen, of Robertson. Counsel suggested the Resident Magistrate of Robertson as one.

Application granted, the Resident Magistrate to take evidence at Robertson, and Mr. P. Jones to act at Cape Town.

SONDOM V. SONDOM.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for leave to sue the respondent, petitioner's wife, by edictal citation, for divorce in forma pauperis. The parties were married in Johannesburg, in November, 1895, in community of property. In 1896, the respondent deserted the petitioner, took up her abode with another man, and in 1902 gave birth to a child, of which the applicant was not the father.

De Villiers, C.J., said he would first grant a rule calling on the respondent to show cause why the plaintiff should not be allowed to sue in forma pauperis, returnable February 1, personal service to be effected.

Ex parte OOSTHUIZEN.

Mr. P. Jones moved for an order authorising the transfer of certain property. The matter had been before the Master, and his report was favourable. In the joint will of petitioner's parents, a farm, 2.363 morgen, at Aliwal North, was bequeathed specially to the respondent, provided he paid into the estate £1,000 within one year of the death of his father.

BLACK V. HURWITZ.

Mr. Pyemont moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £30, with interest and costs.

The defendant appeared in court, and said he never received value for the amount.

His Lordship instructed him to put his defence on affidavit, and the case to come on to-morrow morning.

Postea (February 16th).

Defendant appeared in person.

An affidavit had been filed by the defendant stating that he engaged the plaintiff to prepare plans of certain building, and it was agreed that the plaintiff should get the plans passed and approved by the Town Council. The Council only passed the plans provisionally. He verily believed the plans had not been finally passed by the Council. He said that plaintiff had since agreed to accept a lump sum of £80. He gave plaintiff £50, and a promissory note for £30. Until the plans were finally passed, he could not proceed with the building, and he was not prepared to pay the promissory note.

An answering affidavit by the plaintiff, Wm. Black, said that there was no special stipulation in their terms that the plans should be approved by the City Council. The defendant knew that the plans were passed provisionally, and agreed to the conditions specified by the Council as to the frontage in Sir Lowry-road, and Dorset-street. The plans had been returned to deponent duly approved, subject to the defendant carrying out his undertaking with the Council. Defendant subsequently said that he had found a difficulty in the financing of the scheme, and that he did not propose to go on with the building. Deponent believed that defendant wished to escape his liability for the preparation of the plans. Further affidavits by Owen C. Ludolph, employed by the plaintiff to prepare the plans, and Cecil E. Bradfield, of plaintiff's attorneys, were read by counsel.

An answering affidavit by the defendant was read.

Buchanan, J.: In this case the plaintiff asks for provisional sentence on a promissory note. The defendant says that this promissory note was given in part payment for preparing certain plans, the plaintiff being an architect, and that these plans were to be submitted to the Town Council, and approved by them. There is a great deal of force in the defendant's contention that an architect is not to be paid for plans which are futile and useless, but they must be such plans as would be adopted, and some benefit would accrue to the person, who has the plans made. It is common cause that these plans were prepared and submitted to the Town Council, and, according to Mr. Black's and his assistant's affidavits, they were approved by the Town Council, and the only question in dispute was the question of blocking the building on the land. The plaintiff has done his work. He has prepared plans, they are plans which have been approved, and the only remaining question is whether the defendant's plans are in the possession of the defendant or the plaintiff. The document produced by plaintiff supports his statement that he handed the plans to defendant, and the defendant has nothing to support his statement that he handed back the plans to plaintiff. Provisional sentence will be granted as prayed. Mr. Hurwitz, if he likes, may go into the principal case,

[De Villiers, C.J.: Could you find security?]

I think I could manage that.

De Villiers, C.J., said the applicant would have leave to appeal to the Supreme Court if within three weeks from this date he gave security to the Registrar for the payment of the amount of the judgment of the High Court, and the costs awarded by that judgment.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1905.
 } Feb. 1st.

Mr. P. Jones moved for the admission of Frederick Glanville Stapleton as an advocate.

Application granted, and oath administered.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the admission of Arthur Edward Carlisle as an advocate.

Application granted, and oath administered.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the admission of Arthur Hallam Davidson as an attorney-at-law. Mr. Upington appeared to oppose on behalf of the Law Society.

Mr. Gardiner said the matter had previously been before the Court, when it was pointed out by the Law Society that the applicant had only been admitted in Scotland as a law agent in the Sheriff's Court, and certain allegations were made against him by the Law Society that he held himself out to be an attorney of the Supreme Court before he was admitted. There was now a certificate from Scotland that he was still on the roll of law agents. The application would now be for admission to the Circuit Court.

Mr. Upington read from the report of Mr. Justice Hopley's judgment, from which it would appear that the applicant could apply for admission to the Circuit Court, but there were still allegations of unprofessional conduct against him, and there would be a chance given him of refuting the charges. Counsel then proceeded to read an affidavit made by Alexander John MacCallum, secretary to the Law Society, to the effect that the society received certain information that the applicant was either practising himself or lending his name to an unqualified man at Lady Grey. Outside the office, a sign-board was put up with the inscription, "A. H. Davidson, attorney and notary public," and his name had appeared under a notice in the "Gazette."

Mr. Gardiner said his name had never been struck off the rolls, nor had he ever been suspended in Scotland or the Transvaal.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

His Lordship, in granting the application, said it had been clearly laid down that a person in the position of the applicant was entitled to be admitted as an attorney of the Circuit Court. In September the applicant filed an application to be admitted as an attorney of the Supreme Court, and in the same month, under an arrangement with Mr. Dell, he went to Lady Grey for the purpose of taking an office. The applicant stated that the signboard was put up without his knowledge, consent, or instructions, and it was taken down at once when it came to his notice. He considered, on the whole, that there was nothing to show that the applicant had committed any act which should debar him from being admitted. There would be no order as to costs.

Mr. Alexander moved for the admission of Mauritz Pasques George Elliott as an attorney-at-law and notary public.

Application granted, and oaths administered.

Mr. Pyemont moved for the admission of Charles Herman Maasdoorp as a conveyancer.

Application granted, and oaths administered.

He was not living at the Central Hotel. He had lost his money on the share market. He had been interested in the turf, but he had not done anything in connection with it for eleven months. Personal service could not be effected, and ten days were wasted in endeavouring to find the defendant. Publication was made in the "Daily Telegraph," and counsel would ask the Court, under the circumstances, whether it would insist on the publication in the "Government Gazette" a month before the return day.

Buchanan, J., said that under the circumstances he thought that a publication at once in the "Gazette" would be sufficient.

Schreiner, K.C., in connection with the Caledon election, should be re-opened to enable petitioner to file an account for £7, charges for advertising in the "South African Review." The petitioner stated that he had inadvertently failed to file the account within the period stipulated by the Act. A further affidavit was read from the election agent, assenting to the application, and acknowledging indebtedness to the petitioner as alleged.

Mr. Searle, K.C., on behalf of Mr. Schreiner, said the latter wished to say that he had been unaware of this account. It was out of his power now to pay the account without an order of Court. Mr. Schreiner was quite willing to pay the account.

Order granted, authorising the accounts to be re-opened, and giving leave for the payment in question to be made.

KEATING AND CO. V. FILLIS.

Mr. Struben moved for the rule nisi to be made absolute, requiring the respondent to show cause why permission should not be given to sue by edictal citation, and to attach certain goods to found jurisdiction. Counsel said that service was originally effected on respondent's mother-in-law, but subsequent to that date the respondent's wife had come to the applicants' attorneys, and had written a letter acknowledging the debt. She had paid £50, and promised that the balance would be handed in as soon as possible. Mrs. Fillis was managing the defendant's business in this country, and counsel asked for leave to applicants to effect service upon her. The respondent appeared to be touring with a certain show in America, after having been at the St. Louis Exhibition. Counsel understood that it was Mrs. Fillis's intention to shortly leave this country.

Buchanan, J., asked where the respondent's residence was?

Mr. Struben said he did not think the respondent had a domicile. He seemed to be peripatetic.

Dr. Greer moved for an order restraining the Torque Electric Lighting Co., the Trades, Markets and Exhibition Co., or any others, from in any way dealing with certain parts of an accumulator lying at the Exhibition, Green Point, pending an action to be brought by the petitioners' principals against the said Torque Electric Lighting Co. A lengthy affidavit was read by counsel, in which it was stated that the respondents, the Torque Co., had undertaken to fix the accumulator for electric lighting purposes; that they only had a portion of the accumulator removed to the Exhibition; that the remainder was lying in cases at the King's Warehouse; that the Torque Co. was in financial difficulties; and that they could not be traced.

Buchanan, J., said that he did not see how he could make the order against the Trades, Markets, and Exhibition Co. An order would be granted as prayed against the Torque Co.

Ex parte ARONSTEIN.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the appointment of a certain trustee in the estate of Benno Maisel, which had been surrendered at Port Elizabeth. The Magistrate at the meeting of Maisel's creditors refused to allow the petitioner's representative to vote, as he had not a legal power of attorney. The proceedings were now at a standstill in the insolvency.

Order granted authorising the Master to call another meeting of creditors for the appointment of a trustee. His Lordship added that if the insolvent was still being detained in gaol, it was time steps were taken to obtain his release. He understood that Maisel had already made an application for his release, but he was without means, and nobody appeared for him.

Mr. Gardiner said that he would have the remark conveyed to his client, upon whose instance the insolvent had been detained.

FEDERAL SUPPLY AND COLD STORAGE
V. FLEMING.

Mr. Russell moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £124 ls., goods sold and delivered, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

CHRIST V. CHRIST. { 1905.
Feb. 2nd.

Dr. Greer moved for the rule nisi to be made absolute, requiring the defendant to contribute alimony, and to deposit a certain sum to enable petitioner to institute action for divorce.

Mr. Burton read an affidavit by the respondent, in which he referred the Court to the affidavits filed in a similar application brought by the petitioner in 1901. He said that the cause was identical, viz., the excessive use by the applicant of intoxicants. He then paid the money, but the applicant did not proceed with the action. He denied that he had threatened his wife or turned his daughter out of the house. He also repudiated the charges of undue familiarity with another woman. His house was always open to his wife and daughter. He believed that no action would be brought now even if he deposited the money, and said that the application was simply brought for the purpose of vexation.

Dr. Greer said the plaintiff's statement was that she agreed on the former occasion to return to the respondent at his request, and to condone his cruel treatment of her in the past. There was also corroborative evidence of the undue familiarity of respondent with another woman.

Buchanan, J., said that, looking at the previous application, he did not think this was a case in which alimony should be ordered to be paid. There would be no order on that part of the case. On the other part of the application, the respondent would be ordered to pay £10 upon issue of summons, and a further sum of £15 if the case were set down for trial, costs to be costs in the case.

FOURIE V. FOURIE.

Mr. Burton moved for petitioner for leave to sue by edictal citation for a decree of divorce from his wife on the ground of her adultery with one Jordaan (late of the Orange River Colony), who had been sheltered at his farm during sickness. The parties were married at Knysna, and petitioner was now farming in the district of Uniondale. Respondent's whereabouts could not be traced.

Leave to sue granted, rule to be returnable on the 10th April, personal service to be effected if possible, failing which publication once in the "Government Gazette," the "Graaff-Reinet Advertiser," and the "Friend" (Bloemfontein), copies of rule to be served on the parents of the respondent.

DIEPRAEM V. CLOETE.

Removal of trial—Peregrinus—
Security for costs.

The Court refused the application of a defendant, a peregrinus, to remove a trial, as he had not given security for costs.

Mr. Gardiner moved, on behalf of the defendant in the suit (Diepraem), for leave to remove the cause now pending in the Supreme Court to the next Circuit Court, at Aliwal North. The applicant, who was now at Ficksburg, Orange River Colony, said that he could not possibly bring his witnesses and come to Cape Town by the 10th inst. He believed all the witnesses resided in or near Aliwal North, where the cause of action arose. The expense of coming to Cape Town for the case was really too great for him to bear.

Mr. McGregor read an affidavit by the respondent, stating that the respondent had given no security for the costs of this action, and that applicant's attorney had been apprised of the fact that a preliminary objection on the ground that there was no security for costs would be taken by the respondent at the hearing of the application. He was satisfied that any further delay in hearing the case would imperil the plaintiff's chances of obtaining his money if the applicant was a peregrinus. Counsel read a considerable body of correspondence which had passed between the parties. He submitted that the applicant could not be heard until he had given security for costs, and cited the case of Brearley v. Faure, Van Eyk and Co. (15 C.T.R., 20).

Mr. Gardiner (replying to his lordship) said that he had had no instructions as to giving security for costs. He pointed out, however, that the applicant was the defendant in the suit.

Buchanan, J., said that he would hear the application.

Mr. Gardiner contended that the balance of convenience would be wholly in favour of hearing the case on circuit.

Without calling on Mr. McGregor,

Buchanan, J.: Last month, for the first time, the defendant's attorney suggested that the case should be returned to Aliwal North. If defendant had still been a resident in that district, there might have been a good deal to say in favour of the application, but he has removed from the Colony altogether, and in his absence from the Colony, and the refusal to give security, I cannot, on the information before me, give an order. The application will be refused with costs.

Ex parte ELSBY.

This was an application to have the respondent, John Joseph Elsbey, declared of unsound mind, and to have a curator appointed of his person and property. Mr. Struben was for the petitioner; Mr. Lewis appeared on behalf of the curator ad litem.

Harriet Elsbey, wife of the respondent, said that her husband had been removed to the Asylum last year on account of his unsound mind. Witness desired to be appointed curator of her husband.

Mr. Lewis said that he had visited the respondent, who was quite unfit to manage his own affairs. He did not oppose the application.

Dr. Cox also gave evidence as to the condition of the respondent, who was admitted to the Old Somerset Hospital, under the name of Elsburg. Respondent was certified as insane on the 29th December; he was helpless both mentally and physically, and would have to be detained in a hospital.

Order granted, declaring the respondent to be insane and incapable of managing his affairs, and appointing Mrs. Harriet Elsbey curator of his property, and Dr. Cox curator of his person, costs to come out of the joint estate.

Ex parte LIGHTFOOT.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for the appointment of a curator of the property of Eleanor Gertrud Lightfoot.

Usual order granted, summons to be returnable on the 9th inst., and Mr. P. S. T. Jones to be curator ad litem.

Ex parte MACKINNON.

Mr. Gutsche moved for an order authorising the amendment of certain deeds deposited in the debt registry. The petitioner's name was erroneously inscribed on the deeds as John Mackinnon, and he desired to make an alteration, to comply with the requirements of the Registrar.

Buchanan, J., said that the Court must have the consent of the bondholders before any alteration of the deeds could be sanctioned. No order would be granted at the present stage.

CHORITZ V. SHOOLMAN.

Mr. Alexander moved for an order as to the service of certain process. Defendant had been prosecuted on a criminal charge, and committed to the Criminal Sessions, but he had disappeared before the trial, and his bail had been estreated. Petitioner asked for an order for substituted service upon the defendant.

Leave to sue by substituted service granted, service to be effected at the last place of abode and business of the defendant; and rule to be published once in the "Government Gazette," and once in the "Cape Times."

Ex parte THE CONSISTORY OF THE ADELAIDE DUTCH REFORMED CHURCH.

Mr. Gardiner moved for a rule nisi to be made absolute, authorising the sale of certain church property in the Square, Adelaide.

Rule nisi made absolute.

Ex parte DRURY.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for leave to execute a certain mortgage bond, for the purpose of discharging liabilities on a business in the estate. It was stated that the heirs were maintained by the profits on the business, which was said to be a flourishing one. Two of the heirs, now majors, consented. The Master reported that no account had been filed in the estate, and he had no information.

The matter was referred to the Master to report as to whether the bond would be in the interests of the minors.

THE MASTER V. PALMER.

Mr. Howel Jones applied for the attachment of the respondent for contempt of Court. The respondent was trustee in the insolvent estate of Edward Edwin Alexander, and had not complied with an order of Court to file certain accounts with the Master.

There was no appearance for the respondent, and the order was granted.

Ex parte WESSELS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for leave to pass transfer of certain property. The circumstances were that a certain piece of property in the estate was mis-described in the will. The executors wished to transfer the property as directed by the will, but the Registrar of Deeds declined to allow transfer without an order of Court.

Buchanan, J., said he could not understand why the Registrar of Deeds should refuse to pass transfer.

A rule nisi was granted, calling on the Registrar of Deeds at King William's Town, and all other persons interested, to show cause why the prayer of the petition should not be granted.

Ex parte THE DIRECTORS OF THE GOUDINI SCHOOL.

Mr. Van Zyl applied for an order authorising the transfer of certain property from the directors of the school to the churchwardens.

Buchanan, J., remarked that the transfer would mean to completely change the trust. This property was given by a gentleman who stipulated that it should be controlled by directors elected by voters. To transfer the property as now asked would be doing away with the rights of the voters.

Mr. Van Zyl suggested that if a rule nisi were granted it would enable the people who were entitled to vote to express an opinion. This was considered to be in the interests of the school.

No order was made.

Ex parte COOTE AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Upington moved for an order authorising the registration of a certain contract. The petition set forth that Mr. Coote came here some time ago, and went for a holiday to Scotland in July last. There he married the second-named petitioner, and they were advised that the marriage would be according to the laws of Scotland, regulating the separate rights of married persons. On arriving here, they were unable to register a contract embodying the ante-nuptial agreement, and they now applied for an order of Court, authorising the registration of a contract embodying the agreement before marriage, viz., to exclude community of property.

An order was granted, authorising the registration of a post-nuptial notarial contract, embodying the ante-nuptial agreement, excluding community of property.

Ex parte MOSSOP AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Gutsche moved for an order authorising the cancellation of a certain sale. The Master's report was favourable.

Buchanan, J., said the Court would grant an order, as far as the minors were concerned, authorising the applicants to cancel the sale.

Ex parte THE CAPE DISTRICT MUTUAL BUILDING SOCIETY.

Mr. Russell moved for leave to sell certain property. The High Sheriff had refused to sanction the sale of the property at the price offered.

The matter was ordered to stand over for report by the High Sheriff.

Ex parte DU PLESSIS.

Mr. Roux moved for an order authorising the retention of certain property. The will, of which petitioner was executrix, directed that the property should be disposed of within twelve months, but petitioner represented that, in the present state of the property market, a good price could not be obtained. The Master's report was favourable.

An order was granted authorising petitioner to retain the property for a period of twelve months.

Ex parte OLEGHORN.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the amendment of a certain order of Court, fixing the price at which certain property might be sold. The price could not be obtained.

Granted.

RUTTER V. MARTIN.

Mr. Russell moved for an order attaching certain property, ad fundandum jurisdictionem, and for leave to sue by edictal citation.

Granted.

Ex parte HELLAWELL.

Mr. Close moved for an order, authorising the petitioner's release from sequestration. The estate was surrendered in June, 1904, but at the first and final meeting, no claims were filed, and no creditors appeared.

Order granted.

Ex parte SUTTON.

Mr. Close moved for leave to petitioner in his capacity as curator bonis to the lunatic Brooke, to sell certain property.

The matter was referred to the Master for report.

ALI WAL NORTH MUNICIPAL COUNCIL
V. WHITHAM.

Mr. Russell moved for leave to attach certain property to found jurisdiction, and to sue by edictal citation. Respondent was now domiciled in England.

Granted, personal service of the citation to be effected.

Ex parte BALL.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved on behalf of petitioner, as secretary, for an order authorising the winding up of the Lansdown House Estate Company. Petitioner suggested that William Arthur Currie and himself should be appointed official liquidators. The property of the company was bought for £7,000, about 3,500 £1 shares were taken up, and the debts amounted to about £500. Owing to the depression in the property market, the company could not meet its liabilities.

Order granted for the winding up of the company, Messrs. Ball and Currie being appointed liquidators, with powers under section 149 of the Act, the liquidators to find security in a total sum of £2,000.

Ex parte BOUWER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for leave to raise money on mortgage. Minors were interested in the property. The Master reported favourably.

Order granted in terms of Master's report.

BASSON V. BECK.

Mr. Gardiner moved, on behalf of the defendant, for leave to defend in forma pauperis.

Referred for report, Mr. Gardiner accepting the reference.

Ex parte WILKINSON.

Mr. Close moved for an order revoking the appointment of Thomas Wilkinson, as curator of petitioner's estate. Counsel said he believed that the respondent was petitioner's husband.

Order granted as prayed.

BROUGHTON V. BROUGHTON.

Mr. Upington moved on behalf of the petitioner for leave to sue her husband, Stanley Edward Broughton, for divorce, on the ground of desertion. Petitioner did not know the present whereabouts of her husband, who had left her in 1904 with the intention of proceeding to Mafeking.

Leave to sue granted, rule to be returnable on the 31st March, personal service to be effected, if possible; failing which, one publication in the "Government Gazette" and the "Mafeking Mail."

Ex parte BOJE.

Mr. Du Toit moved for an order authorising the amendment of certain transfer, ante-nuptial contract, and mortgage bond, and for alteration of the entries in the debt registry. The petitioner's name was erroneously inscribed on the various documents as Maximilian Boje, and should be Max Christian Boje.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte SIMMON.

Mr. Gutsche moved for an order authorising the registration of certain property in the names of petitioner and her sister, bought by them from the estate of their deceased parents.

Order granted as prayed.

HOULDER BROS. V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. 1905. (Feb. 2nd.

Amendment of plea—Commission—Postponement of trial—Demurrage.

The defendants having filed a plea in an action for demurrage, and having subsequently made certain discoveries relevant to the issue, now applied for:—(1) Leave to amend their plea by striking out certain admissions; (2) The appointment of a commission to take evidence in London; (3) Postponement of the trial.

The Court granted the first and the third of these applications, but refused the second until the amended plea should have been filed and the plaintiffs have had an opportunity of excepting thereto.

This was an application on behalf of the defendants in the above action for leave to amend their plea for the appointment of a Commissioner to take evidence in London, and for the postponement of the trial. The matter arose out of a claim instituted by the plaintiffs for demurrage against the Government under a certain contract in connection with the supply of coal.

The affidavit of Mr. Reid, of Messrs. Reid and Nephew (applicants' attorneys), stated that the pleadings were closed on the 14th May, 1904, and that since then certain facts had come to the knowledge of the applicants through investigations which had been made into the case by the Agent-General in London, and which had rendered it necessary for the defendants to amend their plea. He would suggest that a Commissioner should be appointed to take such evidence in London as either party might call. The trial has been set down for the 14th. February, but it would be impossible for the defendants to go to trial on that date.

The answering affidavit of Mr. W. G. Fairbridge, of Messrs. Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton (plaintiffs' attorneys), stated that he believed that the reason why the application was made was simply because, on further consideration, the defendant was of opinion that he might be able to set up a different plea than that set upon the record, his contention now being that the plaintiffs were entitled only to claim such demurrage as they paid to other persons. Deponent urged that the application should not be allowed.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. H. Jones) for applicants. Sir Henry Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Struben) for respondents.

Mr. Schreiner said the applicants desired to amend paragraph 7 of their plea in certain respects, and to add new clauses after clause 7.

Sir H. Juta submitted that the amendments, if allowed, would raise a new defence, because the defendants now desired to withdraw certain admissions.

Mr. Schreiner said that on the pleadings as they stood a certain basis for the calculation of demurrage was taken from a certain letter, simply on the basis of that letter. It would appear that a certain amount per ton per day for a certain period was to be paid if they failed to discharge at a certain rate. The plaintiffs' claim was based on that, and the defence was that the plaintiffs delayed bringing in their ships. The point was this: the defendants had discovered the contracts under which the plaintiffs had been sending out this coal, and it might be put in this way: Supposing that plaintiffs had not had to pay a single penny of demurrage, were they entitled to claim any demurrage from the Government? Counsel added that he could not supply the names of the witnesses whom the defendants wished to examine in England on commission.

Sir H. Juta said that the Court never granted a Commission unless the names of the witnesses were given or the application were a joint one.

His Lordship: Oh, yes, they do.

Sir H. Juta said that it was not two months since that Court stated that unless the names of the witnesses were given, it would not grant a Commission except in the case of a joint application. His learned friend did not know the names of the witnesses whom they would have examined; he said that they did not know the people. He (Sir H. Juta) took it that that meant that upon certain points evidence would be required, but he submitted that they must have the names of the people, and that they could not go on interminably. As to the case itself, the Government made a contract with the plaintiffs under which the latter agreed to supply coal, and in which the Government agreed to pay certain demurrage. Plaintiffs alleged that it was defendants' duty to receive that coal here at a certain rate. The defendants admitted that, but now they wished to withdraw that admission, a course of action that he objected to entirely. The defendants now wished to set up this case, that although they agreed with the plaintiffs to pay them demurrage at a certain rate, yet, if under their (the plaintiffs') agreements with the persons from whom they got the ships they had to pay those people at a less rate they could not claim from the Government, except what they had to pay those people. Now, that was, he contended, a mere legal question, and he should, in the replication, certainly try to raise it, so that they could get the decision of the Court upon this legal point before they went to the great expense of hearing evidence taken on Commission in England. He asked the Court not to grant the Commission until there had been an opportunity of raising this legal question before the Court, so as to see whether it were necessary to go into the facts.

Sir H. Juta: Yes, we would take exception to those paragraphs as raising no defence. I object to this admission being withdrawn, because I submit that an admission, once made on the pleadings, cannot be withdrawn for the purpose of setting up something that is inconsistent with it. Continuing, counsel said that there was a third amendment proposed in regard to paragraph 8, that was very important. The facts, as alleged, were these: Plaintiffs sent in a claim for demurrage upon eighteen ships. They alleged that the Government paid the demurrage on ten, but would not pay demurrage on the remaining eight, in respect of which this plea was set up. They admitted that the plaintiffs had rendered to the Government an account declaring their claim for demurrage in respect of certain eight ships, that the Government had voluntarily paid to the plaintiffs certain sums, by way of demurrage in respect of the other ships, and had refused to pay a sum of £10,000 odd, or any part thereof claimed for demurrage. The defendants now wanted to say that they paid a certain sum in respect to demurrage, not in respect of any particular ships, and that that sum was quite large enough to cover everything that the plaintiffs were entitled to.

Buchanan, J.: If parties find that their pleadings are wrong, and wish to have an amendment made, it is a much more convenient practice to have the amendments made before the case comes to trial. It is true that the plaintiffs in this case object to the alteration on the ground that the plea previously filed helped their case more than the proposed one, but the Court has to see that the pleadings meet the actual facts of the case. I do not see any objection to the amendment of the plea, simply because the respondents think that the alterations are not so advantageous to them as the other pleadings were. In this case, looking at the nature of the claim, and the results of investigations made by the applicants, their pleadings certainly do not represent the defence which they intend to the actual facts to set up. I, therefore, think that the defendants are entitled to amend their plea, but they must pay all expenses caused by such amendment. But then there are two other questions before the Court. One is that the defendants wish to have a commission to examine certain witnesses in England, whose evidence, counsel states, is material to the issues raised, and without which evidence they could not safely go to trial. The respondents object to the commission because they say that the pleadings, as amended, can be excepted to, and, after the legal questions which may be raised by the exception, have been decided, it may be unnecessary to have a commission. I think there is great force in that, and that it would be advisable to have the exception determined before a commission issues. The respondents will be allowed fourteen days, within which, if they are so advised, to except to the amended pleadings. The further hearing of the application for a commission will be postponed until after the decision on the exception has been given. Of course, the trial will have to be postponed. Other costs of this application will be costs in the cause.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D).]

ELIASON V. ELIASON. { 1903.
Feb. 3rd.

This was an action for restitution of conjugal rights, brought by Louisa Jacoba Eliason against her husband, Auguste Emanuel Eliason, on the ground of his malicious desertion.

Mr. Roux was for the plaintiff; defendant was in default. The defendant had been sued by edictal citation.

The evidence of Wm. Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the Marriage Registers, showed that the marriage took place in Cape Town on the 19th June, 1894.

The plaintiff said that after they had lived about a year and ten months in Cape Town the defendant sent her for a holiday to her father at Simon's Town. He afterwards wrote and told her not to hurry to come back, as he was going on along all right. When she came back to Cape Town in 1896 she found that the defendant had gone. She was unable to trace his whereabouts, and since his departure had received no contribution from him. There was one child of the marriage.

Decree of restitution granted, with costs, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 30th April, failing which, rule to issue calling on the defendant to show cause on the 14th May why a decree of divorce should not be granted, with costs, the plaintiff to be declared entitled to custody of the child, and order to be served in the same manner as directed in regard to citation.

Postea (May 15): The rule was made absolute.

DE JONGH V. DE JONGH.

This was an action for restitution of conjugal rights, brought by Elizabeth de Jongh against her husband, Wm. John de Jongh, on the ground of his malicious desertion. Mr. Close was for the plaintiff; the defendant was in default.

Wm. Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the Marriage Register, gave evidence as to the entry of the marriage.

The plaintiff said she was married to the defendant in the Wesleyan Church, Cape Town, in 1902, and had previously gone through a form of marriage with the defendant before the Landdrost of Griqua Town during the Boer occupation. Witness and her husband lived for some time at Observatory-road during 1902. In November of that year he said that he was in some trouble, and was going to Canada. Their life together had not been happy, owing to the defendant's drinking and gambling habits. For six months prior to his departure defendant had not supported her. In February, 1903, witness received three letters from the defendant, couched in affectionate terms, and promising to send her money. She had received no money from him. A week later she received another letter from him, saying that he was sending £20 by the next mail, and that unless she joined him he would have nothing more to do with her. Witness had received no further communication from him. For the purpose of these proceedings she had communicated with the address given in the letters, but had not been able to trace the defendant. There was one child of the marriage.

Decree of restitution granted, with costs, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 30th April, failing which, rule to issue calling on the defendant to show cause on the 14th

May why a decree of divorce should not be granted, with costs, with custody to the plaintiff of the child, and maintenance at the rate of £2 per month until the child attains the age of sixteen years, order to be served in the same manner as directed in regard to citation, in addition to which, copy to be sent by registered letter to the defendant, care of McKenzie, Mann and Co., Toronto, Canada.

Postea (May 15): The rule was made absolute.

POLDEN V. POLDEN.

This was an action brought by Charles Polden, a former sergeant in the York and Lancaster Regiment, against his wife for divorce, on the ground of her adultery with one Richard George, of Salt River.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the plaintiff; defendant was in default.

Charles Polden (the plaintiff) said he was formerly a sergeant in the York and Lancaster Regiment. In July, 1892, he was married to the defendant at the Castle, Jamestown, St. Helena, before the Civil Registrar. He left his regiment about a week afterwards, and went to Maritzburg, and stayed until 1894. His wife remained at St. Helena until 1893, when she came to Cape Town to her aunt. In 1894 witness came to Cape Town. When he saw the defendant she was pregnant, and she admitted she was in fault. She then disappeared, and witness could not trace her. In 1896 he went with his regiment to India, and stayed there until 1902, when he returned to England and immediately placed the matter in the hands of his solicitor. After delay, his solicitor obtained from St. Helena a photograph of his wife, with two children (one of his marriage) and a man whom witness did not know. A few days ago witness found his wife living with a Mr. Richard George, in Kipling-street, Salt River. She admitted that there were five children in the house, of four of whom George was the father.

By the Court: He could not take his wife with him from St. Helena to Natal because she was not on the strength of the regiment. The arrangement was that as his regiment were moving downward she should come to Cape Town and wait his arrival. Witness paid her expenses while she was in Cape Town.

De Villiers, C.J., said that a decree of divorce would be granted as prayed, subject to the production of certificate of marriage to the satisfaction of the Registrar.

INGRAM V. INGRAM.

This was an action for restitution of conjugal rights, brought by Hannah Ingram against her husband, Johan Frederick C. Ingram, at present residing at Johannesburg, on the ground of his malicious desertion.

Mr. Rowson was for the plaintiff; defendant in default.

Hannah Ingram (the plaintiff) said she was married to the defendant at Westminster, London, on the 5th May, 1896. They first resided at different places in London; they came out to this colony in 1902 with the intention of settling here. They did not live happily together, because her husband was very untruthful towards her. He did not maintain her properly. There was one child of the marriage still surviving. Witness also asked for maintenance of the child at the rate of £4 a month. Plaintiff was now at Johannesburg, where he was employed as a waiter. Both witness and her husband were Germans.

Decree of restitution granted with costs, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 30th April, failing which, rule to issue calling on defendant to show cause on the 14th May why a decree of divorce should not be granted with costs, with custody of the child to the plaintiff, and the defendant to pay to her £2 per month for the maintenance of the child until she attains the age of seventeen years, order to be served personally on the defendant.

Postea (May 15): The rule was made absolute.

SCHRIENERT V. SCHRIENERT.

This was an action brought by Peter Ernest Schrienerf, of Cape Town, against his wife for divorce on the ground of her alleged adultery with one Alfred Schmahr, from whom damages in the sum of £1,000 were claimed.

The declaration set out that the first defendant unlawfully and maliciously deserted the plaintiff on or about the 17th October, 1904, and at divers times in 1903 and 1904 had committed adultery with the second defendant (Schmahr), and that from the 17th October last the defendants had been living together in adultery at 8, Dorpstreet, Cape Town. Plaintiff claimed, as against the first defendant, a divorce, forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage and custody of the children, and, as against the second defendant, damages, alternative relief, and costs of suit.

The second defendant, in his plea, said he had tendered to the plaintiff £50, as damages, with taxed costs to date. He repeated this tender. He specially denied that the plaintiff had suffered £1,000 damages, and prayed that, subject to the tender, the claim may be dismissed, with costs.

The plaintiff, in his replication, admitted that the tender was made, but said that it was insufficient.

Mr. Close was for the plaintiff; the first defendant had been barred from pleading; Dr. Rainsford was for the second defendant (Schmahr).

Dr. Rainsford applied for leave to amend the plea by inserting the words, "save that he denies the allegations of adultery prior to the 17th October, 1904."

The amendment was allowed.

Peter Ernest Schrienerf said he was married in community of property to the first defendant at Altona, Germany, in 1881. They lived together in Germany for 12 years. Witness then came out to South Africa to found a business and a home. About nine months later he sent for his wife and children. They lived happily together until about three or four years ago, when he became acquainted with the second defendant. They exchanged visits, the second defendant then residing with another woman, named Braundt. About three years ago he had reason to complain to Schmahr of his familiarity towards his wife, and said that their friendship must come to an end. The second defendant did not come again. Witness also spoke to his wife, and told her not to have anything more to do with the second defendant. Witness and his wife still lived together, and witness thought his wife was quite faithful. On the 17th October, 1904, his wife came home, and said she had bought something without obtaining his consent. He had told her that he wanted her to speak to him before she bought anything but necessities, owing to the bad times. She became annoyed and insulted him, and said she would leave him, and would go to another man, whom she had known for a long while, and whom she loved better than witness. His wife said, "Why can't you do as other people do; you can take somebody else to live with you." His wife went out about 9 p.m., but said she was coming back. She did not return, and witness went to look for her next morning. From a conversation that he had with Mrs. Leider, he learnt the true state of affairs, and he did not inquire further. Witness was a watchmaker. The second defendant was a brickmaker, and had landed property.

Cross-examined: Witness was not in regular employment, and had not had a regular situation since a year ago last October. He denied that he was addicted to drink; he might get drunk occasionally. He had not treated his wife cruelly.

Dr. Rainsford: You are out of employment, and you thought this would be a good chance of getting a large sum out of Schmahr?

Mr. Close objected to the question.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to Dr. Rainsford): Surely you do not expect witness to say "Yes" to that question?]

Witness did not reply.

Mr. Close asked the witness whether he had drunk to excess, and whether he was in the habit of getting drunk?

[De Villiers, C.J.: It depends what you mean by "drinking to excess." A German student will take thirty glasses of beer, I believe.]

Witness admitted that he might occasionally have taken too much.

Arthur Biedelheim, of Dorp-street, Cape Town, said he knew the parties. He had seen the first and second defendants living together at the opposite house.

Mrs. Hannah Leider said that about two years ago Mrs. Schrienert expressed to her a wish to go and live with the second defendant.

Otto Braun, a night watchman, Francis Haggerman, and Frederick Perle, articulated clerk, also gave evidence.

This closed the plaintiff's case.

Alfred Schmahr, the co-defendant, said he first became acquainted with the Schrienerts about twelve years ago. He became intimately acquainted with them about six or seven years ago; he was at that time living with Clara Braundt. Mrs. Schrienert and Clara Braundt were on intimate terms. He invited the plaintiff to a Christmas Eve gathering, when the former told him that he would not come, as he had noticed that his wife preferred his (Schmahr's) home to her own. In October last, Mrs. Schreinert saw him at a restaurant, and said that her husband had told her that he had known for a long time that there was someone else she cared for better. Her husband told her that she could go away. Witness tried to prevail upon Mrs. Schrienert to go home. She would not leave witness; he tried to get her to go home, but she would not. Witness was a painter; he was doing practically no business at present. He had property valued at £671, upon which there was a mortgage for £500. He did not like to say anything as to Schrienert's drinking habits.

Cross-examined: He denied that he had tried to induce the first defendant to come away, and live with him two years ago. Witness was a Dane. He did not know that it was a serious thing to be seen arm in arm with another person. Witness was an artist in silver leaves. He had 40,000 bricks, for which he would be glad to get £1 a thousand if he could sell them.

The first defendant, Mrs. Schrienert, said that her husband often used to drink to excess, and while they were living together he treated her badly.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: It would appear that the adultery has been committed between the first and second defendants. The plaintiff is entitled to divorce against the first defendant, and also for a declaration that she has forfeited the benefits under the marriage in community, and that the plaintiff is entitled to the custody of the children. As to the second defendant, against whom damages are claimed, this does not appear to me to be a case in which heavy damages should be awarded. The married life of the plaintiff and the first defendant was not a particularly happy one, nor does it appear that the second defendant has used any special means to draw away the wife from her loyalty to her husband. I am satisfied, from the evidence, that the married life of the plaintiff and the first defendant was an unhappy one, and I am not satisfied that the plaintiff was quite such a sober man as he wished the Court to believe. But occasional acts of insobriety would be no reason for withholding damages altogether from the plaintiff, under our present law. The second defendant now takes the singular and somewhat unusual course of throwing the whole of the blame on the first defendant. Usually one finds in such a case that there is an effort made to shield the woman. I consider that some damages should be awarded, and that, considering the position of the parties—they do not appear to be particularly well off—and considering the previous relations between the plaintiff and the first defendant, a sum of £100 would be quite sufficient to satisfy the justice of the case. Judgment will, therefore, be for a divorce as against the first defendant, plaintiff to have custody of the minor children of the marriage, and forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage, and for £100 against the second defendant, with costs of suit, to be paid by the second defendant.

CAPE TIMES, LTD. V. MCKENZIE AND CO., LTD.

Mr. Sutton moved for judgment, in terms of a consent paper, for £70, with costs. He said that an application was made by way of motion on the 15th December last, calling upon the defendant to render particulars of certain tender that he had made. Mr. Justice Hopley did not make an order, but he said that the costs of that application should abide the result of the trial.

Judgment granted in terms of the consent paper, with costs, including costs of previous motion.

Provisional sequestration—Trustee—Practice.

Where an estate has been provisionally sequestrated, it is not the practice of the Court to appoint a provisional trustee.

tee. In cases of urgency application should be made to the Master for the appointment of a curator bonis.

Mr. Upington moved as a matter of urgency for the appointment of Alfred Newton Foot (the former assignee), as provisional trustee in the estate of F. Peace and Co., carriers, Woodstock, with power to sell the principal assets, consisting of 18 horses, one cow, and one wagon, pending the appointment of a trustee at the second meeting of creditors.

Order granted as prayed.

Subsequently De Villiers, C.J., stated that he had been given to understand that the estate had only been provisionally sequestrated, and the practice had not been, under such circumstances, for the Court to appoint a provisional trustee, but for the parties to apply to the Master to appoint a curator bonis. When he made the order appointing a trustee, he understood that it was an insolvent estate in every respect. He now withdrew the order, leaving it to the applicant to apply to the Master to appoint a curator bonis.

Deed of repudiation of inheritance —Deed of donation—Registration—Consideration.

O. and his wife, by their mutual will, bequeathed certain property to their son P., which was to remain under the administration of O. The wife died, and O. adiated under the will. P. became a man of intemperate habits and a spendthrift, and O., to protect P. against himself, induced P. to execute a deed, repudiating his inheritance and relieving O. from the obligation of paying the same over, but by another instrument executed two days afterwards and termed by the parties a "deed of donation," O. made another settlement on P. in substitution for the inheritance. The so-called deed of donation was not registered.

Held, after the death of O. and of P. that, as there was full consideration for the settlement, the absence of registration did not deprive the heirs of P. of the right to recover the benefits of the settlement from the estate of O.

This was an action brought by Caroline Merle Matthews to obtain a declaration of her rights in connection with the estate of her former husband, Pieter Marincowitz Oosthuizen, now deceased. The plaintiff was Caroline Merle Matthews (born Marincowitz), married without community of property to and assisted as far as need be by Albert Lourens Matthews, of Oudtshoorn, in the district of Oudtshoorn, and sued individually and as executrix dative in the estate of her late husband, P. M. Oosthuizen.

The defendants were: (1) Charles Willoughby Herold, in his capacity as executor testamentary of the late Jacobus Daniel Johannes Oosthuizen; (2) Frederick Simon Oosthuizen, in his capacity as the executor dative of the late Pieter Marincowitz Oosthuizen; (3) Charles Willoughby Herold, in his capacity as the trustee under certain deed of donation between the said late Jacobus Daniel Johannes Oosthuizen and Pieter Marincowitz Oosthuizen; (4) Henry Burton, barrister-at-law, in his capacity as curator ad litem of Catharina Jane Oosthuizen, a minor child of the said late Pieter Marincowitz Oosthuizen; and (5) Frederick Simon Oosthuizen, in his individual capacity.

The declaration, after setting out the parties to the suit, proceeded:

3. On October 4, 1883, the said Jacobus D. J. Oosthuizen, hereinafter called the testator, and his wife Sophia Johanna Oosthuizen, who were married in community of property, executed the mutual will, copy whereof (with a translation) is hereunto annexed marked "A."

4. Under clause 2 of the said will, the testators bequeathed to their son Pieter Marincowitz Oosthuizen the farm Modderdrift, together with the sum of £2,000, payable out of their estate.

5. Under clause 2 of the said will, the testators bequeathed certain farms, sheep, and goats to their son the defendant Frederick S. Oosthuizen, on condition that he paid to their son Pieter M. Oosthuizen the sum of £4,000.

6. Under clause 6 of the said will, the testators bequeathed to their sons previously mentioned in the said will, being Ockert A. Oosthuizen, the said Frederick S. Oosthuizen, John P. Oosthuizen, and the said Pieter M. Oosthuizen, payable after the survivor's death all the moneys in the estate, exclusive of that which was specially disposed of, and all mortgage bonds.

7. On December 3, 1885, the testatrix, Sophia Johanna Oosthuizen, died without the said will having been revoked, the survivor Jacobus D. J. Oosthuizen adiated under the said will, took benefits thereunder, and confirmed it, and took out letters of administration thereunder as executor.

8. Thereafter on April 16, 1886, the said survivor passed a deed of Kinderbewys (a copy whereof marked "B" is annexed hereto) in favour of his son Pieter M. Oosthuizen, then a minor, for the sum of £2,000, and the said deed still remains uncanceled in the Debt Registry: the said Pieter M. Oosthuizen subsequently attained his majority.

9. On April 17, 1886, the said survivor filed the liquidation account in the estate, a copy whereof marked "C" is annexed hereto.

10. On March 10, 1891, before the notary, E. T. Ashley, the said Pieter M. Oosthuizen executed the deed of renunciation, copy whereof is hereunto annexed marked "D," whereunder he purported to renounce all his right, title and interest in and to any inheritance out of the joint estate of his parents, and more especially his right to the farm Modderdrift, and the sum of £6,000 bequeathed to him under the aforementioned will, to and in favour of his said father, the said Jacobus D. J. Oosthuizen, and giving his said father full and absolute power and authority to dispose of his inheritance as he (the said father) may think fit and proper.

11. On March 12, 1891, before the said notary, the said Jacobus D. J. Oosthuizen executed a deed whereunder he purported to grant as a donation to Gysbert Benedictus Reitz in trust to his son, the said Pieter M. Oosthuizen, the farm Middelwater and the said farm Modderdrift, then registered in the name of the said Jacobus D. J. Oosthuizen, and the sum of £1,500, subject to a life interest in favour of him, the said Jacobus D. J. Oosthuizen: a copy of the said deed is hereto annexed, marked "E," and the said Reitz accepted the said gift on behalf of the said Pieter M. Oosthuizen.

12. The said Pieter M. Oosthuizen received no consideration for the renunciation of the bequest of the said farm Middeldrift, and the £2,000 payable out of the testators' estate and the £4,000 payable by the said F. S. Oosthuizen save and except the donation under the deed of gift of March 12, 1891. The defendant, F. S. Oosthuizen, has paid the said sum of £4,000 into the hands of the defendant, C. W. Herold, in his capacity as executor testamentary of the estate of the testator, J. D. J. Oosthuizen.

13. The said farm Middelwater in the said donation mentioned was the property of O. A. Oosthuizen, and was mortgaged to the testator for £2,000, which was cancelled, and on the 4th April, 1891, the said O. A. Oosthuizen transferred the said farm to trustees in trust for the said P. M. Oosthuizen, in pursuance of an arrangement between himself and the testator, and in furtherance and for the purpose of carrying out the arrangement between the testator and P. M. Oosthuizen, which is embodied in the two deeds of the 10th and 12th March, to wit, the deeds of renunciation and donation which formed part and parcel of an arrangement between the testator and his said son by which the latter renounced his inheritance which would have belonged absolutely to him in order that the said inheritance or its equivalent in land and money should be again donated to him, but in such a way that it would not belong to him absolutely, the said P. M. Oosthuizen having at the said date and prior thereto become greatly addicted to intemperance and in consequence thereof become a squanderer of the moneys given him by said father for the purposes of education and otherwise. The deed of donation of the 12th March, 1901, is registered in the Deeds Registry, together with the said deed of transfer, copy whereof is hereunto annexed, marked "F," but the said deed of donation is not otherwise registered.

14. Under clause 7 of the said deed it was provided that the said Pieter M. Oosthuizen shall never at any time have the right of selling or alienating either the right to the rent or receipts of the said farms, or the interest of the said sum of £1,500, nor shall he be allowed to sell, alienate, or otherwise dispose of his right to the said farms or the said sum during his lifetime except by will or by ante-nuptial contract, it being clearly understood that such disposition by will or ante-nuptial contract shall have the effect only after his death.

15. On March 7, 1892, before the notary, G. E. Boulton, the said Pieter M. Oosthuizen entered into the ante-nuptial contract, copy whereof is hereunto annexed marked "G," with the plaintiff, then Caroline Merle Marincowitz; and the said Pieter M. Oosthuizen and the plaintiff were married on March 15, 1892, and the said contract was duly registered according to law.

16. Under clause 5 of the said contract, and subject to the conditions therein mentioned, the said Pieter M. Oosthuizen settled upon the said Frederick S. Oosthuizen for and on behalf of the plaintiff the sum of £2,000, and it was provided under section (d) of the said clause that at the death of the plaintiff the said sum of £2,000 should go to and become the property of any child or children issue of the said marriage between Pieter M. Oosthuizen and the plaintiff, but should there be no children of the marriage, then at the death of the plaintiff (provided she survive the said Pieter M. Oosthuizen), the said sum of £2,000 should be equally divided between the brothers and sisters of the said Pieter M. Oosthuizen; and it was further provided, under section (c) of the said clause, that at the death of the said Pieter M. Oosthuizen the plaintiff should be entitled to the interest accruing on the said £2,000 as long as she shall live, but that under circumstances (which did not happen), the said gift bequest should be null and void; the said P. M. Oosthuizen did not hand over the £2,000 to the said F. S. Oosthuizen, and nothing was actually done with regard to any sum of £2,000 under the said antenuptial contract.

17. On December 30, 1893, the said G. B. Reitz died, and thereafter the defendant Herold was appointed in his place as trustee under the aforesaid deed, by notarial deed, executed by J. D. J. Oosthuizen, dated 30th July, 1895.

18. On October 18, 1894, the said Pieter M. Oosthuizen executed his last will and testament, a copy whereof is annexed hereto marked "H."

19. On March 18, 1895, the said Pieter M. Oosthuizen executed a notarial bond for £3,000 in favour of the said Frederick S. Oosthuizen (copy whereof is hereto annexed marked "I"), binding all his right, title, and interest under his parents' will as collateral security for the payment of the said sum of £3,000 owing by him, and in order to render the said bond effectual, ceded, transferred, and absolutely conveyed, subject to an equity of redemption, to the said Frederick S. Oosthuizen all his right, title, and interest to the inheritance coming due and payable to him (the said Pieter M. Oosthuizen) under the joint will of the said Jacobus D. J. Oosthuizen and the late Sophia Johanna Oosthuizen, the said bond has been duly registered; and the parties crave leave to refer to its terms, and also to the terms of a document signed by Jacobus D. J. Oosthuizen, the testator, on the 2nd November, 1904, copy whereof is annexed marked "K."

20. On January 24, 1896, the said Pieter M. Oosthuizen died, leaving the aforesaid will ("H") unrevoked; and leaving two minor children, named Daniel Johannes Oosthuizen and Catherina Jane Oosthuizen.

21. The plaintiff and the said Frederick S. Oosthuizen were thereafter appointed executors dative in the estate of the said Pieter M. Oosthuizen.

22. The minor child, Daniel J. Oosthuizen, died intestate and unmarried on September 28, 1896.

23. The said Pieter M. Oosthuizen left at his death no assets, save such as he may be entitled to, either under the aforesaid deed ("E"), or under the will of his parents: save that the farm Middelwater is registered in his favour according to transfer deed, but the said farm Modderdrift is still registered in the name of the said Jacobus D. J. Oosthuizen.

24. The bond of £3,000 has not been in whole or in part paid or discharged, and the said sum of £3,000 is owing by the estate of the said Pieter M. Oosthuizen to the said Frederick S. Oosthuizen for advances made from time to time by the said F. S. Oosthuizen to the said P. M. Oosthuizen.

25. On June 9, 1897, the plaintiff was married to Albert Lourens Matthews, without community of property.

26. On September 3, 1901, the said Jacobus D. J. Oosthuizen, the testator (who had remarried) executed the will, copy whereof is annexed hereto marked "L," and on June 11, 1903, he died, leaving the said will unrevoked. By the said will the testator does not purport to deal with the immovable property referred to in the deed of donation of the 12th March, 1891, nor in terms with the £1,500 therein mentioned.

27. The said Herold has taken out letters of administration as sole executor under the said will, the said Frederick S. Oosthuizen not having taken up his appointment.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims: (a) That she is entitled to sum of £2,000, which was originally settled upon her by antenuptial contract, in accordance with the conditions set forth in the said contract, absolutely as her own free and separate property and free from the trusteeship of the said Frederick S. Oosthuizen or anyone else, the same having been given to her absolutely under the will of her late husband (Pieter Marincowitz Oosthuizen). (b) That in accordance with the terms of the said will, she is further entitled to an annual payment of £100 out of the estate of her late husband, she having contracted a second marriage. (c) That she be declared entitled to one-fourth part or share of the remainder of the estate of her said late husband, left after payment of special bequests; she claiming the said fourth as mother and heir ab intestato of the deceased minor child of her husband and herself, namely, the late Daniel Johannes Oosthuizen. (d) A declaration that the deed of gift of the 12th March, 1891, is legal and valid; or in the alternative, in case this Honourable Court should find that the said gift is not legal and valid, or is not legal and valid beyond the sum of £500. (e) A declaration that the renunciation of 10th March, 1891, was not valid or binding and that the estate of the late P. M. Oosthuizen is entitled to the farm Modderdrift and the two sums of £2,000 and £4,000 bequeathed to him in terms of the said will of his parents. (f) A declaration: That the bond in favour of F. S. Oosthuizen creates no preferential rights over the property included in the deed of donation. (g) Alternative relief. (h) Costs of suit.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Pyemont) for the plaintiff. Mr. Close for the first defendant. Mr. Russell for the second. Mr. McGregor for the third. Mr. Burton for the fourth. Mr. M. de Villiers (with him Mr. Sutton) for the fifth.

Mr. Russell submitted to the judgment of the Court.

Sir H. Juta explained the principal facts of the case. In regard to the pleas of the defendants, he said that the main contention was that the deed of donation was invalid except as to £500. His learned friend (Mr. Burton) contended that Mrs. Matthews was not entitled to the £2,000 individually, but must come in according to the ante-nuptial contract. Mr. Frederick Oosthuizen claimed that his bond of £3,000 was preferent upon the inheritance which Pieter got from his parents.

Edward Thomas Ashley, notary public, said that in 1891 he was in young Mr. Reitz's office in Cape Town, and in the absence of Mr. Reitz he took charge. He knew Pieter Oosthuizen. Pieter was intemperate in his habits, and squandered his money. Witness remembered Pieter and his father calling at his office in March, 1891, when the deed of renunciation was drawn up. Pieter said he knew what the document meant. A deed of gift was being drawn up at the same time. One document would not have been executed if the other had not been executed.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: The only reason why both documents were not drawn together, he thought, was that they were very busy at the office. Perhaps one of the documents was not quite ready at the time. Pieter knew that he was to get the donation at the time he signed the repudiation.

Mary Jane Oosthuizen, widow of the late Jacobus Oosthuizen, said that she was the second wife of Mr. Oosthuizen and was married in 1885. They came to live in the Gardens, Cape Town. Pieter was educated at the South African College; he was to have been sent to study for medicine in Europe, but he gave way to drink. He was very violent at times, and was a squanderer. Pieter was sent to farm at Middelwater. Witness was acquainted with the deed of gift made by her husband.

On a point raised by Mr. Close, it was agreed that the evidence should be taken down subject to elimination in case it were decided to be inadmissible.

Witness (continuing) said that her husband told her that he had conferred the gift on his son to save him from getting rid of all his property. Her husband mentioned the deed of renunciation. He said the son had given up the whole of his inheritance to him in order to save him (the son) from squandering the money.

By Mr. Close: The son was wanting money, and this was the reason why they took these safeguards.

This concluded the evidence, and counsel were then heard in argument.

Sir H. Juta said that the first point was whether the deed of donation should stand over. He submitted that the fact was clear that everything was done in order to save this young man from himself. The evidence was that the deed of donation was made in consideration of the deed of renunciation. The crisp point might be raised whether want of registration was any defence where the donee sued the donor. If the deed of donation stood, the position would be that one farm already stood in plaintiff's name, and the other would have to be transferred to her.

Mr. Close contended on behalf of the first defendant that the deed of renunciation was valid, and that the deed of donation was not valid, owing to non-registration, to the extent of more than £500. The mere acceptance of the donation by the donee did not make the deed of donation valid; it required registration before the deed became valid.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Isn't there a contract—a contract binding on both parties? Would either document have been executed if the other had not been?]

Mr. Close said that if the object of the parties had been as contended, the contemplated result could have been easily arrived at in a number of other ways.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What could it possibly mean but a mutual consideration?]

Mr. Close said the two documents were quite distinct.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The two deeds stand or fall together.]

Mr. Close quoted a number of authorities in support of his contention that there must be registration to make such a document a valid transaction.

Sir H. Juta said he might shorten the case by intimating that if the Court upheld the deed of donation his client would be quite prepared to withdraw the first claim providing that the matter of the two thousand pounds should be settled in terms of the ante-nuptial contract; and they were further prepared to allow Mr. Frederick Oosthuizen preference for the whole of his debt of £3,186.

Mr. Close said he would submit to the order of the Court in regard to this.

Mr. McGregor said that a difficulty in his mind was whether the trustee could pass by the persons benefited by the donation in order to make a preference in the case of Frederick Oosthuizen.

Mr. Burton said that his case was met by the offer of Sir H. Juta.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (February 6th):

De Villiers, C.J.: The only question of any importance which the Court has to decide in the present case is whether or not the deed of donation, the so-called deed of donation, was a valid instrument. If it were a valid instrument there would be no difficulty in the decision of all the further questions that have been raised. I understand that the plaintiff withdraws her claim for £2,000 under the ante-nuptial contract. Therefore, it is unnecessary for me to say anything about the other matters, except the simple questions as to the deed of donation.

Sir H. Juta: What the plaintiff withdraws is that she is entitled absolutely to the claim of £2,000.

De Villiers, C.J.: So I understand. The deed of donation was executed under the following circumstances: Jacobus Oosthuizen and his wife, who seem to have been possessed of considerable property, made a mutual will, under which Pieter Marincowitz (the son) acquired very important rights, to take effect on the death of the surviving testator. The testatrix died, and the son Pieter Marincowitz turned out to be a spendthrift and a drunkard, and the father (the survivor), to protect the son Pieter against himself, entered into negotiation with him, with the result that the son repudiated the inheritance, the whole of which was in the father's hands, and the father on his side effected a deed of donation by which this property going to the son would be bound in such a manner that it would be impossible for him to squander it. It is quite clear that the negotiations for the execution of the two documents were entered into at the same time. The deed of repudiation was executed on the 10th March; the deed of donation was executed two days afterwards. But, in my opinion, even if there had been no oral evidence in the case, it would have been a clear case, in which the two documents should stand or fall together. If one of the documents falls, the other must fall also, because, although the second donation is called a "deed of donation," it was intended to substitute one mode of settlement for another. There was ample consideration given for this deed; the father was released by the deed of repudiation from all the liability which he had incurred to his son under the will which he and his wife had executed, and under which, after his wife's death, he had adiated. It is called a deed of donation, but I look upon it as a settlement executed with full consideration given to the father. The Court has repeatedly said that it will look at the real substance of a transaction, and not at what the parties called it. Even if it were a deed, accepted as a deed of donation, it would certainly fall under the class of donations which are called remuneratory, in regard to which it has been held by Voet and others that no registration is required. This was a document given for valuable consideration, and no registration was required as against the estate of the father, who is now deceased. For the reasons I have stated, I am of opinion that the prayer of the plaintiff that this deed of donation should be declared to be a valid instrument should be acceded to. That seems to be the real question between the parties.

After hearing counsel in regard to other points in the case, and more particularly in relation to the claims in reconvention, De Villiers, C.J.: I could not have held that the claim of F. S. Oosthuizen for a preference against the estate of Pieter by reason of his bond could be maintained, but that question does not now arise, as I understand it has been agreed between the parties that a sum of £3,186 shall be paid in respect to that claim. Judgment will be for the plaintiff in terms of prayers (b), (c), and (d) of the declaration, plaintiff agreeing to the sum of £3,186 being paid to Frederick Simon Oosthuizen in his individual capacity. There will be no order upon the different claims in reconvention. As to costs, one quarter will be paid by the executors of the estate Jacobus Daniel Johannes Oosthuizen, and the remaining three-quarters by the executors of Pieter Marincowitz Oosthuizen.

Sir H. Juta asked their lordships if the order included both costs of action and costs of special case.

De Villiers, C.J.: All costs.

On the application of Mr. McGregor,

De Villiers, C.J., said that the Court would also authorise C. W. Herold as the trustee under the deed of donation to hand over all assets of Pieter Marincowitz Oosthuizen to the executors of the estate.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

GENERAL MOTION.

RHODES V. RHODES AND f 1905.
BOWEN. f Feb. 3rd.

Mr. P. Jones applied to have this matter set down for the 21st inst., in order that some date in March would be fixed for trial, as the second defendant, who was being sued for damages, as co-defendant in the action for divorce, was coming from Australia to defend the case.

Application granted.

TRIAL CAUSE.

BRINK V. AVENANT,	{	1905.
		Feb. 3rd.
		" 6th.
		" 7th.
		Apr. 26th.
		May 1st.

Trespass—Damages—Beacons—Prescription.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was a farmer, of Taarbosch Kraal, in the division of Sutherland, and the defendant belonged to Putterskraal, in the same division. From time to time in recent years, and more especially about February, 1903, and thereafter, the defendant wrongfully trespassed by means of his servants upon plaintiff's farm, with his sheep and cattle, which he grazed thereon, and refused to desist when called up to do so. The defendant asserted that the bounary line between his and the plaintiff's farm was the straight line from the point "Zwakwater" to point "C," and claimed the whole of the area "Zwakwater, C, and B" as his own property. Plaintiff claimed a declaration of rights as to the boundary line, that the true line was a straight line between the point "Zwakwater" and "B," of the plan, and claimed £500 damages.

The amended plea set out that the true boundary line was a straight line from Zwakwater to the point "G," and that the beacon at "G" was a true and correct beacon in that direction. The defendant asserted there was in existence before 1865, and still in existence near the line "Zwakwater, G," a beacon known as the Bosch Beacon, which was in 1865, and thereafter admittedly the true and correct beacon for the purposes of the Land Beacons Act, of 1865, and in 1880, in the sub-division of Korenplaat, the beacon "G" was erected and adopted by the surveyor instead of the Bosch beacon. Thereafter beacon "G" had been continuously claimed by the defendant, and his predecessors, and until about three years ago was recognised by the plaintiff and his predecessors for more than thirty years as the correct beacon. In reconvention, the defendant claimed a declaration of rights and £300 damages for trespass.

The replication was general.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Van Zyl), was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner), was for the defendant.

Isaac Merring, Government land surveyor, stated that in November, 1900, he was requested by the plaintiff to re-survey the farm Taaibosch Kraal. Before proceeding there, he had a paper tracing of the Government's ground, surrounding the farm on the north, east, and west. When he went on the ground the plaintiff and his brother pointed out the beacons at Taaibosch Kraal, which coincided with a Government survey in 1886. At the point "B" on the plan he found an old beacon on the point of a range of hills. He took that as the south-east corner of Taaibosch Kraal. There were no mason beacons on the surrounding farms—they were all packed stones. The Boerman's Hock beacon was also on the edge of a hill. He could not get his survey to fit in with the old diagram, which he now regarded as unreliable. Taaibosch Kraal was surveyed for sub-division in 1876, and the surveyor then took the beacon marked "B." In August, 1903, he was in the district when a beacon marked "G" was pointed out to him on the edge of the river bed, and he concluded that it was newly piled up in a heap. The angles of the original diagram did not correspond with the beacons.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Witness did not go to see if there was beacon "C," which was claimed for the plaintiff. When he did his survey he did not know there was a dispute on between the parties. He did not trace the remains of any old beacons, which had been knocked down. The ground in dispute was about 250 morgen.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: It was a very hilly district, and it was possible he could not see a conspicuous beacon. Witness made an independent investigation without reference to a previous survey.

Stephanus Brink (plaintiff), owner of the farm Taaibosch Kraal, stated the defendant was his brother-in-law, and owned an adjoining farm. Witness was born on the farm where he had lived all the time. His father and his uncle previously owned the farm. About five years ago he bought the farm from his mother. After his father's death, the children looked after the farm while the mother was still alive. He had known the beacon on the river side since he had knowledge. There was no other beacon he knew of in that neighbourhood. The defendant had lived at Putterskraal, he believed, from 1889 or 1890. Witness's father had trouble with the defendant about the boundary, and he held a commission because the defendant trespassed on the line. The trespass on that occasion amounted to £7 or £8, through the defendant's sheep coming across the line. There was no further trouble with defendant during his mother's time. The defendant paid the damage claimed, although he did not attend the commission. In February, 1903, the defendant allowed his cattle to again cross the line, and refused to pay the damage. Witness knew the place where the defendant claimed that Mr. Greathead put up a beacon by a river course. Witness first saw the beacon ten years ago. Avenant put it up, and took it away on witness sending him notice. Last year it was put up again. Witness had sustained considerable damage by the trespasses.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Witness pointed out the beacon to Mr. Meiring. The defendant was dissatisfied with the land according to his diagram. About a year before his father's death the commission was held. The defendant was quite content with £7 or £8, although he did not attend the commission. There was another commission during his mother's time, and the defendant paid witness £4 or £5. If witness cut off this piece of ground, the dam constructed by the defendant would be of very little use. There was a little dam before the commission, and after defendant paid the money, he constructed a larger dam. If there had been a beacon in the hills, he must have seen it. The defendant knocked the river beacon down after witness gave him notice to remove it. The defendant often asked permission of witness to allow him to graze his cattle. The defendant was always teasing him to have his ground surveyed, and at the same time paid out damages when asked.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: It was possible for the defendant to use the dam and keep to his own side of the line.

Jacobus Victor, owner of an adjoining farm, said he had known the farms for about thirty or forty years. From 1876, he had known Beacon "B." In February, 1903, as field-cornet, he was called in by the plaintiff to adjudicate in a complaint of trespass against the defendant. It was only in 1903, after Mr. Greef's survey, that he noticed the beacon by the river.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Witness was away for fourteen years, and only returned about three years ago. He was in the district, but not on the farm. He had never been asked to go and look for an old beacon in the bushes. Witness assessed damages against the defendant on the commission. Mr. Greathead might have put up a beacon at the spot without witness seeing it.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: He only recognised Beacon "B." In February, 1903, he went to look at the spot where the trespass took place.

Willem Francois du Toit, a farmer, of the same district, said he had been living on his farm since 1883. He hired the piece of land in question from the trustee in the insolvent estate of Botma. He had known the beacon on the mountain to have been there in 1872.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: When Mr. Greathead made his survey, he did not put up a beacon by the bed of the river, but he made a mark by putting two stones there.

Phillipus Conradie said he had known the two farms for thirty-five years. In the late seventies he had known the Beacon "B." About '78 or '79 he was called in to settle a dispute between Botma and Brinks, and he drew up the settlement in writing. In 1882 he was called in again, and Botma said there was no dispute about the beacons; it was a difference over the line, and witness defined the boundary. There was a road close to the point "G," and although witness often rode along it, he never noticed a beacon.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He remembered the survey in 1876; he was living about five hours' drive off. When he was called in by Brinks, it was not to settle a complaint that the line beacons were knocked down by the owners of Korenplaats. The veld was in dispute.

Stephanus Brink (recalled) stated that most of the papers of his father had been lost. He had not been able to find the document referred to. In consequence of what Conradie told him, he searched for the document.

Marthinus Botma said he had known the farms in question since his childhood. His father formerly owned Putterskraal. The beacon on the mountain was the beacon he recognised as that of Taaibosch Kraal and Korenplaats. He never saw a beacon up in the bush.

Cross-examined: He had heard people speaking of a beacon at the bush before Korenplaats was sub-divided, but not before Donsel was surveyed.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: He could not say to whom the ground at beacon "B" was granted to first of all. During the time he lived at Korenplaats he did not notice any beacon at the bush. No bush was ever shown to him. He knew of no beacon in that neighbourhood except beacon "B."

Cornelius Jacobus Brink, brother of the plaintiff, stated that his father was one of the owners of Taaibosch Kraal. Witness, who was 47 years of age, had lived on the farm all his life, and he was well acquainted with all the beacons on the farm. On the south-east side, the beacon dividing Taaibosch Kraal and Korenplaats stood on the point of Eenigsteplek. He had known that beacon since he was ten years of age, and never knew of any other beacon in that neighbourhood.

By Maasdorp, J.: The beacon was in the same condition at present as it was when he knew it first.

When he took down sheep to graze, the line he observed was from Zwakwater to Eenigsteplek. He had seen the beacon in the river bed which had been put up by Mr. Greeff. Formerly there was no beacon on the river side. The dam put up by Avenant was about two thousand yards from the line observed by witness.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He was there when Dousel surveyed. Dousel did not build up the beacon at Eenigsteplek. He never heard that there was a claim for a beacon in the bush. Dousel surveyed for a subdivision of Taaibosch Kraal, and put line beacons between Zwakwater and Eenigsteplek. He was not aware that the owners of Korenplaats broke down the line beacons from Zwakwater. The two thousand yards between Avenant's dam and the line at Taaibosch Kraal belonged to Korenplaats.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: Witness was often on the south-east side looking for horses and cattle.

Philip Johannes du Plessis, one of the defendants in the case, and owner of Boesman's Hoek, said he was on the farm before Pritchard's survey. All the time he had been in occupation he recognised the beacons marked "E," "J," and "G" on the diagram before the place was surveyed. He had a row with Brink, sen., over grazing ground; the Field-cornet was called in, and beacon "B" was decided upon. He was quite satisfied with that beacon.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He had no knowledge of that beacon until the Field-cornet pointed it out, and it was after the row that he saw it. The late Field-cornet of the ward told him of a beacon in the bush. He never went to see if there was a beacon at the bush.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: Witness only recognised beacon "B."

By Maasdorp, J.: Until "B" was pointed out he considered "G" as the beacon regulating his boundary.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Wilson Greathead, surveyor, said he had been engaged by Mr. De Smit to survey this land in 1880. Witness only surveyed Korenplaats for a sub-division. Lately he had been on the ground to refresh his memory, and paid attention to beacon "G" and the bush beacon. In 1880 two beacons were pointed out to him, the bush beacon and beacon "B." It was Stephanus Boteman who pointed out the beacons. "B" was pointed out to him as a mark taken by Dousel. Witness could not accept Dousel's beacons as being at all consistent with the farm. He had a clear recollection of seeing the bush beacon, and when he revisited the farm he saw a beacon in the same spot. It was clearly manifest that the beacon was of long standing. The beacon "B" could not be seen from the beacon in the bush. He went according to the diagram and not according to the facts on the ground. He was certain he put a beacon at "G," and when he visited the spot recently he found that it had been made much larger. He did not accept Dousel's beacons, as they seemed to swing the farm round some eight or nine hundred yards. Witness erected beacons according to his diagram, and sub-divided accordingly. The bush beacon was not visible from the Eenigsteplek, and a person going past very often might not notice it.

[Maasdorp, J.: The witness says he saw a beacon there at a certain time, and any number of witnesses may say they never saw it before that.]

Mr. Schreiner said he had no objection whatever, if his lordship ordered a competent person to go to the spot to see if it was a new piece of work.

Witness said he had no doubt the bush beacon was of many years standing.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Beacon "B" was in a very conspicuous point, and witness had used it as his signalling station. After so many years, he would have had some difficulty in finding the spot in the kloof without assistance, although he thought he would ultimately manage it.

By Maasdorp, J.: Surveyors did not always take a conspicuous spot for beacons. The Boesman's Hoek beacon and the Beacon "B" were more consistent with the diagram from a Taaibosch Kraal point of view.

Witness said that now he would not survey a farm on a diagram as he did then. Dousel also surveyed Korenplaats, and placed beacons which witness did not accept. Dousel's beacons would agree with the beacon on a conspicuous part of the mountain, but they did not agree with the beacon at Zwakwater. At the point "G," witness put up an ordinary pile of stones. He hadn't been there until a fortnight ago, when he heard that Greeff had made a substantial beacon of it.

Re-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He had not seen a single mason in the district. Witness understood that Dousel had made a survey of Korenplaats.

Hert Greeff, Government land surveyor, stated he was called in by the defendant to make a plan when the dispute arose. He surveyed the triangle in dispute, and found it to be of the extent of 250 morgen. Zwakwater and Greathead's beacons were pointed out to him by the defendant and Mr. Walters. The latter was a beacon two feet high, which witness built much higher up. Witness did not go up to the beacon in the bush, but sent a person up to put a flag at the spot. Avenant was claiming Greathead's beacon. It was quite a mistake that he put a beacon beside the stream for the first time.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He thought the bush beacon was too far in Taaibosch Kraal ground, so he did not go there. He did not make a whole survey of the two farms, Korenplaats and Taaibosch Kraal. He did not test the correctness of Greathead's survey of Korenplaats.

Paul Lodewick Avenant (the defendant) said that he was married to Brink's sister. He first hired his property for two years from Jack Fuller; then he bought it about 12 or 13 years ago. His land, he was told, extended to the bosch beacon; this beacon did not stand on the mountain, it stood on a little kloof. He denied that he had paid money to Stephanus Brink for trespass by his cattle. He had had damages given against him by the last Commission, about two years ago. From the time he purchased his land he had always claimed up to the beacon of Greathead, and had grazed up to that point. He had made a large dam in that part. He found beacons about the site of the dam. He gave notice to Mr. Van der Poel, the Field-cornet, that Mr. Meiring was surveying on his ground. A Commission was held on his ground. There was a piece of ground that Mr. Greathead did not include in his survey. Witness and three others joined in using that ground for grazing in front of their own lots. He did not claim the ground as his own.

Cross-examined: He did not remember any Commissions held in the district in regard to the boundary. Mr. W. Johannes Vieta, the Field-cornet, came to point out his beacons, as he did not know where the beacons went. Witness asked the Field-cornet to come. He did not remember a claim having been made upon him for £4 12s. damages for trespass. He admitted that Mr. Vieta held a commission in consequence of Mr. Brink saying that his cattle had trespassed on his land. Mr. Vieta told him that he need not pay the money, as the land was his own property.

John O. Walter, agent, of Laingsburg, said that he acted for the defendant in connection with this case. Witness went to the defendant's farm with Mr. Greeff the surveyor; he was present when Greeff had the beacons pointed out to him. Avenant's son went and put flags on the beacons. Witness was at Beacon "G" when he saw the flag put on the bosch beacon. They pointed to within six inches of Greathead's beacon. Mr. Greeff was so satisfied with the angle that he said that he did not think it necessary to go to the bosch beacon. They had some view of coming to a settlement over the case, and there was a meeting between the parties. Witnesses came down to Cape Town in August, and the defendant sent by telegraph for Mr. Greathead. They still thought some settlement would be arrived at.

The case was, however, postponed. In January witness saw an old beacon in the centre of two big thorn bushes. Greeff was there that day for his survey. Mr. Greathead had been to the beacon during the past few weeks. The beacon was still there a fortnight ago.

Wm. Angus Hofmeyr, attorney, of the firm of Tredgold, McIntyre and Bisset (the defendant's attorneys); Marthinus Ackermann (aged 75), a farmer, of Modderfontein, district of Sunderland; John Botman, of Van Wyk's Plavey, district of Sunderland, also gave evidence. He stated in cross-examination that in the old days when his grandfather owned both farms, there was no dispute as to beacons.

Johannes Boteman said he was brother of the previous witness and fifty years of age. He was born on the farm Korenplaats, and lived there about 25 years. He left before the Greathead survey, but he came back to the farm last December. He remembered the time when his grandfather had the farms Korenplaats and Taaibosch. The beacons between the farms were Zwakwater and Bush beacons, and those were the same in the days of his father. He knew Cornelius Brink, the father of the plaintiff, and he had always told them when they were children that they must not go over the line. The line was between Zwakwater and Bush beacons.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He had left the properties 25 years ago, but had lived on them from time to time for a few months since. He knew where Mr. Greathead had put up a beacon by the side of the river, east of Swakwater. From that place, one could see the Bush beacon.

Frederick Boteman, brother of the last two witnesses, living in the Sutherland district, stated that he was born at Korenplaats, and remained on the farm until he was twenty-three years of age. Since then he had been on the farm; he passed over it during the month of May last. During his father's time the line between Taaibosch Kraal and Korenplaats was Zwakwater-Bosch beacon. Between ten and eleven years ago he last saw the bush beacon, and it was the same as in his father's time. The Brinks did not graze over that line. He saw the beacon Dousel put up at Eenigstoplek. Before Dousel surveyed there was a small beacon on the spot. After Greathead surveyed, witness still went to the bush beacon.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Marthinus Boteman, who lived on the farm with his father, had stated that he observed the line Zwakwater-Eenigstoplek, but witness knew nothing of that. The bush beacon was near the top of the mountain, but not quite on the peak.

By His Lordship: After Mr. Greathead surveyed the farm, he did not graze any longer on the top line.

Marthinus Boteman (re-called), stated, in answer to his lordship, that he did not graze up to the bush beacon with the last witness; he did not know where it was.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

Mr. Searle said that during the adjournment he had discovered that Taaibosch Kraal had actually been sub-divided on Dousel's survey, and called a clerk from the Deeds Office to prove that transfer had been passed.

Maasdorp, J., inquired if there was any likelihood of any of the witnesses being re-called.

Mr. Searle pointed out that as the plaintiff had no notice of the bush beacon, he came prepared to fight the case on the Greathead beacon. He would leave the case in his lordship's hands, as he was not instructed to apply for a postponement.

Maasdorp, J., said the case would stand over sine die for argument.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

Cur. Adr. Fult.

Postea (May 1):

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff who is the owner of the farm Taaibosch Kraal, sues the defendant, the owner of Putter's Kraal, in an action of trespass, and for a declaration of rights. He alleges that the boundary of his farm adjoining Putter's Kraal is correctly represented in a plan annexed to the declaration, and runs from a point known as Zwakwater to a point on the extremity of a ridge known as Anys River Plaat, which points are indicated on the plan by the letters A and B respectively. He complains that the defendant trespassed across this line with his stock, and that he asserts a right to do so inasmuch as he alleges that the beacon of his farm Putter's Kraal lies to the north of the line claimed by the plaintiff. The defendant denies the correctness of the boundary line indicated by the plaintiff in his declaration, and states that the true boundary between Taaibosch Kraal and the original farm Korenplaats, of which Putter's Kraal forms a portion, runs from Zwakwater to a point known as the Bushbeacon, which is indicated on the plan by the letter C, but states that when Korenplaat was sub-divided in the year 1880, the surveyor, instead of taking the beacon C standing upon the boundary of the farm, took a point within the boundary indicated by the letter G, and framed the diagram of Putter's Kraal conformably to such beacon. The defendant, who purchased Putter's Kraal, according to the diagram only claims the land up to the line A G; and if A C be found to be the correct boundary between Taaibosch Kraal and Putter's Kraal, he will be entitled to the land up to A G. He alleges that beacon G was in existence before the year 1865, and is the admittedly true and correct beacon for the purposes of the Land Beacons Act of 1865, that for more than 30 years it has been recognised by the owners of both farms as the correct beacon, and for more than 30 years the owners of Korenplaats have used the land up to A G as of right. The defendant prays that G may be declared to be the true beacon of his farm, and claims £300 as damages suffered by him by reason of a trespass committed by the plaintiff. The plaintiff, in his replication, traverses the allegations in the defendant's plea, and claim in reconvention, and sets up a claim to the boundary line A B on the ground of prescriptive user. The Court has now to determine whether C or B represents the true beacon between Taaibosch Kraal and Korenplaats. One of the points raised by the defendant can be disposed of at once by saying that there is no proof of the existence of any of the conditions under the Land Beacon Act which would constitute the beacon C an admittedly true and correct beacon. The only issues left between the parties are whether there is evidence from which it can be inferred that either B or C is an original beacon between the two farms, or whether either of them has been established by prescription. In my opinion it has been established beyond a doubt that the beacon B was in existence in the year 1872. Willem du Toit stated in evidence that at the time he was in occupation of portion of Putter's Kraal as a lessee, and occupied the hired ground up to that beacon, which was always a large and prominent beacon. He knew of no other beacon in the neighbourhood as a boundary beacon between Taaibosch Kraal and Korenplaats. A number of witnesses were called for the plaintiff, who were positive that for many years beacon B was regarded as the true beacon, and that during that time they did not know of the existence of any other beacon which was claimed as the corner beacon on that side. The original grants of the farms having taken place in 1838, no witnesses were called on either side to give evidence with respect to original beacons pointed out at the time of the original measurement of the farms, and the first occasion after that upon which a survey took place was in 1876. In that year Surveyor Doessel was engaged to subdivide Taaibosch Kraal, and in surveying with that object he accepted B as the correct corner beacon. This was also done by Pritchard in 1885, when beacon B was indicated by him in his survey as a dividing point of the four farms Taaibosch Kraal, Korenplaats, Boesman's Hoek, and Anys River Plaat. It is curious that though Pritchard surveyed after Greathead, who had come across beacon C in 1880, that beacon did not come into Pritchard's calculations, and was not then brought up as a matter in dispute. It is certain that at both Doessel's and Pritchard's surveys there were present persons acquainted with the beacons, and yet there is no evidence that beacon C was brought up at these surveys as the true beacon. Greathead, who surveyed for the owners of Korenplaats, says that when he surveyed in 1880 two beacons were pointed out to him as being the corner beacons in the south-east direction of Taaibosch Kraal, between that and Korenplaats. Both were in existence, and he saw them both. Beacon B was pointed out to him as perhaps being the beacon. This is the first occasion on which we obtain reliable evidence of beacon C having been seen after having been lost sight of for many years. Neither of the beacons was, however, adopted by Greathead, who, accepting the diagram as his guide, erected beacon G now claimed by the defendant. It has been contended, on behalf of the defendant, that although beacon B was in existence some years before Doessel surveyed, it cannot be regarded as an original beacon, because there is evidence to show how it came into existence long after the original measurement of the farms. Evidence was adduced by the defendant to show that beacon B was created by Erasmus Botma, on a place where no beacon existed before, as a line beacon between ground occupied by him at Anys River Plat and the farms now in question. I am not satisfied upon the evidence that that was the first beacon erected on that spot. Erasmus erected line beacons from Boesmanskop to below beacon B; B stands at an angle, and not in the straight line of beacons erected by him, and I feel sure that that angle could not have been located by him unless there were some beacon to guide. There is no proof that he was aided by beacon C; on the contrary, it is quite clear that beacon C did not fall into the line taken by him. Notwithstanding the evidence adduced by the defendant, I come to the conclusion that B was in existence before the time of Erasmus Botma. The evidence with respect to beacon C is of a most unsatisfactory character. I quite believe the witnesses for the plaintiff, who say they never saw this beacon, or knew till recently that it was claimed as a corner beacon. It is quite likely that a pile of stones did exist there for a considerable time, but it was not treated as a beacon, and its very existence was unknown for a considerable time before the present dispute arose. Witnesses were called who said that somewhere on the hill side in that neighbourhood there was a beacon which was recognised as a corner beacon many years ago by the owners of Taaibosch, but none of them have been to the spot for years to identify that beacon with beacon C where it now stands. I come to the conclusion that the evidence justifies the inference that B is the original true corner beacon of the farms Taaibosch Kraal and Koornplaats. I am confirmed in that opinion by the character of the locality in which it stands. Surveyor Graaff, who was called as a witness for the defendant, said: "I did not go up to the bosch beacon because it was going into Taaibosch Kraal. I saw the conspicuous beacon B in Anys Rivers Plat. The beacon B is the most prominent point in the neighbourhood." It is unnecessary to go into the question of prescription on behalf of the plaintiff, in the view which I take of beacon B; and as to defendant, I may say he has wholly failed to establish prescription on his part. I am of opinion, on the whole, without tracing occupation over a period of 30 years for the purposes of prescription, that the proprietor of both farms for many years past, notwithstanding occasional disputes, regarded beacon B as the corner beacon between the two farms. I come to the conclusion that the line A B upon the plan annexed to the declaration is the true boundary between Taaibosch Kraal and Korenplaats. It was proved that on several occasions the defendant crossed this line with his stock, and trespassed upon the plaintiff's property, but there is no evidence that any material damage was sustained by the plaintiff in consequence. Judgment is given for the plaintiff in terms of prayer (b) of his declaration; and under prayer (c) for £5; on the claim in reconvention judgment is given for the defendant in reconvention, defendant ordered to pay costs of suit.

Order granted as prayed.

REX V. DALY AND HALLAN. (1905.
Feb. 6th.

Keeping a brothel—Permanently residing therein—Act 36 of 1902.

A prostitute, who permanently resides in a brothel, is liable to prosecution under the 22nd section of Act 36 of 1902, as being a keeper of a brothel.

A woman, who is employed as a servant in a brothel but sleeps in her own home at nights, does not permanently reside there, and cannot be convicted of keeping a brothel.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the A.R.M. of the Cape. The appellants, together with two other women, had been charged with keeping a brothel in Dunkley-street, and had been fined £25, or in the alternative three months' imprisonment with hard labour. Mr. Rowson was for the appellants; Mr. Howel Jones appeared for the Crown.

Mr. Rowson said that of the other women one was acquitted, and the other was fined £25, or three months' imprisonment. The two appellants pleaded not guilty, but were convicted and fined £25, or three months' imprisonment with hard labour. The appeal was brought on the ground that the conviction was not supported by the evidence, and that it was contrary to law. Counsel, after reading the record of evidence, submitted that not only was the conviction against the weight of evidence, but there was not, taking the stringent definition of “keeper” in the Act, a particle of evidence to support the charge. The evidence of Hallan was that she was employed at the house in a menial capacity as a domestic servant. There was nothing to show that she had had anything to do with the management of the house. As to Daly, counsel submitted that no proof had been adduced by the prosecution to show that this woman “resided” at the house, or that she was anything but an occasional caller, calling for an immoral purpose it might be, but still not at all involved in the management of the house. Counsel also pointed out that Chester, who was the other person convicted, paid her fine, but the other two (the present appellants) were unable to pay their fine, and had been imprisoned since the 11th January.

Mr Jones said that as regarded Daly the evidence was clear that she “permanently resided” at the house, and it was quite clear that she had been guilty of a contravention of the Act.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he had confirmed several of these cases, but there was a different element in the present case from the others, because here they had an admitted keeper (Chester), who had been convicted. Could the others who were using the place for immoral purposes be said to be additional keepers?

Mr. Jones submitted that they could. Proceeding, counsel said that he did not wish to press the case against Hallan, but he pointed out that she gave a contradictory statement, first saying that she was employed by Mrs. Wood, and afterwards that she was employed by Chester.

Mr. Rowson having been heard in reply,

De Villiers, C.J.: In this case a distinction must be made between the two appellants. As to the appellant Daly, there is the evidence of the police constable that she, Wood, and Chester resided at 6, Dunkley-street. He says that he knew Chester, Wood, and Daly, and had seen them at the house for six weeks. Moreover, other police officers had watched the premises, and on several successive nights had seen the accused Daly on the premises. There is, therefore, sufficient prima facie evidence to require Daly to rebut the proof of a “permanent residence” on the premises, but she gave no evidence whatever herself. The terms of the Act are: “That the following persons shall be deemed to be keepers of a brothel: any person who permanently resides in or occupies or manages, or acts, or assists in that management, or knowingly receives the whole or any share in the money taken in any brothel.” In the present case it appears that the accused did receive a share. But I should not lay much stress on that point, because the share she received was direct from the men, and her own share of the prostitution, and not for any share in the management of the premises. But the difficulty in her case is to get over the words: “Any person who permanently resides in a brothel.” She “permanently resided” according to the evidence, which she does not contradict. Probably, the legislature did not intend to declare that every prostitute who lives in a brothel shall be deemed to be a keeper of a brothel, but the words used are clearly to that effect, and the Court has only to construe the Act as it stands. The extraordinary result would follow that a woman who lives on her own private premises and goes to a brothel every night for the purposes of prostitution would escape prosecution and conviction, but the woman next door who lives permanently at the brothel is to be held to be keeper of the brothel. But the legislature in its wisdom has so provided and the Court has simply to follow the provisions of the Act, passed by the Legislature. The appeal, therefore, in Daly's case will not be allowed. In regard to the woman, Hallan, her position is entirely different. There is not a single witness to show that she was a prostitute. She was occupied in the menial work of opening the door to persons coming in. Her own evidence is that she went home every night, and she is certainly not mentioned by the police constable as one of the persons whom he had known for six weeks as residing on the premises. There is not, in my opinion, sufficient evidence that the accused Hallan "permanently resided" on the premises, and in her case, therefore, I am of opinion that the appeal should be allowed and the conviction quashed.

Buchanan, J.: I am of the same opinion, and I would only add that, from a number of cases that have come before me, the operation of this Act tends to degrade the unfortunate women who carry on the trade of prostitution and does no good to the public at large.

De Villiers, C.J.: I quite agree with that. It is an opinion which I have repeatedly expressed.

REX V. HOFFMAN. (1905.
(Feb. 6th.

Liquor Licensing Acts—Transfer of licence—Dissolution of partnership.

A licence to sell liquor by retail was granted to G., who was then in partnership with the appellant. The partnership was dissolved, and the appellant continued to carry on the business on his own behalf, although no transfer of the licence had been granted to him in terms of the 55th section of Act 28 of 1883.

Held, that the appellant had been properly convicted of selling liquor without a licence.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the A.R.M. of the Cape, who had convicted the appellant, under the Liquor Laws, of selling, dealing in, or disposing of certain quantities of intoxicating liquor, to wit, lager beer and gin, on the 2nd November, without a licence. The accused, who was sentenced to a fine of 10s., appealed on the ground that the evidence disclosed no such offence as was charged in the summons, and that the conviction was not according to law. Mr. Alexander was for the appellant; Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown.

The matter arose out of the transfer of the licence of Claridge's Hotel. Application was made for the transfer of the licence to accused on the 12th September, the licence was actually transferred on the 14th November, and the alleged sale to two policemen took place on the 2nd November. Hoffman was charged along with one Saachs, but the latter was acquitted, and the former convicted.

Mr. Alexander submitted that, although the appellant had not actually had the licence transferred. Counsel cited the case of Rex v. Ware (12, Juta, 4).

Mr. Howel Jones submitted that it was clear the appellant had been guilty of a technical offence.

De Villiers, C.J.: The licence is given to the individual, and the character and position of the individual are always taken into consideration by the Licensing Board before the licence is granted. In the present case, the licensee was Ginsberg, who was at the time in partnership with the appellant and another, but that partnership was dissolved. After the dissolution of the partnership, Ginsberg, the man to whom the license had been granted, ceased to have any further interest in the sale of the liquor. Clearly, therefore, it was the duty of all parties to make all the necessary arrangements for the transfer of the licence before the actual dissolution of the partnership. The matter was entirely in the hands of the partners themselves. They ought to have known that there might be some delay in the proceedings, and, therefore, there ought to have been no dissolution, no actual dissolution of the partnership until arrangements had been made for the transfer of the licence to appellant, so as to enable him to take the place of Ginsberg, to whom the licence was granted. The case of Rex v. Ware had been relied upon, but, in my opinion, that does not affect the decision of the present case. There, there was also a partnership, but the point was that the partnership was continued. As was said in the judgment, Anderson engaged Ware while the partnership was existing, and sold the liquors before it was at an end. But the important fact is that Blow was still a partner at the time the sale took place, and, therefore, the sale was taking place under the authority of the duly-licensed person, Blow. But that is not the state of things here. The sale took place under the authority previously granted to Ginsberg, but under an authority which had ceased upon the dissolution of partnership. It is no doubt a technical breach of the law, but still it was a breach, and the Magistrate seems to have had this in his mind when he inflicted a fine of 10s. The appeal will be dismissed.

Malicious desertion—Character of party deserted—Amount of maintenance.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Victoria East, under section 2 of Act 7 of 1895, in which the defendant was ordered to pay £3 a month in support of his wife and three children, by reason of his wrongful and unlawful desertion. The appeal was brought on the grounds that the evidence did not support the decision, and that the decision was contrary to law.

Mr. Close was for the appellant, and Mr. Howel Jones appeared for the Crown.

Mr. Close said the question here, now that the parties were living apart, was whether the husband deserted his wife and whether that desertion was an unlawful desertion in the sense of the Act. It was clear from the evidence that the woman was not of much character. She was the mother of an illegitimate child shortly after the marriage, and, in addition she had been fined for what she called a quarrel, and altogether her record was not a good one. In a case of that sort, counsel submitted the Magistrate should have found for the defendant. His version of the story was that his wife deserted him on two or three occasions, and it was admitted that she did go away once. The defendant had one of the children in his custody, and he was willing to keep the other two children. The summons read, “in or about or between 24th October and the 25th November,” and according to that he could not be found guilty of a continuous desertion. Under the circumstances, the woman being a waster, and disposing of her husband's property, if he left her for a time, it could not be said to be a malicious desertion. There was no evidence of the accused being possessed of any property, and in any case, if the appeal was disallowed, the amount of maintenance was excessive.

De Villiers, C.J.: If the accused were willing to take the wife and children back, I suppose this order would cease?

Mr. Jones: I take it, it is merely conditional.

De Villiers, C.J.: He is prepared, at all events, to take the other two children, and as the father, he is entitled to their custody.

Mr. Jones: Is he entitled to take the children without the wife? Possibly, if there were civil proceedings before the Court, the Court might exercise its discretion, and say if the husband was entitled to the children. Of course, if the children were given to him, and the wife raised no objection, then he could apply before the Magistrate for an abatement of the amount he has to pay. As regards the property of the defendant, there is the evidence of the headman, and he knew the defendant well.

De Villiers, C.J., in giving judgment, said: It is clear upon the evidence there has been a desertion. At the same time, I think the order should be amended to make it clear that if the defendant is prepared to give support and assistance to the wife and children, although not pecuniary support, that the payment of £3 per month is to cease. The defendant may, for instance, be willing to supply his wife and children with clothes and food, instead of paying the £3 per month. The opportunity should be given to him to do that, and the order will be amended by a proviso added to the following effect: “That the monthly payment shall cease as soon as the defendant is prepared to supply the wife and children with necessaries and support, although such support be not of a pecuniary nature.”

NORTON V. VICTORIA EAST LICENSING COURT.

Licensing Court—Objections to granting of licence—Gross irregularity.

On the hearing of an application for a retail liquor licence, one of the members raised the objection that there was a sufficient number of licensed houses in the district, and a discussion on the point thereupon arose in the presence of the applicant and his agent, neither of whom requested an adjournment for the further consideration of the application. The application for a licence was refused.

Held, that the more formal course would have been to inform the applicant of the definite objection, but that, in the absence of any evidence to shew that an adjournment would have enabled him to meet the objection, he was not entitled to have the proceedings set aside.

This matter came up for review on a refusal of the respondents to grant a retail wine and spirit licence to the applicant at Pepperskop, in the division of Victoria East. Mr. Close was for the applicant, and Mr. P. Jones was for the four members of the Licensing Court who had voted against the licence.

Mr. Close said the applicant (Charles Ebenezer Norton) in September, 1904, made application for a new licence for a retail wine and spirit business. No lawful objection was raised, in accordance with any provisions of the Act of 1883 or the Liquor Act, 1891, or any other law, and the licence was refused by the Court without reference to the plaintiff or without giving him an opportunity of replying thereto. The signatures of requisite number of voters were obtained, and there were memorials in favour of and memorials against the petition. The memorials against the petition were thrown out on a technical point, and three members voted for and four against the granting of the licence. Counsel contended that when a Licensing Court took an objection, that they were bound as a Court to give notice to the applicant, and to state what the objection was, and in support of his contention cited section 48 of Act 28 of 1883, which was to the effect that when a Licensing Court of its own accord took notice of any thing or matter which, in their opinion, was against the licence, in any such case the Court should inform the applicant, and should, on request, adjourn the application for any period of not less than four days.

Mr. Jones put in the affidavits of the four members of the Court, to the effect that when the memorials against the petition were presented certain members took notice of the statement that a new licence was unnecessary in the neighbourhood. The objection was raised in the hearing of the applicant and his agent, but neither made any request for an adjournment, under section 48 of the Act. In the opinion of one of the members the premises were in too close proximity to Government and private locations.

Mr. Close pointed out that an affidavit from the Government inspector might have persuaded one of the members, and the licence would have been granted. Supposing one member of a Licensing Court raised an objection, and the Court apparently took no notice of it, and when it came to voting, threw out the application on the objection raised how was the applicant expected to refute it? Counsel's contention was that the Court must deliberate on such objection, and they must give the applicant a chance of refuting it.

Mr. Jones cited the cases of the S.A. Breweries v. The Wynberg Licensing Court, Barnett v. The Namaqualand Licensing Court, and Hotchfield v. The Sutherland Licensing Court, to show the difference between the procedure under the Act in the case of an application for a renewal and an application for a new licence. The objections raised were founded on the memorials thrown out, and were heard in the hearing of the applicant and his agent, neither of whom made any application for an adjournment. He contended there had been no irregularity, and that the provisions of the Act had been carried out. It might happen in a case that a member might not care to state his objections.

Mr. Close having been heard in reply, De Villiers, C.J.: The Court has been asked in the present case to set aside the proceedings of the Licensing Court on the ground of gross irregularity. Now I quite agree that if there had been proof of anything in the nature of gross irregularity or illegality, the Court would have been bound to set aside the proceedings. The utmost I can find is that there has been some degree of irregularity, but certainly not gross irregularity. It would have been the more correct course for the Licensing Court to have definitely informed the applicant before they came to the vote, that some members raised the particular objection that the number of licensed premises was sufficient for the requirements of the district, but the point now is whether the fact that this was not definitely stated to the applicant or his agent by one of the Licensing Board, would justify the Court in setting aside all the proceedings, although no injustice was done. The applicant was present at the meeting of the Court and also had an agent to represent him. He heard them discussing this question, and he knew that the objection had been raised as to the sufficiency of the licensed houses in the neighbourhood. It is true that after the objection was raised to the irregularity in the form of the memorials, the applicant knew that some members of the Licensing Court raised this question. There was a discussion upon that question, and notwithstanding this discussion, neither the agent nor the applicant requested an adjournment for the purpose of enabling him to bring further evidence. The Licensing Court, therefore, in the absence of such application, might fairly conclude that the applicant had no further evidence to give. If he had such further evidence to give it would have been a most natural thing for him to have said: "Don't vote upon this question, because I am prepared to give evidence upon the point." But there was no such application for a postponement for the purpose of taking evidence. Under the circumstances, this Court should not after all the proceedings have been taken, order a fresh meeting of the Licensing Board for the purpose of considering the question; more especially in view of the fact that a new Licensing Court will meet in a very short time, when it will be in the power of the applicant to renew his application, and then bring forward his evidence. I think Licensing Courts should be more careful in complying with the express terms of the Act, but, on the other hand, this Court should not, where there is a slight informality which cannot affect the merits of the case, set aside the proceedings. It is quite clear, at all events, that fresh proceedings before that particular Licensing Board would have ended in the same way, in other words, it is perfectly clear with the four days allowed the decision would have been the same. The Court, under the circumstances, should not set aside the proceedings, the position not being affected by the slight irregularity that took place. For these reasons I am of opinion that the application for review should be refused. There will be no order as to costs.

Buchanan, J., concurred.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and a Special Jury.]

VAN NIEKERK V. WYNBERG (1905.
MUNICIPALITY. (Feb. 7th.

Municipality—Negligence—Personal injury.

This was an action brought by Mrs. Jasper Albertus van Niekerk, of Newlands, against the Wynberg Municipality, to recover £5,000 damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused through the negligence of the defendants or their servants.

The declaration was in the following terms:

1. The plaintiff is the wife of Jasper Albertus van Niekerk, jun., to whom she is married without community of property, and by whom she is in this suit assisted, so far as is necessary, and she resides at Newlands, in the Cape Division.

2. The defendant is the Wynberg Municipality, constituted under the Act No. 45 of 1882.

3. Within, and passing beyond, the limits of the said Municipality, there is a certain public road, or that known as the Hundred Foot Road, or Rosmead Avenue, which is vested in the Council of the Wynberg Municipality, in so far as it lies within the said limits. The said road or street passes opposite near to the Kenilworth Racecourse.

4. Before the 11th June, 1904, the defendant had caused a number of holes to be made at intervals in the said road or street, where it so passes the said racecourse, apparently with the object of planting therein trees or shrubs, and had again thereafter, but still before the 11th June, 1904, caused certain of the said holes to be again filled up by its servants at a part of the said road, where conveyances would probably draw up or would probably pass or turn on the occasion of a certain meeting held at the said racecourse on the 11th June.

5. On the 11th June, the plaintiff was seated in a cart, drawn by one horse, which cart and horse, driven by her said husband, was being properly driven upon the said road, at the part aforesaid, in the neighbourhood of one of the said holes, which had been so made and afterwards filled up, as aforesaid.

6. The said hole was by the defendant or its servants carelessly and negligently filled with soft and yielding rubbish, and sand, and though not appearing to be so, was in fact dangerous, and owing to the careless and negligent manner in which it had been filled and left, the wheel of the said cart as it was being turned, sank into the said hole or excavation, which was of considerable depth, and the shafts of the cart were in consequence broken, and the plaintiff, who was seated in front, was hurled violently from her seat to the ground, and sustained a compound fracture of the fibia, near to and partially into the ankle joint, on the left side, in addition to severe shock, and other personal injuries. For all of which the defendant is responsible. The plaintiff was for a long time confined to her bed under surgical and medical attendance, in consequence of the premises is crippled, and has suffered, and still suffers great pain, and is unable to resume her ordinary life and avocations, and she has sustained damages in the sum of £5,000 sterling.

Therefore, the plaintiff prays for judgment for the sum of £5,000, or for other relief, and costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was:

1. Paragraphs 1 and 2 of the declaration are admitted.

2. The defendant denies that the so-called Hundred Foot-road is a public road or street, and that it is vested in the defendant. The said road consists of a gravelled made roadway for the use of vehicular and other traffic, with waste unmade land on both sides.

3. The defendant admits that before June 11, 1904, he had caused a number of holes to be made in the said waste unmade land near the said racecourse, with the view of planting trees or shrubs, but says that they were not in or on the said gravelled roadway, or in or any part of the said Hundred Foot-road used or fit or intended for traffic, and he admits that before the said date he had caused certain of the said holes to be filled up.

4. The defendant denies that the said cart and horse were being properly turned either in respect to driving or as to locality, but he admits that the plaintiff was at the said date in the cart driven by her husband.

5. The defendant denies that the said holes were carelessly or negligently filled, or that they were dangerous, though not appearing to be so, and that he is responsible for any injury sustained by the plaintiff, and he says that if the plaintiff sustained any injury it was owing to the negligent, careless, and improper manner in which the cart and horse were driven and turned by the plaintiff's husband, and that the latter, had he exercised due and reasonable care, and caution in the manner in, and the ground over which he drove, and turned the holes, and the accident could have been avoided.

6. The defendant denies that the plaintiff has sustained £5,000 damages, or any damages for which he is responsible, and save as above, he denies paragraphs 4, 5, 6, and 7.

Wherefore he prays that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff's replication was:

1. The plaintiff admits that certain of the holes referred to in the declaration, including the hole mentioned in paragraph 5 thereof, were not situated in that part of the Hundred Foot-road which had been gravelled.

2. Save as aforesaid, and save in so far as any of the allegations in the declaration are admitted in the plea, the plaintiff denies all allegations of fact and conclusions of law therein contained, joins issue therein with the defendant, and again, as before, prays for judgment with costs.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Sutton) for the plaintiff. Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington) for defendants.

Mr. Schreiner, in his opening statement, said that a letter had been received from the defendant's attorneys, admitting that the ground was vested in the municipality as vacant Crown land, but not as a road or street. The essence of the case, he added, was the making of these holes at the side of the road, then filling them up in such an improper manner that persons standing there were placed in a position of danger through the act of the municipality, which they denied, and responsibility for which they repudiated.

Evidence was then called in support of the plaintiff's case.

H. R. Caisse, an officer in the Surveyor-General's Department, produced a plan of the part of the Cape Division, embracing the racecourse. On the side of the Turf Club's property, space, he said, was shown as left for a road. Prior to that date there was a hundred-foot road running to Claremont. There had been a servitude over Blair's farm, dated 1825. In 1845 Blair's successor, on condition of the servitude being released, gave two roads. In 1882 Parliament granted the racecourse to the Turf Club.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: In the grant to the Jockey Club, a road was defined by survey.

Mr. Schreiner said that the Act of Parliament showed that the grant was made to the Turf Club.

Witness said that the grant was made in favour of the chairman of the Jockey Club.

Jasper Albertus van Niekerk (husband of the plaintiff) said that he was accustomed to managing and driving horses. On the 11th June last he attended the race meeting at Kenilworth; he left the racecourse about half-past five or six, and looked for his trap, which he had expected to take him home. He saw a large number of traps and carriages standing on the side of the road. He had at the roadside a Ralli car, to which was yoked a large mare, of quiet habits. The horse was driven by Mr. Louis Vlok; there were also in the trap witness's wife and sister-in-law. The trap was not standing on the gravel portion, but at the side, off the hard road, in some slush. He asked Vlok to move the trap forward; Vlok did so. Witness then got into the cart, and turned to go on the gravel road, taking a short turn carefully, on the pivot of the right wheel. As they went towards the gravel road, the left wheel dropped into a hole; he had then got the cart straight. There was no hole to be seen when he began to move the trap. He found that a hole had been filled in with rubbish and refuse. The surface was fairly level with the surrounding parts of the ground when the wheel sank. There was no fencing or other protection about the holes. The holes had evidently been dug for the planting of trees. He afterwards found that the first eight or nine holes from the principal entrance had been filled in. When the wheel sank, the horse drew out the trap, and the shafts broke, with the result that all, except witness, were thrown forward out of the vehicle. Witness got down on the step and alighted. Mrs. Van Niekerk, who had been sitting at the front, was pitched on the ground; her ankle was broken. She suffered great pain. They had a child about four months old at that time. His wife was laid up for about seven weeks. Mrs. Van Niekerk had to use crutches for a while; she had since moved about with a stick. She was formerly very active, but owing to the injury, she now moved about with difficulty, and still suffered pain.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: There was a gravel road, with a lot of rough ground on each side. As he went towards the racecourse, he had seen the holes alongside the ground. There was a portion partly gravelled near the entrance; he did not know whether it had been gravelled for a cab-stand. The holes were some distance apart; he would say about 30 feet. His trap was not standing very near to the hedge. The distance of the hole from where his trap stood was about 3 yards. There was a sandy track where the carriages stood. The spohr of his trap struck the hole on the racecourse hedge side.

Sir H. Juta: That shows you were driving down the racecourse side, instead of turning to the road?

Witness: No, I went straight to the road.

By De Villiers, C.J.: His horse was facing Wynberg way. He desired to turn to the right to go to Newlands. The wheel on his left, as he sat in the cart, dropped into the hole.

De Villiers, C.J., said he could not understand how the left wheel could have gone into the hole if the witness was turning the road.

Further cross-examined: After he had turned, he went on about three yards. The horse, he supposed, must have just escaped the hole. He did not see the refuse about the hole before the accident occurred. He had not been betting that afternoon; he was not excited at the time. The cart dropped into the hole; he did not know how far it went down, but he should say about 2½ feet. He did not measure the depth. The horse pulled the cart out of the hole without any difficulty; one of the shafts broke as the trap was being drawn along.

Sir H. Juta: I put it to you that it was in the struggle to get out of that hole that the shafts broke, and that if you had told those people to get out before you drove out of the hole, no accident would have happened?

Witness: No, sir; as the wheel went down, the horse swerved round.

By His Lordship: The shafts broke as the trap was coming out of the hole.

Further cross-examined: Witness stepped off the cart as it went down.

Sir H. Juta: I put it to you, that if you had got these people out before you got the cart out of the hole, nothing whatever would have happened to these people?

Witness: There was no stopping the horse.

Re-examined: He turned his cart on the right wheel, the left wheel striking the hole. On the following day he tested the hole by means of a stick, which penetrated the rubbish quite easily. His theory as to the injury to his wife was that her ankle was struck by the seat.

By De Villiers, C.J.: The horse was walking at the time of the occurrence. When he felt the cart going down he tried to stop the horse, but could not.

Rykie Catherina van Niekerk (the plaintiff) said that her husband took the reins and drove very slowly, and turned sharply, and then pulled towards the gravel road. Witness heard the shafts crack. The horse was a very powerful animal, and immediately it found itself in the hole it dragged the cart out. Her husband did not urge the animal forward. Witness felt the trap going down on one side, and the next moment she was thrown into the road. Afterwards she had been removed home she was attended by Dr. Eyre and Dr. Rowan. Her medical attendant, Dr. L. Beck, was away at that time. Since his return, Dr. Beck had attended her. Witness had to remain in bed about seven weeks; she then had to rest on a couch; afterwards she had a bath chair; then she moved with the aid of crutches, and now she got about with the aid of a stick. She was a cripple. She had formerly been accustomed to plenty of exercise, tennis, cycling, and so on.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: There was nothing to call their attention to the fact that holes had been made in the side portion of the road. The left wheel of the cart dropped into the hole on the inside edge. Witness had no idea how she fell. The horse was walking at the time, but there was really no time to draw it up.

Re-examined: The horse was exceptionally powerful. Witness could arrange for the animal to be outside the court in the afternoon if his lordship and the jury desired.

By De Villiers, C.J.: She did not think her husband tried to stop the horse when the wheel had sunk. Both shafts were broken when the vehicle had been drawn out of the hole.

Miss Maria Johanna Vlok, of Newlands, sister of the plaintiff, said that she was in the trap along with her brother-in-law, the plaintiff, and her brother (Louis Vlok) on the day named. Witness was sitting with her brother at the back of the trap. Mr. Van Niekerk turned slowly to his right to go to the gravel road; witness felt the trap going down on the left, and in a moment they were thrown out, witness being thrown over the front seat. Her sister suffered great pain from the injury for the first fortnight. She was quite crippled still. Witness did not think there was any carelessness in the plaintiff's driving; he turned the horse very slowly.

Cross-examined: After the accident the cart was lying forward on the broken shafts; it was not lying over on its side. She had not noticed that there were holes on the side of the road. She saw refuse about, but she did not think that it covered a hole.

Dr. Eyre said he found that the plaintiff had sustained two fractures of her left leg. The fibula bone was broken about 2 inches; a small portion of the fibia bone was chipped off. The skin was not broken. The injury was serious; he could not say whether the results were likely to be permanent. He had not lately examined the injury medically.

Evidence was also given by Dr. H. J. Rowan and Dr. L. H. W. Beck to the effect that the plaintiff was likely to suffer permanent ill effects from the injury.

Louis A. Vlok (brother of the plaintiff) also gave evidence as to the accident.

John Edward Paul Close, incorporated accountant, said he resided at Newlands next door to Mr. Van Niekerk. Two days after the accident he went with the plaintiff's husband, Mr. Attorney Holme, and Mr. Surveyor Smuts, to look at the hole where Mr. Van Niekerk said the wheel had sunk on the Saturday. The cart seemed to have struck the hole almost diagonally. Some of the holes in the direction of Newlands had not been filled in. All the holes from the entrance seemed to have been filled in. Judging by the track the cart seemed to have been turned fairly sharp. They tried the hole with a stick and found that it contained house refuse, vegetable matter, and so on, and some sand. Mr. Van Niekerk's horse was a quiet, powerful animal.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Rain had fallen between the date of the accident and their visit. He had not had his memory jogged of what occurred eight months ago; his memory did not need to be jogged.

By De Villiers, C.J.: He should say that the depth to which the wheel had sunk was 1 foot to 1 foot 6 inches; he would not be at all definite on the point. There was no track left in the hole when they visited the spot.

Re-examined: The wheel track went to and off the hole, but was not shown at the hole itself, as the ground had consolidated again.

Martin Smuts, Government land surveyor, said that when they inspected the hole they found Municipal refuse both in the hole and about it. Witness proved the plans put in.

David Henry Holme, attorney, also gave evidence as to an inspection he made of the hole two days after the accident.

Pieter Johannes Wilmot, cab proprietor, Claremont, said he saw the accident to Mr. Van Niekerk's trap. The policemen from Wynberg compelled all traps to stand on the ground on the side of the road. Mr. Van Niekerk pulled straight towards the hard road when the left wheel sank in the hole. Speaking as an experienced driver, he did not notice any carelessness about Mr. Van Niekerk's driving.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: He should say that the wheel sank about 2 ft. in the hole, probably to the nave. He would not swear whether the shafts were broken before the trap had been dragged out of the hole.

Johannes Graham, retired landowner, Claremont, said that he considered Mr. Van Niekerk an "excellent coachman." The horse was a willing, useful animal. The Hundred Foot-road had long been recognised as a public road; he had used it for 22 years.

Cross-examined: There had been a track that he had used.

Mounted Constable Ashley, formerly stationed at Wynberg, said he saw Mr. Van Niekerk turn round, and the wheel sink in the hole, when the horse had been turned in the straight. The hole had been filled up with rubbish, garbage, etc. It was customary for cabs and carriages to stand on the ground in question when the proper cab stand was filled.

Cross-examined: The horse moved away with a brisk step; it was not a walk, but "a kind of jig-jog." The horse might have got into the hole first. He had said on Monday afternoon that the horse might have slipped, because he saw the horse's head swerve to the right. He did not recollect properly what he said on Monday afternoon, because he was asked so many questions. The wheel went about 5 or 6 inches down into the hole. He said on Monday afternoon that the accident might have been caused by Van Niekerk pulling round the horse's head. Both shafts broke together when the vehicle had been pulled out of the hole.

Re-examined: Witness had had a consultation with counsel for the defendants (Sir H. Juta). He did not say that he saw Mr. Van Niekerk jerk the horse; he thought the horse must have been jerked.

By De Villiers, C.J.: When the trap went into the hole the horse's head swung to the right.

Henry F. Seale, jeweller, Cape Town, and residing at Claremont, said that the turf was fairly even on the left hand side near the racecourse. Carriages stood on the side away from the gravel road.

Mr. Schreiner read the correspondence which had passed between the parties' attorneys and closed his case.

John Geo. Frebus, guard in charge of a convict gang, employed by the Municipality, said that his gang were engaged in making the holes. About 11 o'clock on the 11th June, they were ordered to fill in the holes; he began on the Wetton-road side of the racecourse entrance. On the cab stand he put in at the bottom one load of refuse, and then all the material that had come out. The convicts stamped the material down. He also dealt in a similar way with the other holes. A drizzle fell during the day, and rain fell later on. He did not think that a cart could have fallen 2 ft. 9 in. down one of the holes.

There were indications that a hole had been filled up with refuse.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He had ten convicts working under him, they filled up about 32 holes. He was instructed to fill up the holes between 10 and 11 o'clock; the work was finished about half-past 12. On the following Monday he filled further holes, the whole number being about 150. The road inspector told him to fill the holes at the side of the racecourse that day, because of the races.

Re-examined: He filled up all the holes in the same fashion. Witness was paid by the Government. The Municipality did not bring any gravel to the holes. He filled up the holes preparatory to the trees being planted. He was a bit of a gardener, and, naturally, he would not put down a thick layer of gravel in order to plant trees.

By De Villiers, C.J.: He was quite sure that all the holes were trodden down by convicts. There were two convicts engaged at each hole.

George Black, road inspector on the Council's employ, said that a Scotch cart of house refuse was tramped down into the holes, and then on top was placed the material which had been dug out, this being also tramped down. Tins were removed from the refuse, and placed to one side. He watched all the holes being filled up, and went over them to see that they were safe. The holes at the cabstand were dealt with in a precisely similar manner. No accident happened, except to Mr. Van Niekerk's trap. He saw the place where the accident occurred on the day following; the wheel track was 9 or 10 feet long. The hole was tramped round, and was a little lower on one side than the other. Marks could be seen of people having tramped down the ground. He tried the hole with his foot rule, and found that the wheel track was about 3 inches deep. On Monday he drove over the hole with the engineer, and the track then made was about 3 inches deep. The hole contained sand and refuse.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Witness put his foot on the hole, and found that the earth was firm. He considered that it was impossible for the cart wheel to go deep down into the hole. A walking stick could be pushed down two or three feet anywhere in the sand alongside the racecourse. They actually put pegs down to mark out the holes without any hammering; they simply pushed down the pegs with their hands.

Re-examined: There were four passengers in the trap, when the engineer and witness went over the hole on the Monday morning.

Further cross-examined: The photograph (produced) showed the Council's cart standing in precisely the same position as Van Niekerk's cart had occupied on the preceding Saturday. A snapshot was taken by the Council's engineer.

By the Jury: The hole had been trampled down between the time of the accident and when he visited the scene on Sunday morning.

By De Villiers, C.J.: There appeared to be no tramping or treading on the track of the wheel. The ground round about just appeared to have been walked over.

Hugh Master Ladell, the Council's engineer, gave corroborative evidence as to a visit of inspection on the Monday following the accident.

Cross-examined: He did not know that there were four passengers in the cart. He only remembered the driver and himself having been in the cart when it was driven over the hole. The reason why he took his cart over the hole on the Monday was because he wanted to see if he could break his cart shafts in the same way. He stood with both feet on the hole on the same morning, but not where the water had collected. His feet did not sink. He did not take a stick to see how far it would go into the hole. Only the holes on the gravel cabstand were directed by him to be filled in on that particular day. The men went and filled in other holes, not upon his instructions, but because they had time to spare.

James Barry Munnik, Town Clerk, Wynberg, said that the gravel cabstand at Kenilworth Racecourse had been gazetted. The road was formerly a sand track.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He had had no communication from the Turf Club, or anyone in fact, calling attention to the danger from the holes which had been dug.

Sir H. Juta closed his case, and counsel having addressed the jury, De Villiers, C.J., summed up. The most important question, he said, was whether the plaintiff's husband was guilty of contributory negligence. It seemed to him that the shafts were broken by the horse dragging the vehicle out of the hole. The question was, should the plaintiff not have allowed the trap to be dragged out; should the plaintiff's husband have stopped the cart and relieved it of its burden before the cart was pulled out of this deep hole?

The foreman of the jury stated that they had found that the accident was caused by the negligence of the defendants, and that there was no contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff's husband. They assessed the damages at £1,500.

Mr. Schreiner moved for judgment which was entered accordingly.

TRIAL CAUSES.

BOWERS V. BOWERS AND { 1905.
ARENDSE. { Feb. 7th.

The plaintiff and first defendant were married in community of property at Simon's Town in February, 1893, which marriage still subsisted. There were three children of the marriage, all of them minors. On the 12th August and the 14th August the first defendant was guilty of adultery, and since the latter date the defendants had lived together as man and wife. Plaintiff therefore asked for a decree of divorce, with custody of the children, as against the first defendant, and £50 damages as against the second defendant, with costs of the case.

Mr. Alexander for plaintiff. Defendants in default.

The plaintiff, in his evidence, spoke to seeing adultery committed by the first and second defendants. He had left Simon's Town, and was living in Cape Town, and until Arendse came to the house, the plaintiff and first defendant lived together amicably.

Maasdorp, J., granted the degree of divorce, plaintiff to have custody of the children, and judgment for £50 damages against the second defendant and costs.

BARRITT V. BARRITT.

This was an action for judicial separation.

Mr. Alexander for plaintiff. Defendant in person.

F. W. Barritt (the plaintiff) said she was married to the defendant in community of property on October 24, 1897, at Cape Town. There were no children of the marriage. She was a widow when she married defendant, and there were two children of the previous marriage. She had been keeping a boarding-house, and had saved some £200, and that sum, together with money she obtained for selling furniture, she gave to defendant, who obtained the Roma Hotel. For a year they lived happily together, when defendant became addicted to intemperance and neglected the house. Finally, in 1902, he refused admittance to an inspector of police after closing time, was fined £5, and as a consequence, the brewery company forced them to leave the hotel. Plaintiff then took a boarding-house in Faure-street, and plaintiff returned to her the £250 she had lent him. For the first month or two he gave her money, but in 1903 and 1904 he had not contributed to her support. Her husband when drunk smashed the furniture, and had treated her cruelly.

P.C. Thorpe said he lived about two doors from the Barritt's in Faure-street. He had had defendant under his observation for about two years, and found that he was practically drunk all the time. One evening he was called into the house, and found defendant strapped down with ropes, and in a state of mad drunkenness.

Evidence was also given by Charles and Frances Hogerman as to defendant's violence and drunkenness.

Alex. Morrison, a boarder at Mrs. Barritt's house, said that defendant was often drunk, when he was obnoxious. When sober, defendant was a quiet man.

Mr. Alexander closed his case.

Defendant denied that he was given to drunkenness, and said the trouble arose through the son-in-law (Hogerman) trying to interfere between defendant and his wife.

Plaintiff (recalled), in answer to his lordship, said the goodwill of the Roma Hotel was £700, and she advanced her husband £200 in cash before the marriage. She did not know whether her husband had paid anything himself towards the goodwill.

Maasdorp, J., granted a decree of judicial separation, furniture declared to be the property of the plaintiff, and no order was made as to costs.

WEIMAR V. SIEBEKS. { 1905.
Feb. 7th.
„ 8th.

Accommodation note—Payment by accommodation indorser—Right of indorser to recover from drawer.

Mr. P. Jones was for the plaintiff, and Dr. Greer was for the defendant.

Dr. Greer said that although he had telegraphed for the defendant, who was the only witness for the defence, he was not present. He had been in Court on Friday, and the whole of yesterday. Counsel was prepared to go on with the evidence for the plaintiff if his lordship so desired.

[Maasdorp, J.: Very well, we will hear the evidence for the plaintiff.]

The declaration set out that about May, 1902, the defendant, who was about to purchase certain ground at Parow, and in order to complete the price, passed a note for £25, which was endorsed by the plaintiff through one George Casper Dreyer, who wrongfully negotiated the note. The holder of the note, one Goldfoot, successfully sued the plaintiff for provisional sentence on the note, and obtained judgment for £30 10s. 4d. Plaintiff claimed the amount of the note, and the costs back from the defendant. The defendant in his plea denied that the signing by the plaintiff and one Lytton of the note was an accommodation. The defendant paid the amount due to Dreyer, as he was requested to do on the day it became due.

Mr. Jones made an application for an amendment of the declaration to the effect that the plaintiff on the 16th May, 1902, endorsed the note as an accommodation, and for the assistance of the defendant, and the defendant agreed to indemnify the plaintiff, and also that the note was negotiated prior to the due date of its becoming due.

Dr. Greer pointed out that such an alteration in the declaration put the case on an entirely different foundation. After three months the plaintiff had discovered that his facts were totally wrong. The defence of the case was made out to meet the original declaration.

[Maasdorp, J.: Had they gone on you would have met a bad case. The question is why they should not go on now, as you are not prejudiced with regard to costs.]

Dr. Greer: I cannot offer any further opposition, but I submit we are entitled to costs.

[Maasdorp, J.: The amendment will be allowed. All costs occasioned by the amendment to be paid by the plaintiff.]

The plaintiff stated that in 1902 the defendant wanted to buy some property of Dreyer, and he had not sufficient money, and asked witness to help him. Defendant asked witness to assist him, and witness proceeded to Dreyer, with whom he signed a note at 30 days. The defendant agreed to pay the money back again when it became due. On the 16th June defendant said he had paid the money to Dreyer, and produced a receipt. Witness told him to go back to Dreyer and get the bill, but he was unable to procure it. After that, Lytton and witness were sued for the amount of the note, and the amount of the judgment was paid through witness's attorney. Dreyer was arrested on an affidavit which was made by witness. The understanding was that the defendant would pay the money back to witness. The defendant gave evidence in the case, and was anxious that the plaintiff should win the case.

Cross-examined by Dr. Greer: He was anxious to see new-comers in the new township of Parow, and in order to get a new neighbour he was willing to guarantee him for £25. Witness was not interested in the sale of the property. He did not tell the defendant to pay the money to Dreyer. Witness's action was one of pure philanthropy.

Re-examined by Mr. Jones: He denied absolutely that he was to get any consideration out of the sale of the property.

Thomas Hazell, broker, accountant and estate agent, stated that in 1902 he held the plaintiff's power of attorney. The plaintiff and the defendant came frequently to his office with reference to this matter. When the summons was served witness advised the defence. The present defendant assisted the plaintiff in every way to win the case. It was certainly understood that the defendant was to return the money if the plaintiff lost the case. Witness had no doubt if the defendant had been in good circumstances at that time he would have paid the money. Witness, holding the defendant's money which he obtained from the Government over a railway accident, paid over £25 to the plaintiff's account. When the defendant heard of this he objected, and the money was refunded.

Cross-examined by Dr. Greer: The defendant lost considerably over the matter. The transfer had not gone through in consequence of the negotiations with Dreyer. The defendant understood that he was liable to the plaintiff. The plaintiff was certainly very anxious to push Parow ahead.

Charles Edward Price Hughes, plaintiff's attorney, said he handed over the documents in the civil proceedings to the police, which included an agreement between Dreyer and the defendant, and a receipt for £20. He had made every endeavour to recover the documents, but was unable to get them.

Cross-examined by Dr. Greer: It was certainly unfortunate that the agreement was lost. The declaration was drawn up during witness's absence from the Colony.

Mr. Jones closed his case.

Peter Siercks, defendant, stated that in June, 1902, he had negotiations with one Dreyer with regard to the purchase of certain property at Elsie's River Halt. He dealt with Dreyer direct, and thought that Dreyer could sell him the property for which the plaintiff had called on him several times with a view of purchasing. Finally, it was agreed that the property would be sold for £210. Witness paid £30 in cash, £25 on a promissory note, and the rest was on bond. The note was made payable to Wiemar, and it was to be redeemed at Dreyer's office. Witness thought that the plaintiff and Dreyer were acting together in the sale of the property. Witness had not an intimate acquaintance with the plaintiff, who was very anxious that witness should buy the property. He lost over £30 on the transaction. He regarded Dreyer as a party entitled to receive payment for Wiemar. Several times witness called on Dreyer, but could not get the note. Witness never told Hazel that he would indemnify the plaintiff for the note. What he gave Hazel to understand was that although he was not liable he was willing to come to some arrangement. He told Hazel, when the latter paid £25 to Wiemar's account, that he would not pay the money.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: In regard to his transactions with Dreyer, the only document he held was the receipt for the money. Dreyer was acting for Bridget to sell the property. The £25 was a commission to the plaintiff. He could not explain, if Hazel was wrong in saying that witness told him to pay the money to Wiemar, that Hazel should have done so. He objected to pay the money because he was told that the plaintiff had got the money from Dreyer. He got the note from the Magistrate's Court, because it was essential for the transfer of the property.

Dr. Greer having been heard in argument on the facts, without calling on Mr. Jones, Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff sues the defendant in this case for the recovery of £25. He alleges that the £25 is due to him in respect of a promissory note upon which he became an accommodation endorser for the accommodation of the defendant. He says that he was requested by the defendant to lend his name to assist him in part payment of the purchase price of the property which the defendant had bought from Bridget. He further stated that he subsequently paid the note to the legal holder for value, and is consequently entitled now to recover it from the defendant. If these allegations are true, then it is quite clear that, as an accommodation party to this note, he is now entitled to recover this money from the person to whom he lent his name. It appears that a sale did take place, in which the defendant was the purchaser and a Mr. Bridget was the seller, and this sale took place through the instrumentality of Mr. Dreyer. The defendant admits that the purchase price was to be the sum of £210, and that it was agreed that £55 of this amount should be paid in cash. He states in so many words that he got the £25 to enable him to make up the sum of £55, because he had only £35 in cash at the time; and he said more than once that the £25 was really portion of the cash payment which he had to make. He does say that something was said which induced him to believe that Wiemar was to have the benefit of the £25, but what was said is so vague that it cannot be accepted as proof of anything. We have it, therefore, that the sale did take place to the defendant, who was in want of this assistance, and consequently it is not very difficult to accept the clear and positive statement of the witnesses for the plaintiff to the effect that the assistance was rendered by the plaintiff to the defendant in the shape of this promissory note. Upon reference to the note itself, it seems it is in payment of the balance of the purchase price of the ground at Elsie's Halt. That clearly supports the case of the plaintiff that certain money was to be paid for the property that was bought, and it was to be paid by defendant, and it was not to be paid to the plaintiff, but to the owner of the ground. Upon these facts, therefore, I come to the conclusion that the plaintiff has clearly proved that the note upon which he was an accommodation party was the note upon which he was subsequently sued by a person by the name of Goldfoot, who satisfied the Magistrate that he was the legal holder for value, and he obtained judgment against the plaintiff for the amount. The plaintiff would, upon these facts, be entitled to recover. The defendant seems to be under some impression which is not justified by the evidence that Wiemar had some interest in the money. Now, take it that Wiemar had an interest in the money, and that he ought to have been the holder of the note, and to have recovered the value from the defendant. Then the defence is set up that he, as the holder of that note, instructed the defendant to pay Dreyer this sum of money as the agent of the plaintiff. Now, even if there was some case made of it that there was a direct liability from the defendant to the plaintiff, and that it was not an accommodation note, then the defendant had utterly failed to prove that he paid this note to Wiemar through Dreyer, because there is not a tittle of evidence that Dreyer was ever the agent of the plaintiff to receive his money. Upon the face of the note, it is provided that the note was to be paid at No. 2, Good Hope Buildings. That does not make the occupier or the owner of that property the agent of the holder of the note, and as a rule, when arrangements are made of this kind, upon the payment of the note, the note must be recovered from the person to whom the payment is made, and if the person fails to recover this note, and if parties afterwards suffer through his negligence, he must suffer for his own conduct in the matter. But I found my judgment upon the fact that this was a bill upon which the plaintiff was an accommodative party, and having had to pay the bill, he is entitled to recover from the defendant. There will be judgment for the plaintiff for £25 with costs. There was a claim for the costs of the previous trial, but it is not necessary now to go into the question whether the plaintiff would have been entitled to recover these costs, as that claim has been abandoned.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

TRIAL CAUSES.

CLOETE V. DIPRAEM. { 1905.
Feb. 8th.

Mr. Gardiner, on behalf of the defendant, moved for the trial cause set down for hearing on Friday (February 10th), to be postponed. Counsel read an affidavit by Mr. S. Hutton, attorney to the applicant (defendant in the action), embodying a telegram from Dipraem (who is in the Orange River Colony), stating that he could not be present in Cape Town by Friday, that there had been continuous rains, that the roads were heavy, and that he was residing over 100 miles from the railway. Applicant was unwell, and his most material witness could not attend.

Mr. McGregor (for the plaintiff), said that plaintiff's witnesses were already in town. He opposed the application, unless satisfactory security for costs were given.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It is clear that this postponement can only be allowed on one condition. That condition is, that the defendant shall before Friday morning at ten o'clock pay the costs of the day and of plaintiff's witnesses who have arrived in Cape Town, and costs of the motion of the 2nd February.]

At a later stage.

De Villiers, C.J., informed counsel that an alternative condition would be included in the order, viz., "or give security for costs, to the satisfaction of the Registrar."

KUIT V. UNION-CASTLE { 1905.
STEAMSHIP CO. { Feb. 8th.

Dog — Injury — Knowledge of vicious propensity — Master of passenger ship.

The plaintiff, a foreigner, being a third-class passenger on board a mail steamer, was bitten by a dog which had been tied up at a spot from which it could reach the part of the ship ordinarily occupied by third-class passengers. The master of the ship was aware of the vicious propensity of the dog, and had put up a notice in English that it was dangerous.

Held, that the owners of the ship were liable in damages for the injury.

This was an action brought by Jan Kuit, a carpenter, of Stellenbosch, against the Union-Castle Steamship Co., to recover damages in the sum of £250 for injuries sustained by a dog bite on the defendant company's steamer German.

The declaration set out that on the 11th May, 1904, plaintiff, who had duly paid to the defendants passage money (third-class from London to Cape Town), sailed from London in the steamship German, and arrived in Cape Town on or about the 11th June. On the 30th May he was bitten by a dog of the kind known as a boarhound, under the care, custody, and control of the defendants or their servants, which was being carried by the defendants on the steamer. The said dog was of vicious habits. Through the carelessness and negligence of the defendants' servants, the dog was allowed to be in such a position that it could reach and bite passengers who might be going about where they had a right to go. The defendants' servants failed to keep the animal in proper custody and control. Plaintiff had sustained bodily injuries, and had suffered and still suffered great pain, his health had been injured, and he had been put to expenses in medical treatment and medicines, and had otherwise sustained damages in the sum of £250. Defendant refused to pay the said sum or any part thereof. Plaintiff prayed for judgment for £250 damages and costs of suit.

The defendants, in their plea, admitted the allegations in paragraphs 1, 2, and 3, save that they did not admit that the plaintiff when bitten by the said dog was on a portion of the said steamship where he was entitled to be. They admitted that the dog was in their custody and control. They admitted that the dog was of a vicious disposition, but said that due precautions were adopted to prevent the said dog from biting the plaintiff or any other passenger, and that warning was given to the plaintiff and other passengers, by a written notice over the kennel, that the dog was dangerous. The defendants further said that the plaintiff was bitten through his own negligence in wilfully approaching too closely to the kennel. They denied liability, and prayed that the claim might be dismissed, with costs.

Mr. Gardiner appeared for the plaintiff; Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Lewis) appeared for the defendants.

Dr. Frank Muir Morris said that the plaintiff called at his consulting-rooms about the 13th June, 1904, and showed him an injury to his face. There was a jagged wound extending from his nose transversely towards the ear, about 1½ inches long, and there was another jagged wound, which extended downwards, about one inch deep. The plaintiff, he thought, must have suffered great pain. He saw the plaintiff again about ten days ago; although the wounds were healed, a distinct scar had been left. The charges of witness and his partner were five guineas. When witness first saw plaintiff, the latter seemed to be extremely nervous.

Cross-examined by Mr. Uppington: He should not call the wound a "simple lacerated wound," as described by the ship's surgeon. There was a difference between a "simple" and a "lacerated" wound. A dog bite invariably caused a septic wound. The plaintiff's lower eyelid was involved in the scar. He did not notice any indications that plaintiff had scratched his face.

Jan Kuit (the plaintiff) said that he was a Hollander; he left England in the German on the 18th May last. On the 30th May he was bitten by the dog. He thought it would be about five days previously when he first saw the dog; it was then in the place where the concerts for third-class passengers were held. Witness had a right to be in this part of the boat; he had never been warned not to go there.

Mr. Gardiner said that he understood the animal was a Russian wolfhound.

Witness (continuing) said that the dog was fastened by a chain about 5 feet long, and the kennel stood against the bulwarks of the boat. The opening of the kennel faced the bulwark. Witness was looking at the dog at a distance of about 3 feet; he was stooping down, but he neither teased nor patted it. The dog suddenly sprang up and bit him on the face. He was not aware before the accident that the dog was vicious; he would never have expected to find a vicious dog on the deck.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But did you not know that there was a notice up warning passengers about the dog.]

Witness said that he was afterwards told so, but, being unable to read English, he did not know of the warning, and none of the passengers had called his attention to it. Before the accident two other persons were bitten and one was afterwards bitten.

Witness saw a paper at the kennel but he was under the impression that it was the name of the dog. Witness went to the surgeon and his wound was attended to. He still suffered from the effects of the injury. When he bent forward at his work he experienced pain; his eye was nearly always moist. His sight was not so clear as it had been formerly. Witness was suing in forma pauperis. He had been unable to obtain the evidence of the two other passengers who witnessed the accident.

Cross-examined by Mr. Uppington: He had not approached the dog prior to the accident except once when the dog was without water, and it was given water by another passenger. He had not patted the animal, nor had he rubbed his hands over its head and ears. He went up to the dog because he was attracted by its enormous size and because it was so miserably thin. He was not a judge of dogs, though he was very fond of them. He could only read a few words of English. He did not speak to anybody about the notice. After he had been bitten he heard that a passenger and a sailor had been bitten.

Dr. Julius Petersen said that he saw the plaintiff on the same day as his partner, Dr. Morris. He found a lacerated wound about 2½ inches long under the man's left eye.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

Mr. Uppington called

Michael O'Mahoney, sanitary inspector, employed by the Table Bay Harbour Board, who said he was engaged on the destruction of rats. He was a passenger by the German, when the defendant was injured. The dog had been brought down under the awning on the fore-deck owing to the hot weather. After they had been at sea for some few days he saw the plaintiff repeatedly go to the dog and he considered that he must be the owner. The plaintiff, the butcher, and the boatswain were the only persons who approached the animal. The plaintiff handled the dog as if it belonged to him. Witness saw a notice on the kennel to the effect, "Beware of the dog; it is dangerous." Witness saw the accident. The plaintiff went straight up to the dog, began to handle it, and then stooped with his hands on his knees and faced it. The dog made a rush and bit him.

Mr. Uppington: Have you any interest in this case, Mr. O'Mahoney?

Witness: Not as much as a single match, I paid the Castle Company the last penny of the passage.

Cross-examined: After the accident the dog was again taken to the upper deck, although they were still in the tropics. He thought the plaintiff must have been making grimaces at the dog when he was bitten. The plaintiff was bending forward with his hands on his knees and was staring the dog "in the countenance."

Another passenger by the steamer, a German, who said he was a fruit-dealer, also gave evidence. He declared that he saw the plaintiff playing with the dog twice or three times. The plaintiff snapped his fingers to call the dog to him; witness saw him stroke the animal. When the accident happened the plaintiff had been stroking the dog. There was a notice over the dog's kennel.

Evidence taken on commission was then read.

Captain Silvester said that the dog was so placed that it was not possible for him, by tugging at his chain, to get beyond his kennel. A notice was fixed over the kennel to the effect that the dog was dangerous. He had frequently brought out dogs to this country, and he adopted in the present instance the ordinary and usual precautions.

The Surgeon of the steamer said that he had great difficulty in preventing the plaintiff from irritating the wound by touching it. The plaintiff was not of cleanly habits. He discontinued the treatment of the plaintiff on the 9th June.

Other evidence by the officers of the ship was to the effect that due precautions were taken to protect the passengers from the dog.

Mr. Gardiner: The dog was admittedly vicious, and hence it was the duty of the Company to take such precautions as would make it impossible for him to inflict injury Le Roux v. Fick (Buch. 1879, p. 29), Arker v. Reed (14 C.T.R., 720). The plaintiff was not aware of the vicious propensities of the dog; see Doig v. Forbes (7 Juta, 119). More than a mere notice in English is required to bring to the knowledge of alien third class passengers the fact that a dog is vicious. It is not as though the plaintiff had been throwing stones at the dog or otherwise irritating it when he was bitten; he was merely looking at it. The dog had been kept without water in the tropics, and was probably angry. It is said that the plaintiff and others had patted the dog, but even if that was so (and the evidence on this point is very contradictory), it would not amount to contributory negligence. The medical evidence as to plaintiff's injuries is very clear. As to damages, he has had to pay £5 for medical attendance, and the pain and suffering he has undergone must also be taken into account.

Mr. Upington: There is no doubt that the plaintiff was bitten, and O'Mahoney's evidence clearly shows that he patted the dog. As a matter of law, plaintiff had no right to touch the dog. A quiet dog will often bite a stranger if touched. Every precaution was taken to prevent the dog from inflicting injury.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The dog might have been put into cage.]

Even so, a man might have opened the door of the cage. Of course that would have been contributory negligence, but the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. In the case of Doig v. Forbes the dog was not tied up, the decision, no doubt, would have been otherwise had he been. Here the plaintiff went up to the dog for the purpose of handling it, and he had only himself to blame.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was the dog tied up at a place to which third class passengers had access?]

No doubt they could go there, but the Company can always restrict passengers from using a portion of the deck, e.g., they may put a horse box there. Here a line was chalked on the deck to denote the length of the chain, and a notice was put up.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How was anybody to know that that chalk line denoted the length of the chain?]

The plaintiff could have seen that from his own observation.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was the notice up when he was bitten?]

Yes. He has been guilty of more than contributory negligence. The fact that he cannot read English will not help him. If O'Mahoney's evidence is to be believed, all the other passengers knew that the dog was dangerous, and I submit that the Company took every reasonable precaution. Among English cases see Block v. Copeland (1 Esp. 203).

[De Villiers, C.J.: That is quite a different case. There the plaintiff had no right in the yard; here the plaintiff had a right to be where he was.]

But the general principle of English law is that where an injury results from a man's own negligence and improvidence he cannot hold anybody else liable. The proximate cause of the injury was his going up to handle the dog. In illustration of what I have said, I refer to Voet. (9. 1, 6). I have not found a single case in which the owner of a dog which was securely chained up has been held liable.

Mr. Gardiner was not called upon in reply.

De Villiers, C.J.: The first question to be decided in the case is whether there was negligence on the part of the company. The next question is whether there was contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. If both of these questions are decided in favour of the plaintiff, the last question will be what amount of damages should be awarded. As to the first question, whether there was negligence. I am clearly of opinion that it was an act of very great negligence on the part of those who were in charge of the ship to place the dog at the place where they did place it. It was first tied up in another part of the ship, but it is said that it was removed to this part, because of the heat. We know that the steerage passengers in a ship have very little room as a rule, and in my opinion the little room which is allotted to them should not be partly occupied by a dog known to be vicious. There is a great lack in the evidence as to how the captain acquired a knowledge of the dogs vicious propensity. That he knew the dog to be vicious is perfectly clear, because he says he put up a notice. It is suggested that others had been bitten before, and there is some slight evidence to that effect, but certainly the fact that the captain knew of the dangerous propensities of the dog would rather show that something of the kind had happened before. However, the captain says that he himself used to pat the dog. The dog must have known him; and the fact that he patted it does not alter the fact that the captain knew that it was a vicious dog. In my opinion, it was not a proper place to tie the dog where the steerage passengers congregated, and where they would have access to the dog. We all know how, with the life on board, little things interest even first-class passengers. It was to be expected that the steerage passengers would go up to the dog. Well, then the dog did undoubtedly bite the plaintiff severely in the face. The next question is whether the plaintiff contributed to the injury by his own negligence. The evidence as to what really took place is conflicting. The plaintiff says he was looking at the dog at the time. One of the witnesses for the defendants says that at the time he was bitten he was not actually touching it, but he had his hands on his knees and was looking at it. Another witness says that he was touching it. It lies on the defendant to prove contributory negligence, and where there is any conflict upon the evidence I should certainly give the benefit of the doubt to the plaintiff who has sustained the injury. The plaintiff says he was not touching the dog at all. The captain, or whoever was responsible, would have surely known that passengers, with so little to amuse them, when a dog was placed there, would have a natural inclination to go and look at it. The dog took a snap at the plaintiff and bit him. In my opinion there is not sufficient proof of contributory negligence. It is said that there was a notice up. The plaintiff says he did not see the notice. He says he is a foreigner, and he does not understand English. But even if he did, I am not satisfied that the mere looking at a dog would have been such negligence on his part as to bar his remedy. It is said that he had previously patted the dog. There are witnesses to that effect. But if he had previously patted the dog then he might well look at it without fear of the consequences which ensued. In my opinion there was not contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. With regard to the amount of damages, I do not think this is a case for very heavy damages. The plaintiff has appeared in Court. He might, it is said, suffer some inconvenience from his eyesight in future. There is no clear evidence on that point. Some substantial damages should be awarded, and I think the sum of £100 would do justice to the case. There will be judgment for the plaintiff for £100, with costs.

Mr. Gardiner asked that the costs should include the costs of the application for leave to take the evidence of the purser, which were ordered to stand over, and plaintiff's expenses as a necessary witness.

De Villiers, C.J., said that these costs would be included in the order.

Building contract — Defects —
Time limit—Architect's certificate.

This was an action brought by Mrs. McCarthy, who was joined by her husband as co-plaintiff, to recover from the defendant £125 damages, by reason of his negligence in the erection of two villas at Observatory-road.

The declaration set out that the defendant contracted for the sum of £1,760 to erect two villas for the plaintiff, but the work was not up to the specifications and plaintiff suffered damages to the extent of £125. Mr. Alexander, at this stage, asked for leave to amend the declaration, by putting the damages at £220.

Mr. Uppington (with him Mr. Alexander) was for the plaintiff; and Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Struben) was for the defendant.

Mr. Burton opposed the motion, pointing out that the defence was brought into Court to meet a certain schedule of defects.

Mr. Alexander said the defendant denied the liability altogether, and submitted that, under Rule 334, the plaintiff was entitled to amend his declaration.

Maasdorp, J., said, if the plaintiff paid the costs of the day, a postponement would be granted, but the case could not possibly go on with the amendment.

Mr. Alexander said if that was the case, he preferred to go on. Counsel continued to read the declaration, which further set out that the defendant failed to complete the buildings according to the contract. On the 31st March, 1904, the defendant promised to rectify the building in accordance with the contract, but he failed to do so.

In his plea, the defendant stated that he completed the work to the satisfaction of the architect. If any defects did exist, which he denied, he was not responsible for them.

John McCarthy (co-plaintiff in the case) stated that the agreement was entered into between himself and the defendant. Witness was acting on behalf of his wife, to whom he was married out of community of property. Neither of the houses were completed when possession was taken. In the house witness lived in, he noticed the building was not according to specifications, and pointed out defects in the cement work, painting, and doors to the defendant. According to the money charged by the defendant, it was a poor job. The other house was damp, through bad plastering; the painting was also bad. The defendant was advanced money freely; he was always hard up. He had never seen anything of a final certificate; the building was not completed. In consequence of a letter he received from the architect, the defendant agreed to stand by the work for another three months from the 31st March. Three weeks later the defects were shown to the defendant in presence of the architect, and he promised another three months from date. The defendant put the blame on his workmen. The doors were quite loose and the chimney-pieces had to be fastened together. Several letters were sent to the defendant who promised to look after the defects, but he never came to the house. The Municipality threatened him with summonses.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: The Municipality complained of the water-courses. He approached the defendant on the appearance of the outside of certain villas he had built. He thought £1,760 sufficient for the job according to the specifications. The conversation about the indifferent plastering took place before April when witness pointed out that the weather wall was not done in pure cement. The foot-path defendant constructed was not to make up for the cement work. Witness would not have paid on a final certificate from his architect, but he paid on a letter from the architect saying that the defendant was short of money and if the witness paid the defendant would remedy the defects. Defendant never asked witness to have the weather wall made 14 inches. Up to June 27 witness did not write to defendant about the defects, because the defendant knew all about it. Witness told Mr. Poole, the architect, in July, about the defects not being rectified, and Mr. Poole got a clerk of the works and a master builder to come and examine the buildings, and they drew up a schedule of defects.

Re-examined by Mr. Alexander: The defects he referred to were defects that were there when the building was handed over by the defendant. The painters were still working in February. The promissory note was made payable at a date when the defects should have been made right.

Louisa McCarthy stated her husband signed the contract for her, and the defendant was aware of that. In April Mr. Poole, the defendant, and witness's husband examined the building. Her husband complained of the floors, the plastering and the painting. The back part of the house was damp at the present moment.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: The defendant did not say that he wanted to settle the case. A week before Christmas the defendant advised her to withdraw the case as it had no foundation. The leakage took place long before June. She selected the window fasteners herself. She never told the workmen that she was satisfied with the work.

Vivian Poole, architect's assistant, employed by Messrs. Baker and Masey, stated that he drew the plans and supervised the work for the villas. At the beginning of the contract in September the defendant borrowed £60 from the plaintiff. Witness never granted a final certificate for the work. As a matter of fact at the beginning of the year he had to draw the defendant's attention to the omission of a parapet. In March the defendant came to him for money, stating that he was hard up, and witness gave him a note to the plaintiff asking him to pay the balance, and that the defendant would put the defects right. The main defects were the plastering, the painting, and the flashing. In April witness took the defendant to the house to point out the defects to him. The houses were very damp. There was only about 10 per cent. cement in the plastering. The defendant guaranteed in three months to put right the defects. The house had not in point of fact been completed according to the contract.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: The floors were got in so quickly that he could not say whether the sleeper walls were put in or not. The floors shook considerably. The defendant was prepared to swear that he had put in sleeper walls and was willing to take up the flooring on witness's suggestion, but the plaintiff did not wish to go to the inconvenience. The whole of the external painting was bad, and it was represented to the defendant that he should do the work over again. The defendant agreed, but failed to do so. Witness called on the defendant within a week after he had been paid, to urge him to proceed with the work. There were about a dozen holes in the roof, and the defendant's attention was drawn to this, but he failed to rectify it. The omission of the skirting was also pointed out. The guttering could not, as the buildings were constructed, be put up. The defendant somehow got his roof too high. It was pointed out to the defendant that as the guttering would not go along, lead flashing must be put, and the defendant promised to have it done, but he failed to keep his promise. The guttering was on the house in November before the contract time expired. He inspected the building once a week. He knew of no arrangement by which the chimney pots put up were to be substituted for the flashing left out. The only way to put the floors right was to take them up, and put sleeper walls in. The painter said he had done the painting according to specification, but witness told him that he must do all the external painting. The holes in the iron roof were about three-sixteenths of an inch in diameter. He did not believe the cement used was better than what was specified.

Re-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness never gave a final certificate, nor did he ever give a certificate that the work had been done in a proper and workmanlike manner. Witness never heard anything of the chimney pots taking the place of the lead flashings, the lead flashings were indispensable.

David Francis Ellis, clerk of works to Messrs. Baker and Masey, architects, who examined the premises at the request of Mr. Poole, in July 26, stated that he drew up the schedule of defects. The villas were indifferently finished, the principal defects being the omission of the flashings on the roof, owing to this omission the houses were damp. The outside painting was very bad, and the plastering, he concluded, was 10 of sand to 1 of lime. Witness, Mr. Orr, and Mr. Ketteringham estimated that it would take £169 18s. 6d. to put the houses in proper order.

Cross-examined by Mr. Struben: Witness was employed by the same firm as Mr. Poole. The account put in showed the value put in the defects in the schedule. Witness considered all the prices fair, but had not itemised them; Mr. Orr would speak as to the prices. The cisterns were not erected according to the plan, and the back doors were not according to specifications. Witness could swear that he could see daylight through the ceiling. The painting was bad throughout, and not according to specifications.

Mr. Struben cross-examined the witness at considerable length as to an excessive estimate, and reverting back to item six asked him why it appeared on the list when it was not on the specifications.

[Maasdorp, J.: You have asked him that before.]

Witness: Yes, my lord, and we have wasted some time over it. I have already explained that Mr. Orr will be able to give the detailed statement.

Re-examined by Mr. Upington: Mr. Orr made an examination of the premises quite independently of witness, who checked the items. From his general experience, the cost to remedy the defects was very reasonable.

Robert Chas. Orr, architect and quantity surveyor, stated that in January, at the request of the plaintiff, he examined the two villas, and made a careful examination. He took up floors, and discovered a number of defects that were not in the schedule. He had compared his report with the schedule attached to the declaration. He considered it would cost £169 to remedy the defects.

Cross-examined by Mr. Struben: It was twelve months after the villas were completed that he made the examination, but twelve months would not change cement into lime. He could judge the painting just as well as he could a couple of days after it had been put on. The painting was in a wretched state throughout. There might have been a good many arrangements made between the defendant and the plaintiff that he knew nothing about. The paper was discoloured, clearly showing dampness. Paper could be discoloured without dampness, but there was no doubt that the cause of the discolouration in this case was dampness. The fact that it was a very severe winter last season he did not consider as the cause, as he thought it unnecessary in the case of these villas. Five or six sheets on the iron roof were apparently old sheets. The class of work done in South Africa would make an architect's hair stand at Home, and there was a fair specimen of bad work here. Every matter in the schedule was important to the plaintiff, as some time or other he would have to remedy the defects.

In further cross-examination, witness explained that the doors were badly constructed, and could easily be pulled away from the hangings.

Mr. Struben: They could be pulled away by a weak man?

Witness: Oh, yes; you could pull them away easily.

Walter Ketteringham, builder and contractor, who made a joint examination of the premises with the last witness, also gave evidence. He considered that the schedule was a reasonable one. He agreed generally with the report of Mr. Orr.

In cross-examination, witness said that he would have liked, as a builder, to take the contract at the price the defendant charged. He thought he should have made £150 to £200 out of the contract. He could have built such a pair of houses for £1,500.

Charles John Howard, commercial traveller, tenant of one of the houses, also gave evidence.

Frederick Visser, the defendant, stated that in March he went over the houses with Mr. Poole, the evening before he went to the plaintiff's house. He could not see the plaintiff on the evening of the 17th, and next morning the plaintiff told him that he must bring the final certificate. The architect complained of the capping, but he had seen it in the course of construction three months before, and said nothing about it. Leading into the backyard, there were a few cracks above the door and witness had that remedied next morning. The architect a week later said he had sent a final certificate, and gave witness a note for final payment. The following Sunday witness and Mr. Poole went to see a few defects in the house. The plaintiff said that when he walked in the dining-room the glasses jingled, but they did not jingle when witness was there. Witness offered to open the floor, and while Mr. Poole was in favour of this Mrs. McCarthy objected to the removal of her linoleum. Witness had put sleeper piers instead of walls. The plaintiff then said to let that matter stand, and they proceeded into the bathroom, where the painting wanted a final coat. Two days afterwards his men put the matter right. Witness admitted that his men had made a mistake about the external plastering, and offered to have it done again. Mr. McCarthy agreed to the suggestion. Witness put in more shutters than were specified. The extra shutters were worth £5. Witness was asked to paint the place all over again, but said that, on principle, he could not do it. Witness did not choose the colours. Mrs. McCarthy chose the colours. Mr. and Mrs. McCarthy were there every day, and never objected. Mr. Poole did not insist upon the repainting before he gave a certificate. Witness told Mr. McCarthy that he would stand by the work for a further three months beyond the two months. Mr. McCarthy had told him to come for his money before that. Witness had all the defects pointed out rectified. The painter did his work well. He was a man of reputation, and was at present employed on Fletcher's Retail buildings. Mr. Poole and witness went to see Mr. Lansdown, the painter, to ascertain the number of coats of paint. Mr. Lansdown detailed what he had done. Mr. Poole asked Mr. Lansdown to give another coat, as, if not, he was afraid he would not get all his money. Witness said, "Then sue Mr. McCarthy." Mr. Poole did not complain further to Mr.

Lansdown. Next evening witness went to get his payment from Mr. McCarthy on the final certificate of the architect. This was on March 31. Witness gave Mr. McCarthy the final certificate as in previous cases. The paper stated, "Final certificate. The work is now completed, and Mr. Visser is now entitled to final payment." Witness saw McCarthy, and Mr. McCarthy asked him to take £90 cash, and a promissory note for the balance, and that he would allow the bank interest, so that witness would not lose anything. The payment included the extras. Mr. McCarthy said nothing about repainting or cementing the wall. The verbal promise made by witness was for three months. Witness made the promise because he thought Mr. McCarthy considered he had wilfully omitted to cement the wall, and he therefore made the promise to show he did not want to evade responsibility. On June 14 Mr. McCarthy showed him the paper coming loose in the sitting-room. Witness said, "I will come and fix it up." Witness did so the next day. Mr. McCarthy was mistaken in saying he did not see witness after April. On June 21 Mr. McCarthy said there was damp coming in the kitchen. Witness examined it, and found a few small spots. It was driven in by the rain. The walls were nine-inch walls.

Witness: I pointed out to Mr. and Mrs. McCarthy that these walls should be 14-inch walls.

[Maasdorp, J.: Cannot you build a 9-inch wall to keep the damp out?]

Witness: Sometimes you can, and sometimes you cannot, my lord.

Examination continued: Witness suggested the alteration, as he thought it dangerous as regards damp. Witness offered to do it without cost. Plaintiffs, however, did not agree to the suggestion. There were very heavy rains about that time, and many houses were damp. He could not say if any houses fell down in consequence of the rains. A week later, on June 28, witness received a letter from Mr. McCarthy saying he would be pleased to meet him early as possible with reference to the houses built at Observatory. Witness replied saying that he did not know what was wanted, and was sorry he did not give particulars. Witness had heard of leakages, and wished to know why he had not been informed before, so that it could have been attended to; he had suggested the painting to Mrs. McCarthy. Mr. McCarthy said nothing about defects between March and June 28. On July 5 witness received a registered letter from Mr. McCarthy, saying he was sorry witness did not come to see the condition of the houses, owing to bad workmanship, and saying he would stop payment of the promissory note, and that unless the defects were repaired, he would take action. Witness replied that his liability had ceased, but was willing to do what he could to rectify any defects that were his fault. Mr. Poole then called, and said Mr. McCarthy had complained about the north wall not being cemented, and a lot of other things. Mr. Poole advised him to see Mr. McCarthy, as Mr. McCarthy was going to take him into the Supreme Court. Witness told him he did not see why he was called upon to do things that he had no need to do, and pointed out he had received his final certificate, and had been paid. Mr. Poole admitted that an arrangement had been made about the cement wall, but said Mr. McCarthy denied it. Witness was taken at great length through the various items in the schedule of damages, and maintained that many items were only a matter of a few shillings or so, and in other cases where things were said to be broken or inferior, they were not so. The ridging at the junction was water tight. The architect never told him it was badly fixed. The ridge could be taken down very carefully without any risk. A carpenter did not require a mate to put up ridging. The whole of the ridging could be refixed for £5. There was no disadvantage in placing the tanks where they were at present. When witness inspected the house, Mrs. McCarthy showed him a window fastener loose. The covers of the cisterns must have been twisted. The iron sheets were perfectly new when he put them on the roof. The best of paint might accidentally get a trifle gritty. Plenty of painters would be glad to re-do the external painting for £20. It was entirely wrong to suggest that he was hard up during March; he had between £100 to £300 in the bank.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: He kept no book in connection with the building; he only kept rough memoranda. He was not hard pressed for money at the time. The bank had ample security for the overdrafts which appeared against him in 1903. The architect never gave him a certificate to the effect that the work was completed in a workmanlike manner. He brought no vouchers to show what he spent on the building. The architect was not telling the truth when he said that from time to time he handed witness slips of defects. The plastering was already done, not according to contract, before the suggestion was made about substituting the garden path. The mason failed to get the specification before the plastering was done. He saved nothing by putting in the sleeper piers instead of the sleeper walls. The plaintiffs accepted the cisterns without covers, and therefore he was not liable. He did not tell his foreman that the mixing of the plastering was not according to the specifications. He had repaired some cracks, but others appeared. It never struck him to ask for a written authority for the deviations he had made in the contract. It was in the specifications that he was not to deviate without the authority of the architect.

The guttering was not continued on account of the roof having been raised. He did not agree with the other witnesses that flashing was omitted because of this deviation, or with Mr. Poole that it was the most serious omission in the whole complaint. He did not fulfil his promise to go and look at certain leakages in June on account of a letter he subsequently received from the plaintiff. There was an interval of a week from the time he gave the promise up to the day he received the letter, but it did not rain materially during that period or he had not sufficient time. All the papers and the books in connection with the building had been destroyed. Up to February 7 he had never stated that he regarded Mr. Poole's letter to the plaintiff as a final certificate. The papers had been destroyed by a quantity of paint having been spilt, and rough notes in the book produced were made before the catastrophe. It was merely as a matter of courtesy that he offered to do any repairs, but after he consulted his attorney he decided not to do so as he might prejudice his case.

Re-examined by Mr. Struben: He offered to do repairs that were necessary during the time he was at the building. The terms of Mr. Poole's letter were that he was entitled to final payment as the work was completed. Mrs. McCarthy told witness that it was her house, and that she would order any alterations she wished. When witness received the final payment from Mr. McCarthy he did not complain of anything.

By Maasdorp, J.: The architect must have noticed a deviation in the doors.

Proceeding, under re-examination, witness said that on Mrs. McCarthy's instructions and with Mr. Poole's knowledge, he omitted the parapets.

By Maasdorp, J.: It was only after the house was completed that he noticed the failure to cement the north wall, and then he suggested making the path instead without any charge. Previously he had arranged with Mrs. McCarthy to construct the path for which he was to be paid, and it was when the plastering was pointed out to him that he offered to make the path free.

Frederick Gibson, in the employ of Smith and Cochrane, stated that he supplied paint to Mr. Lansdowne in October, 1903. The paint was the "genuine quality."

Cross-examined by Mr. Uppington: A great deal depended on the mixing of the paint. Too much turpentine would destroy it altogether.

William Lansdowne, painter, who worked on the cottages, stated that one villa was completed inside about the 2nd December, and the other inside about a week later. He never saw an architect on the work. The defendant did not complain of anything. The first time he saw the architect was the 28th March, when he called to see witness with the defendant. Mr. Poole pointed out a few little things, and told witness to go and see Mrs. McCarthy, who would point them out in detail. Witness refused to give the paint another coat as he had put the specified number of five on. He used the best of material. His work also included the paper hanging, which was all dry when he left it. After he had seen Mr. Poole and the defendant witness went to see Mrs. McCarthy; and in two hours he remedied the little defects complained of.

Cross-examined by Mr. Uppington: For the painting by itself £65 was his price, and he arrived at that price by looking at the job as a whole. He drew the defendant's attention to the omission of the paper hanging and the glazing, and witness did it, and charged £5 for it. When his attention was drawn to the putty being a bit full, he discovered that in one case the glass was too small. The last day he was at the job was January 9. The tenant came in later than that, but he did not recollect being asked by the lady to leave off work. He would swear that the doors produced received five coats of paint. At the same time he had another job at Camp's Bay, which he had to give some attention to. Approximately he could not give what the job at Camp's Bay was worth. It was possible there might have been little omissions. When he was at the house he noticed the external painting wanted a coat of varnish, which was the duty of the defendant's men. The defendant never complained of witness's painting; not even as a joke. He did remember the defendant saying that the painting was bad along with the other work, and he (witness) would have to be subpoenaed. That was no joke to witness. Two days before he was subpoenaed he went on his "dignity" to see Mrs. McCarthy to explain that no negligence could be attributed to him. He was proud of the painting of these villas, and considered it was a credit to him.

Re-examined by Mr. Struben: The materials came from a good firm, the work was well done, and he had not made an exorbitant profit on the job. He could see no difference in the work done by himself, and that done by the others. When he had the interview with Mrs. McCarthy two days before the trial, she did not complain of the painting. The defendant himself, did not complain of witness's work; he was merely transmitting the complaint from the McCarthys. He would make the external painting all right for £10.

By Maasdorp, J.: All the teak work required varnishing. Had that been done in the first instance the work would have kept better. He repudiated the suggestion that he had done the job cheap by making the paint thin.

Alexander Denny, a painter, who was working with the last witness at the job, stated that Mr. Lansdowne never complained to him of his portion of the work.

Cross-examined by Mr. Uppington: Witness mixed some of the paints. A little could be saved by making the painting thin.

By Maasdorp, J.: It would be no advantage to him to put on less coats than he was instructed to do.

Thomas Polson, mason, stated that he heard the plaintiff suggest several alterations in the plan to the defendant. To comply with the Municipal Regulations they had to increase the width for the foundations. That made the work more expensive, but he could not say if anything was allowed for that. The specification called for three of sand to one of lime, and 10 per cent. of cement for the other walls, but it was actually mixed two of sand to one of lime, and 10 per cent. of cement.

Cross-examined by Mr. Uppington: The heading of the certificate was "Final certificate." It was signed by the architect. Mr. Poole only once complained to witness about the work. Witness was not asked about the certificate until the case was mentioned.

David Jacobs, carpenter, who was engaged on the villas, stated that he worked partly on the specifications and partly to the instructions of the defendant. There were no complaints made to him about the work, with the exception of the sleeper walls. The floor was firm.

Cross-examined by Mr. Uppington: The defendant told him that the sleeper walls were to be left out. He reckoned it better to have a better joist. He had no clear recollection of how many sleepers there were in the rooms. The doors that had been inspected by his lordship were good doors. The three doors he had put in were not according to specifications; he put them in on the instructions of the defendant.

John Mitchelmore, builder and contractor, who examined the buildings on the 2nd February this year, considered the job a very fair work of lime plaster. Lime plaster was not supposed to keep out damp. Villas of that description could not by any means be termed a first-class job. It would have been a wiser policy to have 14-inch walls on the weather side. He would re-cement the wall for about £6. Heat in the lime would eat away the paste, and the paper would drop off. Observatory was such a windy place that the dust might have got in just after the painting was done.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He did not consider £1,760 a flash price for the buildings. Assuming that the defects in the plastering were remedied, as Mr. Orr suggested the claim was not exorbitant. If the painting had to be done again, £10 would be sufficient to go round each house outside. The omission of flashing even on a third-rate job, would be an important thing. Witness did not go on a tour of inspection himself; the defendant told him he had got his final certificate, and that was sufficient.

Re-examined by Mr. Struben: Painters were at a great disadvantage in the summer in a district such as Observatory.

By Maasdorp, J.: When they had parapet walls, the flashing must be on the weather side. He would say that about four coats were put on the doors brought into court.

Francis John Freeman, architect, stated that he would not grant a final certificate before he was satisfied the work was completed. It was the ordinary course to rectify defects that appeared before the certificate was given. Looking at the houses generally, after a year, the painting would show the signs of the effects of the summer and winter. As far as he could judge, the internal and external painting were the same. By the general appearance of the woodwork, he would say that it was according to the specifications. With the deviations, the buildings were substantially the same as if carried out strictly to specifications. A deviation could not appear as a defect within the two months allowed after the completion of the contract; it must have been noticed at the time. The cistern covers were worth half-a-crown each. If the cisterns had been fixed according to specifications, the room below would have been flooded. As they were erected at present, it was the custom in houses of that description.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He had 12 years' experience as an architect. He reckoned that after five years' apprenticeship. For that class of building, the specifications were for a good class job. The doors he had seen in the court were certainly not according to specifications. When he went over the building, he noticed a considerable amount of flashing had been omitted. He had allowed for the crack in the wall, which had to be made good before the bad weather. The absence of the lead flashing was a "deviation," not a defect. Before witness examined the building, the defendant told him that he got his final certificate, and it was all right, but he did not necessarily go on a futile examination. The "wily" Visser did not draw his attention to the defects in the iron roofing. It was the usual custom to use the iron on the temporary shed for the roof of the building. He attributed the dampness to a 9-inch wall made of clay, but ordinary plaster would not keep out the damp. As an architect, he would have passed the grate, although it had a little bit of "give." He would allow 2s. each for the "easing" of the doors. He would not say that they required "easing," because there was difficulty in getting them opened and closed. He would not say that the plastering of the Bowden-street wall was according to specifications.

Re-examined by Mr. Struben: He took his prices from quantities of work carried out in 1903. He could hardly agree with Mr. Orr that the doors could be lifted off the hinges.

This closed the evidence.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (February 23rd).

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff sues the defendant, who is a builder by trade, for the recovery of £120, in respect of defects and omissions in a certain building, which it is alleged the defendant failed to complete in accordance with contract and specifications, and the plaintiff further states that the defendant on the 31st of March, 1904, in consideration of the payment of the whole of the contract price promised to rectify and complete the buildings before the 30th of June, but failed to do so. The defendant pleads that he duly performed his part of the contract to the satisfaction of the employer's architect, admitting that there was deviation from the specifications, but saying that these took place at the request of the plaintiff and her architect. The defendant also says that when a settlement was effected on the 30th of March he promised to make good any defects which might appear before the 15th of March, but he received no notice of such defects until the 30th June, 1904. A contract was entered into between the parties on the 7th of September, 1903, by which the defendant agreed, in consideration of the contract price of £1,760, to build for the plaintiff two villas, and to complete them before the 7th day of January, 1904, in accordance with drawings and specifications under the superintendence and to the satisfaction of Mr. Poole, the employer's architect. The plaintiff agrees that, subject to and on the performance by the defendant of this contract, that he will pay the contractors the said sum of £1,760—in such sums and at such time or times as the architect grants his certificate for work actually done and completed, always retaining 20 per cent. of such amount in bond, which is to be kept in hand for two months after completion to make good any defects which may occur in the contractor's work. I may at once refer to two of the conditions contained in the specifications, which bear upon the issues in this case, which are to the following effect: The contractor is not to deviate from the drawings or specification, or excavate extra work unless upon the authority of the architect. No order from any other person will be recognised as a claim for extra payment. The contractor to be responsible for and to make good all defects, shrinkage, or other fault which may appear in the work within a period of two months after completion. The defendant set about constructing the buildings, which form the subject of the contract, and on the 4th of December he got a certificate from the architect certifying that a sum of £600 is due to him on account of work done, and upon the face of this document it appears that two certificates had been granted previously for the payment of the respective sums of £360 and £300. On the 31st day of December a further certificate was granted certifying that £250 was due to the defendant on account of work done. I may say at once that although there may be cases where interim certificates, granted in pursuance of the express terms of the contract, and expressing approval of and satisfaction with the work done up to date, may be binding on the employer and debar him from thereafter questioning the quality of such work, I am of opinion that the present case does not fall under that category. The certificates above-mentioned are merely the ordinary progress certificates, intimating to the employer that there is sufficient value upon the premises to entitle the builder to an advance on account and leaving the question of defects open for adjustment upon the granting of the final certificate, and subject to the maintenance clause. These certificates will, however, have an important bearing upon points where the witnesses disagree in their evidence. The decision of the case will depend almost entirely upon what occurred on the 30th of March. The defendant's case is that upon that day he delivered to the plaintiff's husband, who acted for the plaintiff in the execution of the contract, a final certificate—by the architect—that the work was completed, and received in final settlement of the contract price some cash payment and a promissory note for the balance, amounting to £115 17s. 6d., which note was subsequently paid upon its due date. The plaintiff adduces evidence to the effect that the settlement was effected, not upon a final certificate, but upon a letter from the architect stating that the defendant had promised to put right a number of defects brought to his notice, and in consideration of such promise McCarthy might pay him the balance due. The Court has to decide whether the document in question was a final certificate or not. If the builder were the plaintiff in this case, the burden of proving that he had received a final certificate would have rested upon him, but circumstances have altered the position of the parties. Upon the document in question a final payment was made by the plaintiff, and in the ordinary course of business this document should be in the custody of the plaintiff. However, it could not be traced by either party, and secondary evidence of its contents was admitted. It is clear that at the time the document was written some defects did exist which had been pointed out to the builder, and which he agreed to rectify, but the defendant says he proceeded at once to remedy them, and it was not until he had done so that he was paid by the plaintiff. This circumstance would not in my opinion deprive the instrument of the character of a final certificate. The circumstances of the case, Lord Bateman v. Thompson, are in many respects similar to those in this case. There the architect wrote to the employer passing the work, and he also wrote a letter to the builder saying: "I have written to Lord Bateman passing the Court and Uphampton, excepting the square of glass to the former and the slates to the latter." These defects were afterwards made satisfactory. In that case, notwithstanding the qualification contained in the letter, it was regarded as a certificate of satisfaction upon the specified omissions being rectified. It is quite clear that payment was not made in the present case upon the mere production of the document, but a few days afterwards, when the defendant says he has made good the defects pointed out to him. It is quite clear that the defects discussed at that time are not the alleged defects contained in the schedule to the declaration. The architect says in his evidence—"I made out a list of defects at the time, and handed it to the defendant. The schedule in the declaration is not based upon my list of defects, but upon an examination undertaken at my request by Mr. Ellis, our clerk of the works." I mention this to meet the contention that it is very unlikely that the architect would grant a final certificate with defects valued in the declaration at £120, and stated during the trial to be upwards of £200. The defects there valued were not in the contemplation of the architect or employer at all at the time of the settlement. They were then dealing with matters very trivial in comparison. They were dealing with a full knowledge of the omissions, alterations and deviations which they had consented to, whereas Ellis and Orr, without regard to this, made an examination of the buildings, and put down as defects whatever did not agree with the specifications. I feel quite satisfied that if McCarthy had regarded as defects what are put put down in the schedule as such he would never have made a settlement. I come to the conclusion that on the 30th of March the defendant delivered to McCarthy a document certifying that the works were completed to the satisfaction of the architect. It was contended for the defendant that the buildings were completed in the 15th of January, and consequently his liability to make good defects lapsed on the 15th of March. But, in my opinion, the work cannot be regarded as completed until the architect has expressed his satisfaction seeing that the work had to be completed to his satisfaction. That view was taken in the case of Cunliffe v. Hampton Wick Local Board, reported in the 2nd volume of Hudson, page 265. That being so, the maintenance clause ran for two months from the 24th March, 1904, when the certificate was handed by the architect to the builder, until the 24th of May, 1904. The defendant was in terms of the clause responsible to make good defects appearing before the 24th of May. The next question to decide is whether the items in the schedule are defects in terms of this clause, and did they appear before the 24th of May. I shall confine my attention to the items appearing in the schedule to the declaration. It was proposed at the trial to extend the list, but when it was shown that that could only be done on condition that the trial was postponed, and on plaintiff paying the costs of the day, he preferred to go on with his case as it stood. That excludes from consideration the structure of the floor which appeared to be an important item, but I desire to say that if it formed part of the plaintiff's claim, I should have come to the conclusion that the matter was discussed and disposed of when the certificate was granted and payment made. The same may be said with respect to all the larger items on the list. As an example, I shall take the items of plastering. The defendant says that when the mistake of omitting cement on the north wall was discovered he offered to rectify it or to continue cement path in lieu thereof, and the plaintiff accepted the latter alternative. The architect stated that when he went over the house with the defendant and McCarthy something was said about the plastering, but he understood from the defendant that the garden paths had been put in to make up for it. Some controversy arose as to the time when this alleged agreement came to the knowledge of the architect. However that may be, the effect of his evidence was that the cement was no longer insisted upon either by him or McCarthy. The garden paths were in value the equivalent of the cement, and I am satisfied the matter was settled to the satisfaction of the architect. A claim is made for the removal of the water cisterns to a place under the roof. The defendant says they are in their present situation with consent of the plaintiff and knowledge of the architect when he gave his final certificate, and he is supported by the fact that the claim in this respect was, in the first instance, only for cistern covers, without any complaint as to situation. Defendant says part of the parapet was given up by the plaintiff for ridging, and in lieu of portion of the flushing he put up chimney pots as an equivalent. Now, all these alterations are obvious to the most casual observer, and existed when the architect gave his progress certificates, and although the progress certificates are not conclusive, still they could not have been granted without an examination of the works by the architect, under whose superintendence in terms of the contract the work was carried on. I therefore come to the conclusion that the architect had full knowledge of these obvious alterations when he granted his final certificate, and that he sanctioned them, and they cannot be regarded as defects appearing during the period of maintenance. These remarks apply, amongst other items, to the back doors. It cannot be said that when the architect passed these doors as satisfactory that he was not aware that they were a deviation, and if he passed them as a deviation he must have been satisfied with the reasons for the deviation. It is true that deviations could not be made without the authority of the architect, but subsequent approval serves the same purpose. This case has been largely contested upon expert opinion, which was of little service. The deviations from the specifications are glaring, and required very little expert evidence to establish, and if they were not sanctioned the defendant's liability would have been unquestionable. Unfortunately, the plaintiff comes into Court upon the strength of expert opinion when his experts were not in possession of the true facts of the case. I have said that in my opinion the period covered by the maintenance clause expired on the 24th of May, 1904. The question of defects was raised after the completion of the work in June; that upon the authority of Lord Bateman v. Thompson was too late. The question was raised upon the 27th of June, when over the three months contended for by the plaintiff had expired. But I may say that in my opinion the promise respecting the three months was a gratuitous promise, without consideration, and not legally binding on the defendant. My finding that the larger items in the schedule were deviations sanctioned by the architect's certificate, and the smaller items of defects did not appear and were not complained of within the period of the maintenance clause, would generally dispose of the schedule; but I desire to say specifically that I am not satisfied that the damp walls are due to any fault on the part of the builders, or that the grates have not been properly fixed, or the outside painting badly done. The expert opinion is very evenly balanced, and plaintiff, who must prove his case, has failed to do so. These remarks will cover a number of smaller items. On the whole, the plaintiff has failed to establish his claim, and judgment must be for the defendant, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

FEDERAL SUPPLY AND COLD { 1905.
STORAGE V. COTTCHIN. } Feb. 9th.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate.
Order granted.

BRITISH GENERAL ELECTRIC CO. AND OTHERS V. TORQUE ELECTRIC EN-GINEERING CO.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the final adjudication of the estates of the defendants, John E. Neale, W. S. Forbes, S. B. Griffiths, F. Biliotti, and G. F. Herron.

Mr. Alexander, on behalf of the defendant Herron, opposed, and read an affidavit by Herron denying that he was in any way responsible for the debts of the company or its members, and saying that he should not be joined as defendant.

Mr. Gardiner read a replying affidavit by Walter Bernard Phelp, the manager of the South African branch of the plaintiff firm, stating that the conduct of the defendant Herron suggested that he was a partner in the defendant firm. The defendant firm was intimately associated with the firm of Neil, Herron. For practical and business purposes, the firms of the Torque Engineering Company and Neil, Herron, were identical. Neil was now believed to be in the Transvaal.

G

Mr. Alexander said that he had an answering affidavit dealing with certain new matters raised by the plaintiffs.

Mr. Gardiner objected to any further affidavit being put in by the defendant, seeing that the affidavits had been closed.

Mr. Alexander submitted that the plaintiff's manager had raised new matters that did not appear on the summons, and that his client was entitled to answer these allegations.

[Buchanan, J.: It is not admissible, Mr. Alexander.]

Mr. Alexander argued that there was no proof that his client was a partner, and that the provisional order should be discharged, with costs, so far as he was concerned.

Buchanan, J., said that the estate of the company would be finally adjudicated as insolvent, with leave reserved to Herron who said that he was not one of the partners in the firm, to take action to have it declared that he was not a partner in the insolvent estate.

KADIE V. ABASS.

Mr. Alexander moved for the final adjudication of defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

SELLAR BROS. AND OTHERS V. SAND BROS.

SPRIGG AND CO. AND OTHERS V. PEASE AND CO.

Mr. P. T. S. Jones moved for the final order of adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent. He also applied for the appointment of Alfred Newton Foot as provisional trustee, with power to sell certain cattle in the partnership estate.

Final order granted. The second part of the application was ordered to stand over until the papers had been filed with the Registrar.

Later on, Mr. Jones said that the papers had been filed, and he renewed his application.

Order granted as prayed.

VAN BENEN AND OTHERS V. ATTAWAY.

Mr. Alexander moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

SCHULTZE AND CO. V. LABAHAN.

Mr. Russell moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment for £55 18s. 9d., and £11 1s. costs.

Defendant denied that he owed anything to the plaintiffs, and said that he had a claim against Kramer and Co.

Mr. Russell said that the defendant had not previously set up a counter-claim.

The matter was ordered to stand over till the 26th February, to enable the defendant to file his counter-claim.

SCHULTZE AND CO. V. LEGGE AND INGRAM.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for provisional sentence for £750, due on a mortgage bond, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also asked for property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

TRADES, MARKETS, AND EXHIBITION COMPANY V. HILDEBRANDT.

Provisional sentence—Illegal contract.

The defendant had agreed to pay the plaintiffs a certain rental in consideration of being allowed to place certain automatic machines within the Exhibition grounds. The police having objected to these machines, the defendant was ordered by the Exhibition authorities to remove them. Defendant having been sued for provisional sentence on a promissory note given by him for balance of rent.

Held, that as this note was a liquid document, provisional sentence must be granted, though possibly defendant might have an action for damages against plaintiffs.

Dr. Rainsford moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £150, with interest and costs.

Mr. Gardiner read an affidavit by the defendant, who stated that on the 12th October he applied to plaintiffs for right to place and operate certain 15 disc automatic machines in the grounds of the Exhibition at Green Point, on payment of £225 as and for rent. The application was granted on the 28th October. He paid £75, being one-third of the total rent. Difficulties occurred in December, and he was ordered to discontinue running the machines by Mr. Dale, who said that the police looked upon the machines as a game of chance.

Dr. Rainsford read a replying affidavit by Mr. Dale, who said that the police having declared the machines to be a game of chance, he had no power but to stop the machines.

Mr. Gardiner submitted that if the police were correct in their attitude towards the machines, the money was not due because the contract was illegal. It was clear that Mr. Dale took the machines with knowledge of any illegality that may have attached to them. Mr. Dale could not now shelter himself behind the plea that he did not think the police would interfere. Mr. Dale did not for a moment raise the point as to whether the machines were to be run for a profit. Counsel contended that, although the manager had a right to order the removal of goods from the Exhibition, he had no right to claim rent for the whole currency of the Exhibition. The plaintiff could not set up the contention that the space should be utilised by the defendant for some other purpose.

Buchanan, J.: According to the written contract put in, the defendant agreed with the Cape Town Industrial Exhibition to hire certain places, upon which to exhibit certain machines. These machines are described in the contract. The rent was fixed at £225, £75 of which was paid down, and a promissory note given to Mr. Dale for the balance of £150. This note has now become due, and has not been paid, and provisional sentence is asked for. Prima facie this is a liquid document. The defendant says that the machines have been condemned by the police as illegal machines, and therefore he is not able to make the profit he otherwise would have made by their use by the public, in other words, he may have a claim for damages. This seems to me, on the application for provisional sentence, to be no defence. I will not go further at the present stage. Judgment will be given for the plaintiff as prayed, with costs.

NORDEN V. KETS.

Mr. Gardiner moved to have a rule nisi made absolute calling on the respondent to show cause why he or his agent should not be restrained from advertising the sale of applicant's goods and chattels in the "Government Gazette," or proceeding therein until the appeal now pending between Messrs. Bosman, Powis and Co. and Jos. B. Norden, shall have been disposed of. Counsel said that the appeal was set down for the 20th inst., and he suggested that the motion should stand over.

Mr. Searle, K.C., for the respondent said that they wished to have a settlement made as early as possible. He thought it would be clear from the affidavits that the whole difficulty was due to Mr. Norden's own fault.

The matter was ordered to stand over until the last day of term.

LIGHTFOOT V. LIGHTFOOT.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for an order declaring the respondent, Helena Gertrude Lightfoot, incapable of managing her affairs and appointing a curator. Mr. P. S. T. Jones appeared for the curator ad litem.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for the removal of the hearing of trial to the next sitting of the Circuit Court at Aliwal North.

Application granted.

JEANNERET V. ESTATE SHARPE.

Master of Supreme Court—Proof of debt.

This was an application on notice of motion, under section 27 of Ordinance 6 of 1843, brought by Arthur Henry Jeanneret, calling upon the trustee in the insolvent estate of Hugh Ross Sharpe to show cause why an order should not issue authorising the Master to admit proof of debt for £600 against the insolvent estate, being amount of money lent by applicant to the insolvent, with interest reckoned at one-fourth of the net profits of the tailoring business carried on by the said H. R. Sharpe in Cape Town, and for taxed costs in an action instituted against the said Sharpe; or, in the alternative, for leave to proceed against the insolvent estate for recovery of the said sum, and for costs of the application. Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the applicant; Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the respondent.

Mr. Jones read an affidavit by the applicant, who stated that on the 1st September, 1903, he advanced to Hugh Ross Sharpe £600, for the purpose of extending his business in Burmester's Buildings, and that he was to receive one-quarter of the net profits of the business as interest on the loan. On the 15th February, 1904, deponent obtained a provisional receipt pending fuller agreement to be drawn up and signed. On the 29th February a further agreement was drawn up and signed. Subsequently, on the 8th April, 1904, deponent wrote to Sharpe requesting him to furnish him with a statement of the profits of the business, showing the amount due to him. He did not receive such statement. Deponent caused summons to be issued against Sharpe on the 23rd November, 1904, and thereupon the latter surrendered his estate. At the second meeting of creditors, deponent presented his claim, but it was not allowed by the Master, on the ground that there was a partnership between Sharpe and deponent. Applicant denied that he advanced the money except by way of loan, and said that at no time had he had control over the management of the business. Subsequent to the first loan, in December, Sharpe applied to him for a further loan of £153, but this he refused.

Mr. Searle read an affidavit by Mr. T. H. Hazell, the trustee in the insolvent estate, who stated that among the papers found in the estate was a receipt signed by the applicant and insolvent for £500, paid over to the insolvent by the applicant. This receipt set out that the money was in consideration of applicant being admitted to partnership. An affidavit by the insolvent stated that not only was a partnership contemplated, but was absolutely entered into. The amount of £600 was put in by the applicant for his share in the partnership. The receipt put in by the trustee was signed by the applicant, and showed that he had become a partner. Deponent emphatically denied that the money was put into the business at his request, and said that it was the applicant's own urgent desire that he should be admitted as a partner. The applicant was to receive one-quarter of the profits as his share of the business, but not by way of interest.

Mr. Jones read an answering affidavit by the applicant, who stated that, with reference to the receipt produced by respondents, he was unaware that he ever signed such a document. It would appear to him that the latter part of the wording had been added in after the receipt was signed. Deponent denied that he had requested to be admitted to the business.

Buchanan, J., said that the original receipt should be produced. It was not annexed to the affidavits.

Mr. Searle said that he was not in possession of the receipt, and he supposed it was in the hands of the respondent's attorneys, Messrs. Friedlander and Du Toit.

Mr. Jones submitted that the documents clearly showed that there was no partnership between Jeanneret and Sharpe, and that the applicant was entitled to prove against the insolvent estate.

Mr. Searle submitted that the matters were such as should not be decided upon motion, and that the applicant should proceed by way of action. Counsel relied on the recent case of Davidson v. Auret (15 C.T.R., 21). The documents were, to say the least, very peculiar, and the Court would require evidence in order to construe them.

Mr. Jones having been heard in reply,

Buchanan, J., said that the document referred to, and which was questioned, must be produced to the Court at once. The case would stand over until the document was produced, and he would give judgment to-morrow (Friday) morning.

Postea (February 10.)

Buchanan, J.: This is an application to authorise the registration of a proof of debt, which was rejected by the Master. The papers were not fully put before the Court yesterday, but now they have been produced. The Master rejected the proof of this debt upon a receipt, which has now been put in. The genuineness of this document has been impugned, and certainly it is contradicted by other documents made about the same time, and which documents were not before the Master. After seeing the alleged receipt, and comparing it with the other documents, as the matter at present stands, there is not sufficient grounds for rejecting the claim of the applicant. An order will, therefore, be granted for the admission of the applicant's proof of debt, with costs. If the trustee, or any of the creditors of the insolvent estate wish to have this claim expunged, leave is reserved to them to bring an action to set aside the proof if so advised. For the present, I will not make any further comments on the documents produced.

[Applicant's Attorney: P. Wrensch; Respondent's Attorneys: Friedlander
and Du Toit.]

Ex parte THE CAPE DISTRICT MUTUAL BUILDING SOCIETY.

Mr. Russell moved for leave to sell certain property for a sum less than the reserved price fixed by the Sheriff.

After hearing the report of the Sheriff, Buchanan, J., said that the Sheriff would be authorised to receive the offer of £700 for the property, which was £25 below the reserve price fixed by him.

GARDINER AND EASTON V. NEW ZEALAND STEAMSHIP CO.

This was an application for an order authorising the refund of a sum of £170 lodged by the applicants in terms of an order of Court.

The affidavit of Mr. C. Gardiner stated that his firm were ordered, on the 29th September, to lodge the sum of £170, pending an action to be brought by the respondents. The matter arose out of a shipment of cattle to the applicants by the steamship Nordkyn. The respondents did not cause a summons to be issued until the 20th October. A question was then raised as to the respondents providing security for costs. The declaration of the respondents had not been filed.

The answering affidavit of Mr. Eradfield, of the firm of Messrs. Van Zyl and Buissinne, stated that the summons was delayed at the request of the applicants. The declaration was being drawn at the time the notice of motion was being served. Delay had also taken place, because the respondents had been called upon to provide security for costs. It would also be necessary to take certain evidence on commission.

The replying affidavit of Mr. A. C. Fuller, attorney, having been read, Mr. Close (for the applicants) submitted that the applicants were entitled to repayment of the money, which was lodged in court on a distinct condition, viz., that the respondents should commence an action forthwith.

Sir H. Juta (for the respondents) said that the state of affairs which the affidavits disclosed was the state of affairs in December, when the motion was in the list for hearing. The pleadings had now been closed.

Buchanan, J.: This matter cannot be allowed to drag on indefinitely. The parties now appear to be ready to go to trial. The plaintiff must go to trial within a month from this date, failing which the money will be repaid to the defendants. The order will be for the repayment of this money, unless the plaintiffs go to trial within a month of to-day, or some further order of Court is made. As to the costs of this application, if the plaintiffs do not go to trial within one month, they will have to pay the costs of this application. If the case be heard in the meantime, then the question of costs will be decided at the trial.

Insolvent Ordinance—Rehabilitation—Release from sequestration.

This was an application upon notice of motion for an amendment of a certain order of Court granted under the Insolvency Ordinance. Mr. Close was for the applicants; Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the respondents.

Mr. Close stated that some time ago the respondents, who were insolvent, applied to this Court for an order of discharge. No meetings of creditors had been held, no trustee was elected, and therefore the procedure under the Insolvency Ordinance could not be followed. When the order of discharge was granted, the respondents, as a matter of fact, received from the Registrar, what was called an order of rehabilitation. Upon this order of rehabilitation, the respondents, when they were sued in the Magistrate's Court at Oudtshoorn by the applicants for £200, balance of a promissory note, were discharged from all liabilities for debts. The applicants said that the order of rehabilitation was granted in error, and that that error should be rectified.

Affidavits filed on both sides were read from which it appeared that the applicants said that the order of court only had been intended to operate as a release of the respondents from sequestration, while the respondents said that the order of Court was not inaccurate.

Postea (March 1st).

Mr. Searle, in the course of argument, quoted the case of Simon and Jackson, decided in the Transvaal Courts. He urged that the Court had power to, and did in this instance grant an order of discharge. Either the order of the Court had no effect at all, or it means the discharge of the insolvent. It was not now, he submitted, open to the applicant, after lying by for months, to move in this form to amend the order. Such procedure was wholly irregular, and was not in accordance with any rule of Court. The Court could only act upon motion for review or appeal, and this was neither. It was neither of these procedures, and there was no other procedure by which the matter could be brought before the Court.

[Buchanan, J.: It is not a matter of review or appeal; it is a matter of amending the Court's own order, which has frequently been done.]

Mr. Searle, said he did not remember any case in which it had been done after such a lapse of time, except in the case of clear error. Here other rights—the rights of creditors—might enter into the matter.

Mr. Close, in reply, submitted that the only course open to the applicant was to move to have the order amended. Clearly all the Court intended was to relieve the man from the particular position, and to re-invest him with his estate subject to all his liabilities.

Buchanan, J., in giving judgment said: Under the Insolvency Ordinance there were several descriptions of discharges provided for, and though the term "rehabilitation" was not used in the text of any of our statutes, the term had come to be applied generally to all the different kind of discharges granted by the Court. The certificate provided for under the 117th section of Ordinance No. 6, 1843, when allowed by the Court, had by the 120th section, the effect of discharging the insolvent from liability upon claims proved or proveable upon his estate. The discharge which the Court granted under the 106th section, when the creditors agreed to a composition, reserved to such creditors a claim against the insolvent for the amount of composition agreed upon, and also reserved the rights of preferent creditors, and made provision for the claims of unproved creditors and absentees to the extent of the amount of the composition agreed upon. The release under the 107th section granted upon the payment in full of debts or upon the consent of creditors, does not operate as a discharge from liability of the insolvent or affect the rights of creditors who have not proved. Then again when a discharge has been granted under the 117th section, the insolvent's estate remains vested in the Master or the Trustee for the benefit of creditors. When the discharge is granted under the 106th section or the release is given under the 107th section, the effect is to put an end to the sequestration and to re-invest the estate in the insolvent. There was no statutory provision for the discharge granted in this case, but the practice has grown up for the Court, where no creditors have appeared and no debts have been found to grant a discharge, which has the effect of terminating the sequestration, and re-vesting the estate in the insolvent. This was what occurred in this case, but the order of Court was entered short by the Registrar simply as "rehabilitation granted." It was contended on the authority of a Transvaal decision, that the Court had an inherent power at its discretion to deprive creditors of their rights. I am not prepared to uphold such a contention as a broad proposition of law. But I would point out that the Transvaal statute used the word "rehabilitation," and that it was upon the construction of that statute the decision of the Transvaal Court was based. The Transvaal Court made it clear that in the future at all events, the course to be adopted in cases similar to the one under consideration would be to order the sequestration to be set aside and to place the insolvent in his original position. Here the insolvent had been re-vested with his estate, and when sued in the Magistrate's Court first set up his discharge as a complete bar, and then pleaded that before the release of his estate he had compromised with his creditors for 5s. 3d. in the pound, and that the plaintiff who had consented to such compromise must reduce his claim accordingly. If there was such a compromise agreed upon, it would be grossly inequitable and unjust to allow an insolvent who had thereby induced his creditors to abstain from proving their claims or opposing his discharge, to get back his estate and then to snap his fingers at his creditors and refuse to carry out his agreement, and to shelter himself behind the interpretation he wishes to put on the order. The Magistrate sustained the plea in bar, apparently upon the opinion given by a clerk in the Master's Office of its effect. If the particulars upon which the order had been granted had been before the Magistrate, it would have been clear to him that the rehabilitation was not equivalent to the discharge obtainable under the 117th section of the Ordinance. I do not propose to alter the recorded order of Court, but to make clear its effect, I think the words should be added, "i.e., order of sequestration discharged, and the insolvent re-vested with his estate." This would make the position clear should the plaintiff sue again in the Magistrate's Court for his debt. The Magistrate could then deal with the claim on the merits. As to costs of this application they may be left to depend on the ultimate result of the proceedings in the Magistrate's Court.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

TRIAL CAUSES.

WESTERN WINE AND BRANDY (1905.
CO. V. WAINSTEIN. (Feb. 10th.

This was an action brought by the Western Wine and Brandy Company, of Worcester, against Solomon Wainstein, hotelkeeper, of Dordrecht, to recover a sum of £702 9s., for certain dop and F.C. brandy, supplied to and at the request of the defendant.

The declaration set out that on the 27th May, 1904, plaintiffs supplied to the defendant, at his order, 25 hogsheads of straw-coloured dop brandy and 25 hogsheads of F.C. (dark mellow) brandy, which was to be similar to the stuff supplied on the 19th May. The brandy was to be forwarded, as instructed by the defendant, to him at Dordrecht. The defendant was to sign a draft at 120 days from the arrival of the brandy at Dordrecht, less 5 per cent. discount, the defendant to have the option of returning the wood in which the dop and brandy were sent. The plaintiffs were to deliver the brandy to the Railway Department, at Worcester Station, whereupon, so far as the plaintiffs were concerned, the agreement was completed. A portion of the order was sent on the 6th, 7th, and 8th June, and the remainder on the 8th, 10th, and 11th June, and delivered to the railway station in certain special casks. The price of the brandy with the wood was £702 9s. The plaintiffs had performed their part of the contract, but the defendant, in breach of his part, refused to sign the draft forwarded, and had definitely stated that he refused to pay for the said dop and F.C. brandy, and absolutely refused to perform his part of the contract. The plaintiffs claimed judgment for £702 9s., or, in the alternative, for damages.

The defendant, in his plea, admitted the contract, but denied that the plaintiffs had performed their part of the contract. He found that certain of the six casks of F.C. brandy that he opened did not contain dark mellow brandy, such as the plaintiffs had supplied on the 19th May, and which he had ordered. He said that the brandy was inferior in quality, strength, and flavour. Thereupon, he gave notice to the plaintiffs that he would not accept the brandy, and the other casks were allowed to remain at the railway station. With regard to the dop brandy, defendant said he discovered on the 7th July that the casks were not full, and that there was a shortage which he estimated at three gallons per cask, and he claimed a reduction for it. He had been ready and willing to pay the sum of £177, or sign a promissory note in respect of the dop brandy, which was for 54 casks less estimated shortage, and 5 per cent. discount, and that amount he tendered. He refused to accept the F.C. brandy, but said he had been ready and willing to perform his part of the contract with regard to the wood. In reconvention he claimed the carriage, which he said he paid to the Railway Department on the F.C. brandy, which he was unwilling to take. He also claimed £50 for storing the casks at 6d. per cask per day.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner), for plaintiffs; Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Van Zyl), for defendant.

Hendrik Petrus du Toit, secretary of the plaintiff company, gave evidence as to the receipt of the orders and the de-patch of the liquor. Witness said he had been in the brandy trade for nine years; they had a large number of customers, and especially in the Dordrecht and neighbouring districts. He considered that 25 hogsheads of dop and 25 hogsheads of F.C. brandy was an exceptionally large order for a retail dealer to give. The Excise Act was promulgated on the 31st May. On the 3rd June he received a request from the defendant to forward sharp as much of the order as possible in quarter casks. They had to make arrangements to get quarter casks from the South African Produce and Wine Company. The brandy was delivered to the Railway Department at Worcester, in accordance with the contract. All the casks were in good order, the majority being new ones. On the 8th June he received a wire from the defendant saying that the dop must be good and of straw colour, and asking to be supplied with as much information as possible as to the operation of the new duty on brandy, and whether the duty would be paid by the retailer. On the 11th June the company replied, and pointed out that the duty was only leviable and in force from and after the 1st July, 1904, on which date a return would have to be made to the Excise by the dealer of his stock, and he would have to show his sales at the end of each month. On the 13th June they received a wire from the defendant, "Don't forward any brandy until I advise," to which the company replied on the same day, "All brandy forwarded in accordance with order." Further correspondence followed, in which the defendant objected to F.C. brandy, on the ground that it was not equal to what he had had before, and that it was not in accordance with sample of 10th May, and also that certain of the casks were not full. The brandy, said witness, was of the same quality on both occasions. F.C. brandies varied in colour; in order to mellow the F.C., sweetened matter was put in, and colouring matter was also put in to give colour. That, however, did not affect the quality of the brandy. After the pleadings had been closed, witness went to Dordrecht and took samples of the brandy sent to the defendant, and still lying at the station. He tested the samples by Sykes' hydrometer; the hydrometer was not strictly accurate, and showed the brandy to be weaker than it was. The test showed the brandy to be 24.3 deg. under-proof. He considered that it was a good mellow brandy. Bottles were taken from the casks and sent to the Civil Commissioner at Worcester. Witness afterwards asked the defendant to allow him to take samples of the brandy in his store, which had been sent to him by the firm. Defendant refused permission to allow him to take samples of the later consignment or that of the 19th May. He saw the brandy kept in a side store, but again was refused permission to take samples. Witness went to the place where the defendant kept his F.C. brandy. Defendant shook the casks, and said that they were not full; witness told him that that was not the way to ascertain whether casks were full, and said that the brandy should be weighed. On his return from Dordrecht, witness went to the Civil Commissioner's office at Worcester and saw two sealed bottles of brandy which had been sent from Dordrecht. Witness was accompanied by Mr. Myburgh and others, who tasted the brandy, and then went to the company's offices and tasted the sample of the 19th May. As to the casks, they charged 17s. 6d. per cask to their customers; the arrangement with the defendant was that he could return the casks within a reasonable time.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: The strength of the spirit of wine was the most valuable element in an F.C. brandy. He considered that a brandy showing 24.3 under-proof was a good brandy as good as any other.

By De Villiers, C.J.: The sample of the 19th May was 20 deg. under-proof. F.C. brandy was never sold by his firm according to strength; it was all a matter of quality.

Cross-examination continued: The extent to which a brandy was under-proof would not affect its value, so far as the retailer was concerned. Quality being equal, he would take the stronger brandy. Quality was not entirely a matter of strength; witness was aware that 25 deg. under-proof was the limit allowed under the Food and Drugs Act. The whole of the consignment, both in May and June, was sent from two hogsheads. They kept an average sample from the two hogsheads. It was not the plaintiffs' experience that the demand for brandy from retailers was very great just before the Excise Act came into operation. In a period of six months, they would allow 1½ to 2 gallons for evaporation and absorption upon a cask of 30 gallons.

Henry Day Gibson, Chief Constable of Worcester, gave evidence as to receiving the sealed bottles from Dordrecht, and the opening of the bottles in the presence of Mr. Du Toit, Mr. Hoffman, Mr. Van der Spuy, and others.

Gert Johannes Hoffman, manager and manipulator of the plaintiff company, said that, in compounding F.C. brandy, he always used the same recipe.

In order to make a brandy mellow, they put in sweetening matter, which affected the strength. The brandy for the orders of the 19th May and the 27th May was the same, except that he added some sweetening matter to the brandy for the later order, so as to make it mellow to suit the customer. Witness was present at the gauging when the casks were filled; gaugings were kept (produced); these were checked by the witness. The samples sent from Dordrecht to Worcester were good brandy; he tested the sample at the Civil Commissioner's office, and the sample they had at the office of the 19th May order, and found that they were alike, except that the later consignment was more mellow.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: They only kept one quality of F.C. brandy; the strength varied, but they did not sell brandy by strength. The strength varied from 18 to 20 deg. under proof. The strength of the second brandy was brought down because it was made more mellow, sufficient to account for a difference of 4 points in the strength. He did not think there could be a shortage of 109 gallons upon 34 casks within six months. He did not think that, barring tampering, such a thing could happen.

Professor Hahn, of the South African College, said that if sweetened matter had been added to brandy the result would be to reduce the strength as shown by Sykes's hydrometer. When sweetened matter had been added to brandy he did not think that a Sykes's hydrometer should be used to test the brandy.

S. J. Mostert, clerk in the office of Messrs. Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller, spoke to receiving a sample of brandy sent by Mr. Du Toit, and handing it to Mr. Bosman, of Messrs. Bosman, Powis and Co.

Ferdinand Bosman, employed by Messrs. Bosman, Powis and Co., said that he analysed his firm's brandies, etc. He tasted and analysed the sample received from the last witness. He considered that it was a very good F.C. brandy. He found the strength to be 21.2 under proof. He distilled the brandy.

Witness tasted in court the sample produced of the brandy sent by the plaintiffs to the defendant, and expressed the opinion that it was a good brandy, but slightly inferior to the sample he had previously tasted. The other, he thought, was a sweeter brandy.

Mr. Burton: The sample tested last is that as good as your F.C.?

Witness did not reply.

Mr. Burton: You think it is rather a delicate question?

Witness: Yes, I do. Witness added that the sample was a good brandy; he should say there was a slight difference in favour of the sample. He considered the sample, to his personal taste, to be superior to his firm's brandy.

Witness next tasted a sample from a bottle produced by the defendants, and said that he considered this to be a very good brandy indeed, and to be better than the two samples that he had previously tasted.

Mr Burton: Yes, I thought so.

Mr. Labatte, assistant manager to the plaintiff company, spoke as to the gauging of the brandy sent to the defendant on the order of the 27th May.

Further evidence was given by Roland Myburgh, manager and manipulator of the Van Ryn Wine Co., Worcester, and Archibald Chambers, manipulator of the South African Produce and Wine Co., to the effect that the sample submitted to them by the plaintiffs were good saleable brandies; and Moses Cohen, manager of the Railway Hotel, Middelburg, who said that the F.C. brandy which he received from the plaintiffs in May and June was fairly good brandy.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

Solomon Wainstein (the defendant) said that he received from the plaintiffs on the 19th May, 1904, brandy with which he was pleased, and which sold well. He sent another order on the 27th May for 32 casks of F.C., and opened one of the casks. He supplied people at the bar, but they complained of the quality of the brandy. Witness noticed a difference in the taste, strength, and colour compared with the stuff sent upon the 19th May order. Several customers who had bought bottles of the second lot of brandy brought it back, and complained about it. Witness thereupon sent a note to the Railway Department to stop further delivery of the casks. He had the brandy tested, with the result that it was found that the samples of the later brandy were 24.3 below proof, whereas the old brandy was 16.7 below proof. There were still 32 casks which were unopened. In the casks which witness had opened he estimated that there was an average shortage of about three gallons.

Cross examined by Sir H. Juta: He sold from 10 to 12 hogsheads of brandy in six month. He usually bought 5 to 6 hogsheads of brandy at a time; sometimes he bought 10 hogsheads.

Sir H. Juta: What induced you, all of a sudden, to order 50 hogsheads of brandy?

Witness: I thought perhaps I would not have to pay duty.

So it was on account of the Excise. You thought if you could get 50 hogsheads in before the Act became law you would not have to pay on stocks?—Yes.

Further cross-examined: He did not order the plaintiffs to stop delivery because he found that the retailer would have to pay duty after his sales. He would take the brandy now if the plaintiffs would supply him with brandy of the quality that he ordered. He thought that he would have escaped duty.

By the Court: The direction to stop delivery had some connection with the duty.

Cross-examination continued: He denied that he had refused to give samples of the brandy to Mr Du Toit.

Walter John Hare, manager of the Commercial Hotel, East London, and formerly manager of the defendant's hotel at Dordrecht, said that the 19th May brandy sold very well, and people liked both the flavour and the colour. As to the 27th May brandy, it was found to be not so good in flavour, and people refused it. He was speaking from his experience with the customers at the hotel. The casks appeared to be of short weight because of the noise made by the brandy when they shook the casks.

Henry J. Holworth, storekeeper, of Dordrecht, said that he used to get Colonial brandy by the bottle and at the bar from the defendant. He got brandy from him in the latter part of May and early in June. He also got brandy about the end of June, and early in July; but he afterwards returned it because he found it was not equal to the other. He had seen people refuse brandy in the hotel; he himself had refused it. Witness did not care for Colonial brandy as a rule, but the old brandy was of exceptionally fine quality, and he took rather a liking to it.

Dirk C. Marais, general merchant, Dordrecht, and George Chantler, chief constable, Dordrecht, also gave evidence. The chief constable was asked by Sir H. Juta to taste one of the samples. After doing so, witness observed: "I think very little of it."

Daniel Francis Martin, Excise officer, was next called. At the outset he said he wished to explain to the Court that it was greatly against the wish of the Government that he had been subpoenaed to give evidence in this case. The Government protested against—

[De Villiers, C.J. (interposing): Oh, well, let the Government protest; you are here, and you must give the evidence.]

Witness gave evidence as to the gaugings of 34 casks which he had taken in December at Dordrecht Railway Station, sent to the order of the defendant. He found that the total contents as indicated by the figures on the casks should have been 1,009 gallons: the gaugings showed the total to be 899½ gallons. The shortages varied a good deal in the different casks. The last cask he gauged should have contained 30 gallons, whereas it only contained one gallon. The staves of the cask had sprung, and the liquor appeared to have leaked. In January he tested the brandy both at the defendant's hotel and at the railway station, and found that it was 24.7 under proof.

Franz Kaufner, manager of the Castle Wine and Brandy Co., spoke as to three sealed bottles of brandy sent to him from Mr. Kramer, one of the partners of the firm, on behalf of defendant, and an examination that he made of the samples. The strength was about 16 under proof in No. 1 sample, and 24 under proof in No. 2 and 3 samples. He could not now speak as to the quality of the brandies.

Leopold Kramer, a partner in the Castle Wine and Brandy Co., also gave evidence.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

His Lordship said he understood that the plaintiff consented to a deduction of £13 from his claim on account of shortages.

Sir H. Juta said that that was so.

Having heard Mr. Burton in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: On the 27th May last year the defendant sent an order to the plaintiff company for "25 hogsheads of F.C. brandy, 5s., No. 1, dk. mellow, same as sent on the 19th May, 1904." The brandy was duly sent, and there is no question now as to the quality and the identity of the brandy which was sent upon this order. A sealed bottle has been put in, which has been clearly identified as the bottle taken from the casks which had been rejected by the defendant, so that there can be no doubt as to the identity of that one single bottle. The difficulty in the present case is to ascertain what was the real quality of the brandy which was to serve as the sample for the brandy to be sent, and upon this point the evidence of the defendant appears to be wholly unsatisfactory. He has produced the large bottle on the table to prove that the quality was excellent, but the evidence does not satisfy me that that bottle was taken from the cask which contained 19th May brandy. I am bound to say that the evidence given on behalf of the plaintiff company itself is very unsatisfactory in regard to the sample which the company kept. It would have been much more satisfactory if the plaintiff company had produced in court the original marked bottle which, according to Mr. Du Toit's evidence, was kept on one side at the time the order was supplied; but, upon the whole, I have come to the conclusion that the other small bottle does represent the true quality of the brandy which had been supplied on the 19th May. The witness to whose evidence I attach the greatest weight in the present case is the witness Cohen. He appears to me to have no connection with any of the parties, he comes from a distant part, all the other witnesses were in some way connected with the plaintiff or the defendant, but the witness Cohen is subpoenaed from Middelburg, and a very important question was put to him by me. Apparently counsel on either side must have been afraid to put the question. I put the question to him, in regard to the sealed bottle, as to whether he considered that a good quality of brandy, and he said, "Certainly." I gathered from his evidence that if similar brandy had been sent to him in execution of an order to supply brandy, similar to that which had been previously supplied to him, he would have accepted it. Now this evidence of Cohen. I think, is of great importance, because I connect it also with the evidence of Du Toit, who says that the brandy he sent to the Railway Hotel at Middelburg, of which Cohen was the manager, was the same brandy, and of the same quality as had been sent to Wainstein. The date of the first order sent was the 11th May. It was, therefore, before the order of the 19th had been executed, and the witnesses for the plaintiff are perfectly satisfied that this was the very same brandy, and, considering the nearness of the dates, it does seem to me extremely likely and probable that Du Toit is right in saying that it was the same quality. Well, if that is so, there can be no doubt that the brandy which was sent in pursuance of this order was in accordance with the sample which had been agreed upon. I quite agree with Mr. Burton that there must be a substantial compliance with the order that the brandy sent must substantially be of the same quality as the sample. Now, in my opinion, it was. It appears to me that the only reason why the two articles are somewhat different was because the plaintiff company had been more intent upon mellowing the last order than they had been in regard to the first. They seem to have thought that because the words "dark mellow" were expressed again, special attention ought to be paid to it. It appears to me that this brandy, in consequence of the order of the 27th May, had been made more mellow than the previous order, and it was in consequence of the greater presence of the sugary ingredients that the difference in the proof between the two articles occurred. There was only a difference of two degrees. The quality of a brandy is not to be gauged entirely by the proof spirit. No doubt, the proof spirit should enter into the matter, and, if the discrepancy had been very great, that discrepancy would have been proof positive that the sample which was brought into court by the plaintiff company was a different sample from that which had been agreed upon. But the discrepancy is not so great as to justify me in coming to the conclusion that the plaintiffs are wholly wrong in saying that the sample which they now produce is exactly the same as that which had been supplied to the defendant on the 19th May. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that the defendant had no right to reject the brandy when there was a substantial compliance with the contract between the parties, that there had been no breach, and that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the purchase price. In regard to the shortage of brandy, the impression on my mind was that there was a greater shortage than would be justified by the ordinary evaporation and absorption. There is an amount of £13 which will have to be deducted on that account from the amount of £702 9s., leaving £689 9s. The judgment of the Court will be for the plaintiffs for £689 9s., with interest from the 10th October, 1904, the plaintiff company undertaking upon the return of the casks within six months from this date to repay to the defendant the sum of £94 10s., being the value thereof, defendant to pay the costs of the action.

CLOETE V. DIPRAEM.

This was an action brought by Gideon Stephanus Cloete, an attorney-at-law, residing and practising at Lady Grey, division of Aliwal North, against John Hamilton Dipraem, formerly of Lady Grey, and now of the Orange River Colony, to recover a sum of £648, with interest, alleged to be due for money lent and advanced and paid on behalf of the defendant.

The declaration stated that the defendant had formerly been in the plaintiff's employ as his chief clerk and bookkeeper, at Lady Grey. Plaintiff lent the defendant various sums of money, to be repaid by him, and paid for and on his behalf various sums. The defendant wrongfully and unlawfully, while acting in the aforesaid capacity, appropriated to his own use various sums of money belonging to the plaintiff. Plaintiff prayed for judgment for £648, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.

The defendant, in his plea, denied that he was indebted in any sum to the plaintiff, and set up a counter-claim of £172.

Mr. McGregor was for the plaintiff; the defendant was in default.

Evidence was given by the plaintiff, who put in an account of the transactions between defendant and himself. The amount now due to witness was £621 18s. 1d., for which sum he asked for judgment. Witness also asked for interest on the sum of £599 9s. 4d.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How was it you allowed your clerk to run into your debt to the extent of £600.]

Witness: He was my bookkeeper, and I trusted him, my lord. I have only lately discovered how things are, on balancing up the books.

Philip Jacobus Fouche, articled clerk, at present in the plaintiff's employ, gave corroborative evidence in regard to the account put in by the plaintiff.

Ernest L. Morensi, formerly of Lady Grey, was also called in support of the plaintiff's case.

De Villiers, C.J., said that judgment would be given for the plaintiff for the payment of £621 18s. 1d., with interest on £599 a tempore morae, and absolution from the instance on the claim in reconvention, defendant to pay the costs, including the plaintiff's expenses as a necessary witness, and costs of an application made by the defendant for a postponement.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

GENERAL MOTION.

SCOTT V. WOOD. 1905.
(Feb 10th.

Mr. P. Jones moved, as a matter of urgency, for an interdict against the defendant restraining him from removing certain furniture from a house in Rosebank, which was let to the defendant, who had failed to pay the rent for December, January, and February, and who had re-let the premises to one Hedley. Hedley was about to remove the furniture on a debt owing to him by Wood.

An interdict was granted against Wood and Hedley, restraining them from removing the furniture, pending an action with leave to both respondents to set it aside, the order to be served on Hedley.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

WALKER V. RECEIVERS GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS. 1905.
(Feb. 13th.

Partnership—Salaried partner—Sequestration — Remuneration.

On the sequestration of a partnership estate a salaried partner cannot claim payment of his salary out of the assets in competition with other creditors, but if after the provisional order of sequestration he has continued to perform valuable services in the administration which he was not legally bound to perform, the trustee may, with the sanction of the Court, award to him a fair remuneration for his services as part of the costs of sequestration.

This was an application on behalf of Thomas Mouat Cameron Walker for an order for the admission of a certain claim for salary.

The Receivers of the Grand Junction Railways were called upon to show cause why an order should not be granted, declaring that the applicant should rank as a creditor for the sum of £1,427 9s. 2d., against the assets of the Grand Junction Railways, and for costs against the respondents in their said capacity. The applicant's affidavit stated that on the 23rd May, 1902, a provisional order of sequestration was granted against the Grand Junction Railways. On the 14th May, 1903, the said provisional order was superseded, and respondents were appointed receivers in terms of consent paper. Prior to the provisional order deponent was general manager of the Grand Junction Railways, having previously fulfilled the position of chief inspector of the undertaking at a salary of £700 per annum. Deponent appended a letter dated 1st August, 1900, appointing him as general manager at a salary of £1,000. He went on to say that, after the receivers were appointed, he remained in their employ. His claim was for salary during the whole of the time during which the Grand Junction Railways were under sequestration. During that time it was absolutely necessary that the affairs and interest of the Grand Junction should be carefully protected, and this from his past knowledge of matters he was able to do, and, he considered, with satisfactory results, to the general body of shareholders. The receivers declined to receive his claim, on the ground that they treated him as a partner. The receivers, after they had been appointed, retained his services. Deponent denied that he had ever been a partner in the Grand Junction Railways. He was only an official of the said railways, just in the same way as B. T. Tonkin, whose claim had been ranked.

The answering affidavit of Messrs. Syfret and Closo, the receivers, stated that the allegation made by the applicant that the period covered by his claim was from the 31st May, 1902, to 14th November, 1903, was not wholly correct. The sum of £466 13s. 4d. was alleged to be for salary due prior to the provisional order of sequestration, which was not covered by the period referred to in paragraph 3 of the affidavit. With regard to paragraph 4, defendants said that £466 13s. 4d. would approximately be included in the referee's report as portion of the "actual cost" payable by the Colonial Government. Deponents admitted that during the said period the applicant rendered services which were valuable to the general body of creditors, and they felt that, while the applicant might be entitled to some payment for the services he had rendered, they had before them a difficulty caused by the fact that the applicant seemed to have been a partner in the firm of John Walker and Sons. Applicant had held himself out as a partner. Mr. Arnold F. Hills had also rendered valuable services in the prosecution of the action against the Colonial Government, but he had received no remuneration.

The replying affidavit of the applicant stated that with reference to the item of £466 13s. 4d., this portion of the indebtedness was expunged by the operation of the set-off. On the question of partnership, he admitted having held himself out as a partner to certain plaintiffs, but said that he subsequently received a cable from his principals to the effect that he was not a partner, and, in consequence, he advised the plaintiffs referred to of the inaccuracy of his former statements. He reiterated that he had never been a partner in the said firm of John Walker and Sons.

Buchanan, J., asked how the claim was really made up?

Mr. Gardiner (for the applicant): The applicant claims for salary due on the 21st May, 1902, a sum of £466 13s. 4d., i.e., prior to the provisional order of sequestration, and for salary from the 1st June, 1902, to the 14th November, 1903, the sum of £1,458 6s. 8d. There are certain credits that the applicant allows, thus reducing his claim to £1,427 9s. 2d.

We say that the applicant was not a partner, but that even granting he had been a partner, he would still be entitled to salary for services rendered which he was not legally bound to render. First, he was not a partner since he was not entitled to remuneration on the basis of profits made: and there is no evidence that anybody relied on his partnership.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was he not held out as a partner? The only point is whether he should not be admitted as a creditor for salary, and come in after the other creditors are satisfied.]

The creditors are not prejudiced. They well knew that John Walker was a partner in receipt of salary.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I see that the provisional order directed the Master to appoint a curator. Whom did he appoint?]

Mr. Walker looked after the business in Cape Town. Mr. Hills was in England. There can be no question of partnership after the sequestration. That in itself put an end to any partnership which possibly may have previously existed.

[Buchanan, J.: A partner is responsible for debts of his firm even after sequestration.]

Of course that is so, but if a partner does anything to assist the trustee, beyond giving information as to partnership transactions, he is entitled to remuneration like anybody else. He is entitled to payment for his services even though he may be sueable for contribution by reason of his holding himself out as a partner; but should any action be brought against him as a partner, of course the holding out would have to be proved. As the very least, by his services subsequent to the liquidation, he became a negotiorum gestor, and as such was entitled to remuneration.

[De Villiers, C.J.: We will assume, Mr. Schreiner, that he was a partner, but is he not entitled to some remuneration for doing after the sequestration what he was not bound to do?]

Mr. Schreiner: There was no property in the hands of Walker after the sequestration. After that he was not paid by the partnership but by Hills, and from p. 21 of the liquidator's report it appears that Hills is now claiming £2,300 in respect of these payments as out of pocket expenses. As receivers we cannot go behind the rules of distribution in insolvency; but we do feel that Mr. Walker may well be entitled to some remuneration for having rendered valuable services. His case is, however, one of the weakest, as he may still claim against Hills.

Mr. Gardiner was not heard in reply.

De Villiers, C.J.: The evidence in this case satisfies me that the applicant was a partner in the firm, and that even if he were not as between the other members of the firm and himself a partner, he held himself out as a partner, and that now he should not be allowed to compete with the creditors of the partnership. It appears, however, that after the date of the provisional order of sequestration, the applicant has discharged valuable services towards the estate of the partnership. There was no legal obligation upon him to render those services, and after the appointment of the receivers, they continued to employ him at a salary at the rate of £1,000. Under these circumstances, the Court is of opinion that for the period between the provisional order and the appointment of receivers, some amount should be paid to the applicant, and, upon the whole, we are of opinion that a sum of £500 would be a fair reward to him for his services. The Court will, therefore, make no order upon the application as it stands, beyond directing that the sum of £500 be paid to the applicant as part of the costs of sequestration of the estate. As to the costs, they may fairly come out of the estate. Of course, the £500 is only the balance, after allowing for the £507 which applicant has already received. The receivers are to pay £500, independently of all other costs.

After hearing counsel on the question of costs.

De Villiers, C.J.: In fixing the amount at £500, the Court made a very liberal allowance. The order, therefore, will be that there is no order upon the application, except that a sum of £500 be paid to the applicant as the balance due to him for his services between the date of provisional order and appointment of receivers, such sum to be treated as part of the costs of the sequestration; no order as to costs of this application.

WALKER V. GLYNN, MILLS, CURRIE AND CO.; WALKER V. LIQUIDATOR, GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS. AND LONDON AND WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD.; WALKER V. SMART: WALKER V. DOWSON, AINSLIE AND MARTINEAU; WALKER V. JAMES AND EDWARDS; WALKER V. LIQUIDATORS, GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS, AND F. C. HILLS AND CO.

Mr. Russell appeared for the applicant (John Walker). The respondents were represented as follows: Smart, Dowson, Ainslie and Martineau, Glynn, Mills, Currie and Co., F. C. Hills and Co., and Liquidators, Grand Junction Railways, by Mr. Searle, K.C.; London and Westminster Bank, by Mr. McGregor; James and Edwards, by Mr. Close.

Mr. Russell moved for a postponement until Thursday next, in terms of consent paper, in so far as the parties who had signed the consent were concerned.

Mr. Searle explained the circumstances under which his clients had consented to a postponement, and stated that they had intimated to the applicant that, as soon as the motion came on, they would take the preliminary objection that no security for costs had been given, although it had been asked for. That preliminary objection he was now prepared to take.

Mr. McGregor and Mr. Close said that their clients had not consented to a postponement, and they also took the preliminary objection as to security for costs.

De Villiers, C.J., remarked that it was strange that the consent to a postponement until Thursday was not brought under the attention of the learned judge who fixed the hearing of the motions for that day (Monday).

Mr. Searle said he was informed that the fact was mentioned, but it appeared to have escaped the notice of the learned judge.

Mr. Russell said he had to apply for a postponement in the matter of the London and Westminster Bank.

De Villiers, C.J., asked if the applicant were prepared to give security for costs?

Mr. Russell said he was instructed that they had communicated with their client, and that he was not prepared to give security for costs. Counsel went on to say that the applicant was subject to the jurisdiction of this Court, and that he had property in this colony, which he understood had been attached.

De Villiers, C.J.: These cases will be postponed until Thursday, but they will not be heard on that day, unless in the meanwhile security for costs is given by the applicant. The applicant is a peregrinus, and the Court, under the ordinary rule, whether it is an action or whether it is a motion, holds that he must give security for costs. It is suggested that he has some property on which an order for costs may be enforced, but there is no evidence whatever before the Court on that point. The order of the Court is that the cases be postponed until Thursday, but they will not be heard on Thursday or at any future time unless security in the meanwhile be given for costs by the applicant.

MAFEKE V. MPAMBANE. { 1905.
Feb. 13th.

Review—Gross irregularity—Adjournment of Resident Magistrate's Court.

In an action to recover certain sheep or their value in a Transkeian Magistrate's Court, it appeared that the plaintiff was too old and infirm to attend, and, on the application of the plaintiff's agent, the Magistrate adjourned the hearing to the plaintiff's residence, which was in the same district, for the sole purpose of taking his evidence. Due notice of the time and place was given to the defendant, but he refused to appear either at the plaintiff's residence or at the subsequent hearing in the Courtroom, of which he also had notice. There was evidence without that of the plaintiff to justify the defendant being called upon to produce his evidence, but he tendered none. The Magistrate having given judgment for the plaintiff, the defendant applied to have the proceedings set aside on the ground of gross irregularity.

Held, that the irregularity—if such it was—was not of such a nature as to justify a review.

This was an application upon notice calling upon the respondent (plaintiff in the action) to show cause why the proceedings before the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Mount Ayliff should not be reviewed and set aside, on the ground of gross irregularity and illegality. Mr. Gardiner was for the applicant; Mr. Close was for the respondent.

From the record it appeared that an action was brought in the Court below by the present respondent to recover certain five sheep or their value (£5), an account of their increase while in the possession of the defendant, damages in the sum of £5, and costs of suit. The Magistrate heard a portion of the case, and then adjourned the Court to the residence of the plaintiff at Rode, about 19 miles distant from Mount Ayliff, for the purpose of taking the plaintiff's evidence, Mpambane being old, infirm, and ill. The defendant did not attend the hearing at the residence of the plaintiff, and he contended that he had been prejudiced by such adjournment. On the Court resuming at Mount Ayliff, defendant did not tender any evidence, as he had taken an objection to the adjournment to Rode, on the ground that it was irregular.

Mr. Close said that, before the case was gone into, he wished to take an objection that the matter should not have been brought before this Court. The case was one as between two natives, and counsel desired to raise the point as to whether this Court could hear such a matter coming from the Magistrate's Court, or whether it should not have gone to the Chief Magistrate's Court.

Mr. Close said that the point would be the interpretation of the statutes dealing with native law. Counsel quoted the 3rd section, Act 26 of 1894, referring appeals in matters where natives were concerned to the Court of the Chief Magistrate of the territories. He added that he could not find any reference whatever to "reviews."

De Villiers, C.J., said that that was no reason why there should be no review on the ground of irregularity by the Supreme Court. The Court would hear the case; of course if it were an appeal under colour of a review then the question could be raised later.

Mr. Gardiner called the Court's attention to section 9, Act 35 of 1904 (Better Administration of Justice Act).

The affidavit of the appellant, Shadrack Mafeke, stated that the adjournment to the area Rode would have involved him in heavy additional costs had he gone to defend the case there. Further affidavits were also produced to the effect that the town of Ayliff was the regular place for the holding of the Court.

The answering affidavit of the respondent's attorney, stated that it was impossible to have the respondent removed to the Court. The evidence was taken at the home of the respondent, who was about 80 years of age, and was very infirm. Affidavits by the interpreter of the Court and a policeman were also read.

De Villiers, C.J., asked why interrogatories were not sent?

Mr. Gardiner: I don't know, my lord. Counsel argued that the Magistrate had no authority to remove the Court from Mount Ayliff. The Acts only provided for the holding of the Court of Resident Magistrate in each district. Counsel said that the applicant also applied for review on the ground that the Magistrate gave judgment for an account of the increase, as well as for damages. The damages, he submitted, were an alternative prayer. It was clear that the plaintiff himself did not claim damages as well as an account of the increase that damages were an alternative item.

Having heard Mr. Close on the question of the admissions made by the defendant upon which evidence was called in the Court below.

De Villiers, C.J.: The position in which the Magistrate found himself at the trial of this case was this: Some of the plaintiff's witnesses had given their evidence, and it was found that the plaintiff himself, who lived some 34 miles off, was old, infirm, and too ill to travel, with every probability that he had not many more days to live. The question was, what the Magistrate had to do? In strictness, the better course would have been for the parties to have applied for interrogatories. The defendant's attorney then would have filed cross-interrogatories, and these interrogatories might have been sent to the place where the sick man was, and afterwards used for the trial. It does not seem to have occurred to any one present to have interrogatories, and the first proposal was to have a Commission to take evidence. The Magistrate, however, found that that would not be legal, and accordingly, when an application was subsequently made to him to adjourn his Court to the residence of the plaintiff, not for the purpose of the trial of the case, but for the purpose of taking the evidence of this man who would probably die within a very short time the defendant objected. The Magistrate, however, allowed it to be done, and notice was given to the defendant and his attorneys of the day on which the evidence would be taken. The defendant's attorneys protested that it was utterly illegal, and when the examination of the plaintiff took place, defendant refused to take any further part in the proceedings, and he refused to appear at the subsequent stage when the case was re-adjourned to the Court at Mount Ayliff. Now, the point is whether, assuming it to have been an irregularity, was it such a gross irregularity as would justify the Court now in setting aside the proceedings altogether? I am by no means satisfied that it is a gross irregularity, but the law certainly is obscure. It would appear that the law in regard to the Transkeian territories does not specifically require that a place shall be fixed where the Court is to be held in the same way as the Acts relating to the Magistrate's Courts of the Colony, but I think it is unnecessary to decide the point whether a Magistrate in the Transkeian territories has the power exercised in the present case, for the simple reason that the defendant, in my opinion, has altogether mistaken the course which he ought to have adopted. If he refused to appear at the taking of the evidence of the plaintiff, he ought at all events to have appeared at the re-adjournment, and if he considered that the evidence was illegal he ought to have objected to the admissibility of the evidence, and have given his own evidence. If then the Court, upon the whole of the evidence, had given judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant could have shown that the evidence of the plaintiff had been illegally taken, and that without such evidence there was no case against the defendant, there might have been a good ground of appeal. But instead of taking that obvious course the defendant refused to appear at all, and now moves the Court to set aside the whole of the proceedings on the ground of gross irregularity. Without the plaintiff's evidence there was sufficient evidence to justify the Court in calling upon the defendant to support his defence by evidence. It is impossible, therefore, to hold that the irregularity—if such it was—was so gross as to invalidate the whole of the proceedings. The application must be refused with costs.

Buchanan, J., concurred.

PHILIPS V. NROQOZA. } 1905.
 } Feb. 13th.

Promissory note Signature —
Mark—Witnesses.

It is no valid defence to an action on a promissory note signed with his mark by the maker that the mark is attested by only one witness.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Willowvale in an action brought by the appellant, R. G. Philips, against the respondent to recover £34 10s., with interest from the 6th October, the amount of a promissory note made and signed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff. Mr. Gardiner was for the appellant (Philips); there was no appearance for the respondent.

Mr. Gardiner said that in the Court below exception was taken to the summons by the respondent, on the ground that there was only one witness to the mark of the maker, and not two, as by law required. The exception was upheld, the Magistrate stating that his reason for judgment was that the mark should be attested by two witnesses. Counsel submitted that there was no law requiring two witnesses to a mark on a promissory note, and that the Magistrate was clearly wrong.

De Villiers, C.J.: The Magistrate, in my opinion, clearly erred in his judgment. The exception taken was that there is only one witness to the mark of the maker, and not two, as by law required. Then, the answer to that was that there is no law which requires two witnesses to a mark. The result would be, if the defence were allowed, that a man might for valuable consideration give a promissory note signed by himself with his undoubted mark, and yet escape liability, because it is not duly attested. Clearly such is not the law. The duty of the Magistrate was to have given the plaintiff an opportunity of proving that the mark was the mark of the defendant. If it is his mark then it is his signature by which he binds himself to pay the amount of the note. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed, with costs of appeal, and the case will be remitted to the Magistrate to be decided on its merits, and also for decision as to the costs in the Court below.

STERRENBURG V. NORTH.

Magistrate's inferences from facts.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Gordon, in an action brought by the appellant (Theo. W. Sterrenberg), a contractor, of Uppington, against the respondent, Victor Herbert North, hotel-keeper, for £20 damages for breach of contract.

From the record it appeared that this matter arose out of certain work given to the plaintiff in the way of building certain rooms and improving another. Plaintiff said that a contract was entered into; defendant said that the plaintiff was engaged on piecework, to be done as his (defendant's) funds permitted. At the first hearing the defendant's attorney applied for absolution from the instance, on the ground that no damages had been proved. The Magistrate gave absolution from the instance, with costs. At a second hearing, further evidence was led, and the Magistrate gave judgment for the defendant, with costs.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that the defendant had a right to terminate the agreement with the plaintiff at any time on his tendering to pay for the work already done, which he desired and tendered to do.

Dr. Greer (for the appellant), said that this matter came before the Court on a question of fact, but he submitted that the Magistrate did not in this case give due weight to the probabilities of the case, which ground his lordship (the Chief Justice) had already laid down was a sufficient ground on which to move the Court. He contended that the plaintiff had a good case, supported by independent evidence, and that he had suffered damages.

Mr. Gardiner (for the respondent), said that the question was one entirely as to what the contract was, that there was a divergence of testimony on the facts, and that the Magistrate was best qualified to judge of the credibilities. If the plaintiff had suffered, he had suffered through his own fault. He had not shown due diligence in his work.

De Villiers, C.J.: The decision of this case does not depend so much upon the credibility of the witnesses, as upon the inferences to be drawn from the clearly proved facts in the case. The written documents in the present case afford a very good clue as to what took place between the parties. On the 29th October, 1904, the agent for the plaintiff wrote what I consider to be a civil note, asking defendant to allow the plaintiff to proceed with the riding on of materials. Then on the same day comes this letter from the defendant: "As Mr. Stellenberg has thought fit to put the matter into the hands of his agent without explaining the matter to me first, I am willing to pay him for work done and for bricks, etc., ridden on at a fair valuation. I refuse to do further business with the gentleman in question, after the action he has taken, which I consider is quite uncalled for." This is clearly a letter written by a person who seeks to get out of a bargain. It would appear that he had already, behind the back of the plaintiff, made arrangements with somebody else. When asked about this letter, he said he wanted to give the plaintiff an opportunity to go on with his work. That is ridiculous. I do not think the Magistrate paid sufficient attention to the true relations between the parties. He seems to have known them individually. That advantage this Court has not had, but, at all events, the Court has the documents before it, which enable the Court to form an estimate as to what the true relations between the parties were. The appeal is, I think, on the second case. It appears to me that the plaintiff has sufficiently proved that the damages sustained by him amount to £20. The appeal will be allowed, and judgment entered for the plaintiff for £20 damages, with costs in this Court and the Court below.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

RAUBENHEIMER V. RAUBEN-HEIMER. } 1905.
Feb. 14th.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff, Antony M. Raubenheimer, against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, divorce, by reason of her malicious desertion.

The declaration set out that the parties were married at Mossel Bay on the 29th April, 1873, out of community of property. There were six children of the marriage surviving, two of whom were minors. The defendant maliciously deserted the plaintiff in March, 1904.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the plaintiff, the defendant had been barred from pleading.

Wm. Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the marriage registers at the Colonial Office, gave evidence as to the registration of the marriage.

Mr. Jones applied for the postponement of the case, in view of the non-arrival of an affidavit sworn by the plaintiff in support of his case.

The defendant appeared in person, and said she wished to explain that she left her husband because he did not support her, and had not supported her for five years. She had a letter from the plaintiff, in which he said he would not take her back again. Witness resided in town.

Maasdorp, J., advised the defendant to appear when the case was again called.

The case was postponed sine die.

HEYDENRYCH V. FRAME.

Security given by wife—Senatus consultum Vellejani.

This was an action brought by Benjamin G. Heydenrych, financier, of Observatory-road, against Mrs. Frame, wife of Alexander K. Frame, of Wynberg, to whom defendant was married out of community, to recover a sum of £146 9s., with interest from the 5th February, 1896, upon a promissory note.

The declaration set out that on the 25th April, 1904, plaintiff sued the defendant in this Court upon two promissory notes for £146 9s. and £19 10s., with interest. The latter claim was settled by defendant, after issue of summons and before the hearing; but upon the former claim, the Court ordered plaintiff and defendant to go into the principal case, costs to be costs in the cause. On the 5th February, 1896, defendant was, and still is, indebted to plaintiff in the sum of £146 9s., as and for money lent and advanced to her, and on the same date he received from her the promissory note now sued upon. Defendant failed and refused to pay the said sum. Alternatively, plaintiff said that on the 5th February, 1896, defendant was indebted to him in the sum of £146 9s., and on that date she undertook to repay the said sum, with interest. She refused and neglected to pay the said sum, wherefore plaintiff claimed payment of the note, with interest from the 5th February, 1896, and costs.

Defendant, in her plea, admitted the formal allegations, except that she craved leave to refer to the annexure for the true construction of the acknowledgment of debt. Prior to the 5th February, 1896, the plaintiff had from time to time advanced to the defendant's husband Alexander Kay Frame various sums of money, against which indebtedness payments were made from time to time by the said Alex. K. Frame. Amongst the moneys so advanced is the amount of £200, advanced on the 2nd December, 1893, for which the plaintiff received from the said A. K. Frame an acknowledgment for £230, being for capital and interest. Defendant signed the same as surety for and on behalf of her said husband, and not otherwise. Defendant's husband, by payments made from time to time, reduced the amount to £146 9s., for which balance an acknowledgment of debt was given and signed by defendant as surety for her husband, and not otherwise. Defendant at no time received any consideration from and out of the said acknowledgment, and was not a public trader, and when she signed the said acknowledgment as surety for her husband as aforesaid, the meaning and effect of the benefits and exceptions which she purported therein and thereby to renounce were not explained to her by a notary or at all, nor did she understand the same, and the said exception of the senatus consultum vellejani was hereby opposed to plaintiff's claim as against her. On the 5th March, 1896, £300, and on the 25th March, £55 14s., were paid by her husband to plaintiff in full and complete settlement between her husband and plaintiff, and no part of the said sum of £146 9s. was due to the plaintiff.

Plaintiff, in his replication, said he denied that the sum of £200 was advanced to defendant's husband, or that she signed an acknowledgment in respect to the said sum as surety for her husband and without receiving any consideration therefor. He said that the defendant herself applied to him, through her attorney, for a sum of £200, and the said sum was advanced to her and not to her husband. He did not admit that the meaning and effect of the exceptions were not explained to defendant. As regarded the alleged settlement, plaintiff admitted that there was a settlement between himself and A. K. Frame in 1896, but he denied that the sum now in dispute was included therein.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Gardiner), for plaintiff; Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. Upington), for defendant.

Mr. Burton submitted that the onus lay upon the defendant to prove her case.

Mr. McGregor said he was quite prepared to take the issue, and he at once called Johanna M. Frame (the defendant), who said she knew nothing about the loan transactions between the plaintiff and her husband. She admitted having signed an acknowledgment of debt for £146 9s. A cheque of the 2nd December, 1893, for £200 bore her endorsement. Of that amount she received nothing whatever; she signed the note at Mr. Frame's request.

Mr. McGregor, in answer to the Court, said it was common cause between the parties that the acknowledgment of debt for £146 represented the unpaid balance of an original acknowledgment of £230, signed by Mrs. Frame in December, 1893.

Witness (continuing) said that there had been talk beforehand between her husband and herself in regard to this cheque. She denied having approached the plaintiff for a loan through her attorney. In regard to the acknowledgment of debt, she simply signed at Mr. Frame's request; she denied that it was explained to her what was meant by renouncing the benefits of the senatus consultum Vellejani. She did not understand what such a term meant. Witness paid no amount to Mr. Heydenrych upon the sum of £230. In March, 1896, some money came from the trustees of her husband's father in Scotland to clear off all the debts that she and her husband had. On the last occasion, when she signed the acknowledgment of debt, nothing was said to her about the legal exceptions.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: She received certain money after her father's death. She did not know how much it was or when she received it. She thought the amount would be about £200. She had not lent money to her husband. He went into insolvency in July, 1897, and witness claimed against the estate for £990, which was money belonging to her son, and which had come to him from his late father, Commissioner Chalmers, who died about 16 or 17 years ago.

Mr. Burton: You see we have the insolvency proceedings, and nothing is said about the money being lent by your son. The acknowledgments are made out by your husband to you.

Witness: It was always understood that the money was my son's.

Mr. Burton: You see here is a sworn claim in your own name against your husband's estate for £992?

Witness: Then it must be so.

Mr. Burton: From the documents in the Master's Office we find that your first husband's estate was surrendered as insolvent by you, as executrix?

Witness: I don't know anything about that.

Mr. Burton: What about the money, then? Where did that come from?

Witness: The money that came to me was from a life policy.

Further cross-examined: She had never borrowed money from the plaintiff. She knew nothing of an application to Mr. Heydenrych for a loan on her account. In spite of the cheque she was confident that the debt was a balance of an old account between her husband and the plaintiff.

Re-examined by Mr. McGregor: She did not take proceedings to have her husband's estate sequestrated.

Alexander Frame, husband of the defendant, stated that in November, 1893, he approached the plaintiff for a loan of money, and on the advice of Mr. Du Preez the plaintiff advanced him £200. The cheque was made payable to Mrs. Frame, who did not get a sixpence of the proceeds. The loan carried interest at 2½ per cent. per month. The acknowledgment for £230 was signed by Mrs. Frame. Witness signed as surety and co-principal debtor. The money was advanced to witness, and the plaintiff knew that perfectly well. It was understood that only in the case of his death was Mrs. Frame to become liable. There was a reduction of the debt in 1896 to £146, although no actual payments were made. He did not object to pay the plaintiff's rate of interest, but he objected to pay the capital twice over. Messrs. Reid and Nephew, who held the money sent to witness from Scotland, would not entertain 30 per cent. interest, and the plaintiff got witness to sign certain notes ante-dated at the rate of 6 per cent. The money was sent to Messrs. Reid and Nephew especially to free Mrs. Frame from debt. He implicitly trusted the plaintiff as a friend, and when he came into witness's office and destroyed a number of papers he understood that the bundle included the acknowledgment for £146.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: The last time Mrs. Frame advanced him money was in 1899. Du Preez was the plaintiff's attorney. The cheque was made out to Mrs. Frame, and she signed the acknowledgment of debt. Witness had to worry the plaintiff to draw up a statement for Messrs. Reid and Nephew. Witness understood that the statement of account made out to the solicitors included his wife's liability. All the documents were dated wrong to suit the plaintiff's purposes. There was no mention of that in his affidavits; it was only recently he commenced to remember anything about it. The document dated the 5th February might have been signed on any date. The plaintiff purported to destroy all documents, including the one on which he now sued, but witness believed that he retained the latter. When the money was sent from Scotland he did not know whether Messrs. Reid and Nephew wiped out all the liabilities; he supplied them with everything he was aware of. He had never handled more than £200 from the plaintiff, and he had paid him back £600. All his liabilities were included in the three promissory notes for £300.

Re-examined by Mr. McGregor: On the same day as he received the cheque from the plaintiff for £200, he wrote out a cheque to the plaintiff for £52 for previous loans. Out of the £200 he had to his credit something like £140 after giving cheques to the plaintiff and his attorney.

Wm. Young Wilson, of Cape Town, said he was in 1895 and 1896 a clerk in the employ of Reid and Nephew. He remembered that certain communications passed between Messrs. Reid and Messrs. McGregor, Donald and Co., and a sum was sent by the latter firm amounting to £993. Witness advertised for claims; he saw Heydenrych, and told him that the money was sent in order to clear off the claims against Mr. and Mrs. Frame. The claims were as a matter of fact in excess of the amount remitted from Scotland; in case the liabilities were not cleared off by this sum, it was to be sent back. He notified the plaintiff, who sent in a claim for £455. Plaintiff agreed to accept £355. Witness understood that amount was in full settlement of the plaintiff's claim.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He was sure that he told Heydenrych that he was to send in his claims against both Mr. and Mrs. Frame. He notified Heydenrych both verbally and by letter; he thought there would be copy of the letters in Messrs. Reid's letter book. He admitted that all the vouchers sent back from Scotland were the liability of A. K. Frame, except one endorsed in blue pencil "and Mrs. Frame."

Mr. Burton: The letters refer to the claims of "A. K. Frame and Co., or Mr. A. K. Frame."

Mr. McGregor closed his case.

Benjamin Godlieb Heydenrych (the plaintiff) said that he had lent both the defendant and her husband money from time to time. In December, 1893, Mr. Du Preez (who had since died) called upon him, and applied for a loan. Witness gave a cheque for £200 to Du Preez in favour of Mrs. Frame upon Du Preez handing to him the signed promissory note. The note was renewed in 1894 and 1895. The document now sued upon was drawn up in February, 1896. Frame had called upon him asking him to draw up the statement of his indebtedness; Frame told him that he did not want it to appear to the trustees the terms on which he had borrowed, and he asked witness to take off some of the indebtedness of his wife, and add it to his (Frame's) debt, thus making up with certain interest three notes of £100 each. The indebtedness of Mrs. Frame was thus reduced to the £146 9s. In February he drew up a statement showing Frame's indebtedness; this did not include Mrs. Frame's indebtedness of £146 odd.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: He admitted that he had waited within five days of the period of prescription before he sued upon the promissory note. Frame had large schemes all the time; witness did not want to take action against Mrs. Frame.

Mr. McGregor: Yes, we can quite appreciate the reason in such a case as this.

Mrs. Frame had never seen him personally about any loan.

Mr. McGregor: How a person of your vigilance and keenness of intellect—

Witness (interposing): I am not so very vigilant and keen, or I would not have trusted these people.

He did not consider the rate of interest that he charged Mrs. Frame (2½ per cent. per month) to be high. Mr. Frame had offered 5 per cent. per month for small loans. The acknowledgement for 146 included both principal and interest.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J.: The Court has to decide upon the evidence which has been laid whether the defendant is the principal debtor, and liable upon the promissory note, or whether, notwithstanding what appears in that promissory note, she is not merely a surety. I find Mrs. Frame in order to assist her husband, consented to sign the document as surety for his indebtedness, and the document must be taken as an agreement of suretyship. In that document I find that Mrs. Frame has renounced the exception of the senatus consultum Vellejani. If a wife becomes security for her husband, or a woman for a man, and renounces that exception effectually, then the indebtedness upon the acknowledgment would be established. Now how can such an exception be renounced effectually? It has been laid down in the authorities—and we have decisions in the Supreme Court upon that point—that for it to be done effectually, the person renouncing must be well aware of the effect of the renunciation, and what she will lose by renouncing. Mrs. Frame has told the Court that she did not understand a word of this, and she does not now understand; and I am quite satisfied that she did not, and that, from the nature of her evidence, she is a woman who would not understand. If that be so, then the exception has not been effectually renounced, and defendant can take the benefit of it. She has taken advantage of it, and she now set it before the Court as an exception to the claim of the plaintiff. That being so, it is a full and sufficient answer on the part of the defendant, as surety, to say that when she became surety, she did not renounce the exceptions in respect of which she was entitled to the benefits. But I would go further, and say that, if that point had not disposed of the case, then if it had been established that there was an indebtedness whereby which these parties jointly, whether as principal or surety, became indebted to Mr. Heydenrych, that matter was long ago settled. Looking at the acknowledgement of debt, we find that it was a few days before it would have been prescribed when this action was brought. The matter was delayed to that date, and the impression on my mind is that the delay took place because the plaintiff had no confidence in the justice of his cause. I believe that the indebtedness under this acknowledgement was extinguished after the money had been sent out by the trustees in Scotland to Frame, because money was paid to the plaintiff on the understanding that it should be a full payment. Judgment will be given for the defendant, with costs, including costs of the previous application.

DARTER V. DARTER.

This was an action brought by Georgina Darter against her husband, Adrienne Albert Darter, to recover certain moneys advanced. Mr. Close was for the plaintiff; the defendant did not appear. The suit was by edictal citation.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff claimed a sum of £300, with costs, upon a bail bond given in favour of defendant, which had been estreated.

No evidence was called.

Judgment was entered as prayed, and property already attached, ad fundandam jurisdictionem, to be declared executable.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

MEDELSSOHN V. LAVIGNE. { 1905.
Feb. 15th.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved as a matter of urgency for an interdict restraining Messrs. Van Zyl and Buissinne from parting with certain money, the property of the respondent, who had been arrested on the application of the applicant, to whom he owed £64 for goods sold and delivered. On the 10th January the respondent gave the applicant a cession of certain rents of property which he had subsequently sold. The balance of the purchase price, £30, had been handed to Messrs. Van Zyl and Buissinne.

A rule nisi, operating as an interim interdict, was granted, the rule to be returnable when the suit between the parties is heard, the rule to be served on the respondent and Messrs. Van Zyl and Buissinne.

Ex parte EBERT AND CO.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for an order against respondent, Joshus Heilbuth, calling on him to give satisfactory security for a judgment of £41 18s. 9d. obtained against him in the Transvaal, failing which an order for his arrest. The respondent was about to leave for England by the mail boat.

Buchanan, J., said he was afraid the Court had no jurisdiction to grant such an order. The defendant was simply passing through this country, and no order could be made. The debt was contracted in the Transvaal between a branch of the plaintiff's firm and the defendant, who had no property in this country.

TRIAL CAUSES.

KROHN V. KROHN.

This was an action for divorce by reason of the defendant's adultery with some person or persons unknown. The parties were married in October, 1893. They lived happily together for a number of years, until a child was born of the defendant, of which the plaintiff was not father. In 1902 another illegitimate child was born, and a third followed in 1903.

Mr. Upington was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default.

Johann Krohn, plaintiff, stated that the first child was born in October, 1897, and the defendant told him who was the father of the child. After that witness and his wife were constantly quarrelling. Two more children were born, of which he was not the father; he was with the Boer forces when the third child was born. The defendant in a letter acknowledged her guilt. Plaintiff claimed a decree of divorce, and if the Court so ordered it he was willing to take charge of the eldest girl, whom he had practically adopted.

Buchanan, J., said that the only child that was actually proved to have been born in adultery was the third child, and the other two being born in wedlock would be presumed to be the children of the plaintiff. A decree of divorce would be granted, the plaintiff to have custody of the eldest child.

HANDS V. SHAPIRO.

This was an action brought by Harry Hands, in his capacity as churchwarden of St. Saviour's Church, Claremont, to recover from the defendant £15 5s. 2d., being the balance of rent due for certain premises in Primrose-street.

The claim was for £64, less taxed costs amounting to £16 4s. 10d., and against that claim there was a set off of £30 for rent due by one Friedman to the defendant and £2 paid in cash, and further untaxed costs incurred concerning a rule nisi interdicting the defendant from parting with the property amounting to £16 odd.

Mr. P. Jones was for the plaintiff and Dr. Greer was for the defendant.

Herr Shapiro stated that he hired from Friedman certain premises in Primrose-street, for which he always paid in advance. An order was granted against him, and then he refused to pay. On the same day as proceedings were taken against him by St. Saviour's Church, Friedman also took proceedings over the same matter, and it was necessary for him to come to the Court a second time to explain his position. Supposing he had not received Friedman's interdict he would not have incurred any costs over the St. Saviour's Church application.

Edward Collins, articled clerk to Mr. Stanley Jones, stated that if proceedings had not been instituted by Friedman he would not have advised any opposition to the St. Saviour's Church application. The duplication of the proceedings caused confusion and expense. The present defendant had nothing to gain by his previous action, as the rent had to be paid in any case.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

Buchanan, J.: This action is brought by Friedman against Shapiro, the defendant, for the recovery of rent. The premises leased by plaintiff to defendant were bonded to the churchwardens of St. Saviour's Church, Claremont. During the currency of the bond, Friedman granted the churchwardens an irrevocable power, entitling them to receive the rent from the tenant and to apply it in reduction of their claim. After they had obtained this irrevocable power in consequence, I presume, of the conduct of Friedman, the churchwardens obtained a rule nisi, having the effect of an interim interdict restraining Shapiro from paying his rent to Friedman. The day before this rule was obtained, Friedman had also obtained a rule nisi against Shapiro, by which he also claimed the rent, and attached certain of Shapiro's property as security. Now the rent claimed at that time amounted to £64. Shapiro was willing to pay the rent, but being harassed in this way he did not know to whom to pay. As orders of Court had been obtained he was justified in retaining the money until the Court decided in favour of one party or the other. The matter was further complicated by the fact that Shapiro had a set off against Friedman for one month's rent—£32—which he had already paid, and of which payment the churchwardens were ignorant. The churchwardens, though bringing this action in Friedman's name, are really the plaintiffs in the matter. When the action for the payment of the £64 came on for hearing they discovered the payment by the defendant to Friedman, and they consequently withdrew so much of their claim. They also found that the costs incurred by the defendant in consequence of Friedman's action had to be allowed. The present suit depended on the amount of these costs. It is said by defendant's counsel that had it not been for Friedman's action the defendant would have made no opposition to the application of the churchwardens, as it was immaterial to him to whom he paid. In my opinion, he is certainly entitled to the costs which Friedman has put him to, and the churchwardens are now willing to allow these amounts. The defendant's legal adviser was called upon to furnish a bill of these costs, and after a considerable amount of correspondence a bill of costs was made against Friedman for the sum of £32 17s. 2d. This was taxed by the Master, and adding 16s. for the taxing fee, he allowed £16 14s. 10d. He disallowed the sum of £16 18s. 4d. of this bill and costs as not being taxable as against Friedman. This action being brought in Friedman's name, the defendant has set off this amount of taxed bill of costs, £16 18s. 4d. The plaintiffs agree to this set off in addition to the other set off of £32. But the defendant wishes now to set up a further bill of costs made up, so far as we can gather of the items which were disallowed in the bill of costs taxed between Friedman and Shapiro. This is not an application to review the Master's taxation. There has been no amount of costs taxed against Friedman except the £16 14s. 10d., which the plaintiffs are willing to allow. Under the circumstances, I cannot allow an indefinite claim on an untaxed bill of costs as a still further set off. If Shapiro was dissatisfied with the Master's taxation, and thought that the Master has not allowed him sufficient, he might have brought the taxation in review. As the case at present stands the £16 14s. 10d. is all that can be allowed for costs. Allowing these two items there is a balance due by the defendant of £15 15s. 2d., for which the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment. As to costs, I was in favour of allowing only Magistrate's Court costs, as I agree with Dr. Greer that the claim originally had only been made for £15 5s. 2d., it might never have been contested. But there has been a contest, and this £15 5s. 2d. has not been tendered, and it is pointed out that the parties are in different districts, which gives the plaintiff the right to come to this Court, therefore I am bound to give judgment, with costs. There is an application for costs of the provisional case, but I think the proceedings in the provisional were altogether unnecessary, and no such costs will be allowed.

COMMISSIONERS, ADENDORP MUNICIPALITY V. KING- WELL.	{	1905.
		Feb. 15th.

		Apr. 17th.

Municipal regulations — Grazing rights—Illegal enclosure of commonage.

This was an action brought by the Chairman and Commissioners of the Adendorp Municipality against Alfred Kingwell, of Graaff-Reinet, to recover damages for alleged violation of the plaintiffs' rights in regard to certain grazing and other rights in the villages of Adendorp, Rouvierville, and Retreat.

The declaration stated that the plaintiffs were the Chairman and Commissioners of the Adendorp Municipality, and as such representing the erf-holders of the said Municipality. Prior to and in the year 1855 Michiel Joseph Adendorp held certain ground known as De Erf, and this, together with certain adjoining ground, became the sites of the villages of Adendorp, Rouvierville, and Retreat. The ground was sold subject to certain servitudes as to grazing and wood cutting. By successive transfers, the defendant in 1901 became the owner of a portion of the land. In the conditions of sale, it was laid down that all the erf-holders in the said villages and their successors were to be entitled to graze a certain number of cattle on certain grazing land on De Erf, and they were also to have certain rights in regard to the cutting of wood for fuel purposes.

The acts complained of by the plaintiffs were set out in paragraphs XI., XII., and XIII. of the declaration as follows: XI.—In or about March, 1901, the defendant, who had already purchased and was in possession of the said portion of De Erf and the adjoining piece of ground, which was subsequently transferred to him, proceeded wrongfully, unlawfully, and wilfully to cut down and remove all the veld bushes, thorn trees, and other trees and shrubs of every sort growing thereon, in violation of the plaintiffs' rights thereover, as representing the erf-holders of the said Municipality, and thereby and otherwise further destroyed the grazing ground thereon, to the use of which the plaintiffs were entitled, and which the said erf-holders have used as aforesaid. XII.—The defendant, in spite of repeated protests by the plaintiffs, persisted in the illegal acts referred to in the last preceding paragraph hereof, and continued so to damage and destroy the said grazing ground until in or about July, 1902, and he has, by reason of his said violation of the plaintiffs' rights, caused them damage to the extent of £2,500. XIII.—In or about August, 1902, the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully enclosed a certain portion of the said ground, in extent about 5 morgen, 537 square roods, being part of the grazing ground hereinbefore mentioned, and not cultivated land, with a wire fence, thereby preventing the plaintiffs from enjoying all their grazing and other rights in and over the said ground, and causing them damage to the extent of £150. The plaintiffs prayed for judgment for: (a) The sum of £2,500 as damages aforesaid in respect of the matters complained of in paragraphs XI. and XII.; (b) the sum of £150, as damages in respect of the matters complained of in paragraph XIII.; (c) that the defendant may be ordered forthwith to remove the said wire fence; (d) alternative relief; (e) costs of suit.

Defendant, in his plea, said that, subject to the said conditions of sale and rights and privileges pertaining to the said erf-holders thereunder, the vendor retained his ordinary proprietary rights in respect of the said property De Erf, not only under the common law, but also by virtue of the last clause in the respective conditions of sale, together with other clauses therein. He said that the vendor retained his legal and ordinary rights to the reasonable use and enjoyment of the said grazing lands, subject to the rights of grazing granted to erf-holders by the said conditions of sale. Defendant said that (a) he admitted that in or about March, 1901, he had purchased and was in possession of, and thereafter got transfer of, the said portion of De Erf and of the ground adjoining De Erf, and that then and thereafter he cut down and removed certain firewood on the west or right side of the said river, on the portion of ground in respect of which the erf-holders in the villages of Rouvierville and Retreat had certain rights of cutting wood, in terms of the said conditions; but he did not interfere with any lawful rights of grazing cattle on the aforesaid grazing ground as possessed by the erf-holders in the three said villages, or in any way damage the said grazing ground, the latter, on the contrary, having been improved by what he did; (b) he further said that in August, 1902, he sold his said property, being the servient tenement here in question, to the present plaintiffs in their said capacity, who bought the same at a public sale by auction, and were now the registered owners and in possession thereof; (c) defendant hereby, in reference to paragraph 11, tendered the sum of £25, with taxed costs to date of tender, in full satisfaction of any damage which plaintiffs may have sustained in respect of the defendant's acts. Paragraph 12 was denied, save as to the admissions of tender. As to paragraph 13, defendant admitted that he enclosed with a wire fence a certain portion of his said ground, in extent about five morgen, but the said portion was situated on the east or left side of the river, and was not subject to grazing rights. He said that the plaintiff had sustained no damages, there being, in fact, no firewood or other wood on the said portion, and for a technical infringement of the plaintiffs' rights therein, he tendered the sum of £5, with costs to date of tender. Subject to the foregoing tenders of £25 and £5, together with taxed costs to date of tenders, he prayed that the plaintiffs' claim should be dismissed, with costs.

Plaintiffs, in their replication, put the defendant to proof of his assertions.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. De Waal) for plaintiffs. Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. McGregor) for defendant.

Mr. Schreiner applied for leave to amend the plea in so far as the alleged enclosure by a wire fence was concerned, by withdrawing the admission that there was a right of grazing or cutting wood in the plaintiffs. He withdrew the tender of £5, and said that it could be added to the £25 tendered in the other part of the claim.

Maasdorp, J., allowed the amendment.

Jan Christiaan Weitz, Town Clerk of Adendorp, gave evidence as to the former condition of things on the ground and the value which the trees on the banks of the river, cut down by defendant, were to those who held grazing rights. He also gave evidence in regard to the extent of the grazing rights of the erf-holders. The cutting of the wood by the defendant commenced, he said, in March, 1901, when martial law was in force. He saw cutting going on opposite Rouvierville; and he saw the work extend through a portion of the veld. He saw cutting going on in a belt of trees over a length of about a mile along the bank of the Sunday River. After the trees had been cut down there was no protection left for any grass which might grow during the rainy season. He did not notice any sign of fresh growth where the trees had been cut down. At that time defendant was residing on erf No. 5 at Rouvierville.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: There were over 1,000 head of stock that grazed on the ground before the trees were cut down; he had no record for Municipal purposes. Stock in excess of the quantity allowed on the erven were taken to the pound. He admitted that both mules and donkeys had grazed on the ground, as well as cows and horses. He could not say whether there were more mules and donkeys on the ground than cows; he did not know whether the erf-holders generally held more mules and donkeys than cows and horses. Goats would eat from the trees.

Mr. Schreiner: A sheep will not eat from the trees?

Witness: Yes; a Cape sheep.

He had seen donkeys belonging to Mr. Jansen, formerly a commissioner, on the commonage. He did not know that of the trees cut down by the defendant the stumps had been of great use to people who could not take green wood. He could not say whether the claim for £2,500 damages for cutting the trees was a fair one; he had no knowledge. He was acquainted with the gardens, but not with the grazing ground. Of dry and wet erven, there were 127 in all; all the erf-holders had a right to graze, but they had not all rights to cut wood on the Adendorp side of the river. Since the Municipality had taken possession of most of the ground nobody could take wood in the Adendorp portion without a permit from the Municipality. At Rouvierville and Retreat the people went under the old condition that they could take wood on the bank of the river. Wood was requisitioned by the military during the war; the wood was such as was marketable.

Re-examined: Mr. Kingwell's wagons took the wood to Graaff-Reinet. The first protest was sent in on the 23rd August, 1903, signed by ten ratepayers, and the second one also signed by ratepayers was sent in on the following December, when the Council held a meeting, and refused it. And the protest was sent in in 1904, and in November a public meeting was called to discuss the case against the defendant. Twenty-four ratepayers were present, Mr. Kingwell tendered £25, £5 and costs, and it was carried by twenty-two to two not to accept the tender, and authorising the commissioners to proceed as they thought fit. In all there were fifty-six ratepayers in the Municipality. They were all ratepayers at the meeting, although he could not give the names. He would not say that Mr. Swanepoel pressed the meeting not to accept the defendant's tender.

Stephanus Swanepoel, chairman of the Adendorp Municipality, said he had lived in Adendorp for ten years. Before 1901 the commonage was in good condition, and overgrown with trees and bushes, which were good food for stock. Trees, shrubs, and bushes were cut down by the defendant. Anything that was fit for firewood was cut, and as a consequence the veld had deteriorated, and gone back, because the greater part of the big trees was cut away. His neighbour, Bishof, had since 1901 been buying wood from Boysen, a farmer. He did not know where Bishof had previously got his wood from. He considered that the commonage had not been improved by the defendant's actions; cattle had now to be taken away which could formerly be grazed on the commonage.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: They had rain at Adendorp a few months ago, but before then years had elapsed since they had had a snowstorm or a heavy fall of rain. He had only bought three loads of wood, during the past six years; he had got dry wood from the bank of the river opposite the erf to his house, and had also used green wood from fruit trees in his garden.

Mr. Schreiner: If the Municipality are so particular about protecting trees, why did they cut down the trees along the water furrow?

Witness: Because the trees obstructed the water. The water, witness added, had been polluted by coloured people living in the neighbourhood. It was necessary to cut down the trees to stop this nuisance. Witness was friendly with Mr. Kingwell; he did not enter a protest as an erf-holder when Mr. Kingwell commenced to cut down the trees. Witness had not known until recently that there was a difference in the conditions as between Adendorp and the villages of Rouvierville and Retreat. He did not remember whether Mr. Kingwell had told him that he had not known of any difference between the conditions of sale of erven in Adendorp and the other villages. Donkeys, goats, and mules were grazed largely on the commonage.

Re-examined: Prior to the cutting down of the trees during a drought they could keep on the erven 1,000 small stock, and about 120 head of large stock; now they could only graze 500 or 600 small stock and about 25 head of cattle.

Swanepoel (recalled) stated, in reply to Mr. Burton, that the erven along the banks of the river at Rouvierville and Retreat extended between 2,500 and 3,000 yards. Stoltz had ten or eleven erven of a morgen each at Rouvierville. Stoltz was present at the meeting, and voted on the 24th November.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He could not give a list of the people present at the meeting, but he was positive that Stoltz put up his hand. Stoltz had two homesteads on the erven, and it was witness's opinion that the tenant in the second house could also take wood.

By Maasdorp, J.: All the trees with the exception of the thorn tree were not considered as firewood.

Hepdrick Jacobus Marais, a member of the Adendorp Municipality, stated that as long as he could remember he lived in the Municipality. Prior to this case he never knew of any destruction on the commonage where he had looked after his father's stock for years. In any of the previous droughts they were always able to maintain the stock without removing them. From a grazing point of view the bush veldt was four times as valuable as the Karoo bush. When Kingwell started cutting down, witness, in his presence, protested against it. It was the opinion of witness that if the defendant could cut down thorn trees he could also cut the plum trees and bushes, and witness would suffer in consequence. Subsequently, he asked the defendant to sell back the land to the Municipality, but Kingwell was not inclined to do so at that moment, stating that he was cutting down the wood, as he wanted work for his donkeys. The smaller trees and bushes were cut down, and tracks were made across the veldt for the wagons to remove the wood. All the wood capable of being used as firewood was cut down in the bush veldt. The shorter bush was good food for small as well as large stock. When rain came down grass grew under the trees, but now it did not seem to thrive. He had to feed part of his stock, and so had other people, a thing he had never known before.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: He heard many years ago trees were cut down. Where the tracks were made bushes had been cut down.

Mr. Naude, a dairyman, stated that before the cutting down of trees in the present case he was allowed to take firewood, but now he had to go to a piece of ground which he hired from the Municipality of Graaff-Reinet. In his opinion the defendant cut things that were useful and some that were useless.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: The useless stuff was cut to clear the ground. Generally what the defendant cut was the useful wood.

Cornelius Swanepoel, agriculturist, living at Adendorp, stated that he was employed by the defendant to cut wood. He was employed in March, 1901, and he continued until July, 1901, during which time he cut down 114 loads.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: The defendant did not specially say to cut the large trees; he told him to cut everything right and left as he went along.

Ferdinand Myburgh, carpenter at Adendorp, stated that he was employed by the defendant for a year cutting wood. He was fairly constant at the work, and in all he cleared about a hundred and four loads. The defendant the sick man was, and afterwards used for the trial. It does not seem to have occurred to any one present to have interrogatories, and the first proposal was to have a Commission to take evidence. The Magistrate, however, found that that would not be legal, and accordingly, when an application was subsequently made to him to adjourn his Court to the residence of the plaintiff, not for the purpose of the trial of the case, but for the purpose of taking the evidence of this man who would probably die within a very short time the defendant objected. The Magistrate, however, allowed it to be done, and notice was given to the defendant and his attorneys of the day on which the evidence would be taken. The defendant's attorneys protested that it was utterly illegal, and when the examination of the plaintiff took place, defendant refused to take any further part in the proceedings, and he refused to appear at the subsequent stage when the case was re-adjourned to the Court at Mount Ayliff. Now, the point is whether, assuming it to have been an irregularity, was it such a gross irregularity as would justify the Court now in setting aside the proceedings altogether? I am by no means satisfied that it is a gross irregularity, but the law certainly is obscure. It would appear that the law in regard to the Transkeian territories does not specifically require that a place shall be fixed where the Court is to be held in the same way as the Acts relating to the Magistrate's Courts of the Colony. but I think it is unnecessary to decide the point whether a Magistrate in the Transkeian territories has the power exercised in the present case, for the simple reason that the defendant, in my opinion, has altogether mistaken the course which he ought to have adopted. If he refused to appear at the taking of the evidence of the plaintiff, he ought at all events to have appeared at the re-adjournment, and if he considered that the evidence was illegal he ought to have objected to the admissibility of the evidence, and have given his own evidence. If then the Court, upon the whole of the evidence, had given judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant could have shown that the evidence of the plaintiff had been illegally taken, and that without such evidence there was no case against the defendant, there might have been a good ground of appeal. But instead of taking that obvious course the defendant refused to appear at all, and now moves the Court to set aside the whole of the proceedings on the ground of gross irregularity. Without the plaintiff's evidence there was sufficient evidence to justify the Court in calling upon the defendant to support his defence by evidence. It is impossible, therefore, to hold that the irregularity—if such it was—was so gross as to invalidate the whole of the proceedings. The application must be refused with costs.

Buchanan, J., concurred.

PHILIPS V. NROQOZA. } 1905.
 } Feb. 13th.

Promissory note Signature —
Mark—Witnesses.

It is no valid defence to an action on a promissory note signed with his mark by the maker that the mark is attested by only one witness.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Willowvale in an action brought by the appellant, R. G. Philips, against the respondent to recover £34 10s., with interest from the 6th October, the amount of a promissory note made and signed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff. Mr. Gardiner was for the appellant (Philips); there was no appearance for the respondent.

Mr. Gardiner said that in the Court below exception was taken to the summons by the respondent, on the ground that there was only one witness to the mark of the maker, and not two, as by law required. The exception was upheld, the Magistrate stating that his reason for judgment was that the mark should be attested by two witnesses. Counsel submitted that there was no law requiring two witnesses to a mark on a promissory note, and that the Magistrate was clearly wrong.

De Villiers, C.J.: The Magistrate, in my opinion, clearly erred in his judgment. The exception taken was that there is only one witness to the mark of the maker, and not two, as by law required. Then, the answer to that was that there is no law which requires two witnesses to a mark. The result would be, if the defence were allowed, that a man might for valuable consideration give a promissory note signed by himself with his undoubted mark, and yet escape liability, because it is not duly attested. Clearly such is not the law. The duty of the Magistrate was to have given the plaintiff an opportunity of proving that the mark was the mark of the defendant. If it is his mark then it is his signature by which he binds himself to pay the amount of the note. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed, with costs of appeal, and the case will be remitted to the Magistrate to be decided on its merits, and also for decision as to the costs in the Court below.

[Appellants Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn.]

Charles August Naser stated he sold the ground in 1902 to the Municipality. The pasturage was fairly good, but not the best. Last week he saw the ground, and noticed that where the mimosa trees had been on the river bank the young growth was very good. With all due respect to the witnesses, he did not think the ground could bear one sheep per morgen.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: The trees cut down in 1901 showed some signs of growing again. The military destroyed several trees along the bank of the river.

Mr. Boisson (recalled), in answer to Maasdorp, J., said that he did not think it was putting too high an average when he said that three sheep could be maintained on a morgen. He did not do it on his own farm.

Ernest Johannes Stephanus Janssen, a member of the Municipal Council for twenty years up till fourteen months ago, stated that in his father's time all the wood along the bank of the river was cut down. The wood was cut down for sale. The trees grew up after that, and there was another big cutting about 1878, and the trees had grown again. It would have been more beneficial if the trees had been cut down before Kingwell did so. A neighbouring farmer cut down the wood every eight or nine years, and the trees always grew again. He could not detect any ill effects to the grazing since the defendant cut down the trees. The last couple of years had produced the most severe drought he had ever remembered. The donkeys were more numerous now than before the defendant bought. Witnesses passed through the veldt very often, and he noticed no useless wood cut down for firewood. Witness saw no new roads formed. As regards the use of the firewood, although he had been a Commissioner for twenty years, he never knew there were any different rights of grazing, or that the Rouvierville people had greater rights than those of Adendorp. If cattle were sent away it was on account of the prickly pear over-running the place.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: The defendant had treated Adendorp like a good Christian; he assisted everyone in the village. Had it been his property he would have cut down the wood long ago, as it would have benefited the grazing. Witness pointed out to the Council that they had no right to the wood, and urged them to get counsel's opinion. When witness proposed that the defendant should be proceeded against, he did not mean the Council to do so without counsel's opinion.

Re-examined by Mr. Schreiner: The Council had given up the idea of trying to get rid of the prickly pear. He could not say whether he had been over the veldt when he made the proposition to proceed against the defendant; he took his information from the report which showed that the veldt was injured.

Cornelius Erasmus stated there was not much pasturage before the rain. The cutting had given more space, and after rain there was more grass, and the mimosas came up in great numbers. There had been a terrible drought during the past couple of years.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He only came to Adendorp shortly before the war. He did not sell his cattle because there was insufficient food for them to eat.

William Jacobus Voster stated that before the defendant's time he cut along the river, and also up in the veldt. During the defendant's time he did the principal part of the cutting. He only cut wood that was useful for the market. He was paid by the load, and it would take a long time to pack a load of the smaller bush.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

Mr. Burton submitted that the questions which were now left for decision would be very largely questions first as to the measure of damages, and, secondly, what was the actual amount of damage which has been suffered by the municipality and erf-holders of Adendorp by reason of the operations of the defendant in the cutting of the wood on the grazing land. The plaintiffs withdrew claims (b) and (c) of the declaration, feeling that, in view of the evidence, they could not press this part of the declaration. The two substantial matters now before the Court were, first of all, the claim in regard to the injury done to the rights of the erf-holders of Rouvierville and Retreat by the cutting of firewood, and, secondly, the question of the damage done to the rights of the erf-holders of the municipality in the way of their grazing rights. On the former part of the claim—i.e., as to the cutting of wood—the defendant made a tender of £30 as damages. This tender, counsel submitted, was hopelessly inadequate. On the other question, viz., of grazing rights, the defendant made no tender. Counsel proceeded at some length to review the evidence led in the course of the hearing, and submitted that it was clear that the plaintiffs had suffered substantial damages. He admitted that it was extremely difficult to say how much that damage was. The defendant had made a profit of £1,000 out of the wood that he had cut down on the land. He had overstepped his rights to a serious extent, and the erf-holders were entitled to substantial compensation.

Mr. Schreiner entered at some length into an analysis of the rights of the erf-holders in so far as De Erf was concerned as disclosed by the sets of conditions drawn up in 1855 and 1856. He was sure that the way jugal rights, failing which, divorce, by reason of her malicious desertion.

The declaration set out that the parties were married at Mossel Bay on the 29th April, 1873, out of community of property. There were six children of the marriage surviving, two of whom were minors. The defendant maliciously deserted the plaintiff in March, 1904.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the plaintiff, the defendant had been barred from pleading.

Wm. Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the marriage registers at the Colonial Office, gave evidence as to the registration of the marriage.

Mr. Jones applied for the postponement of the case, in view of the non-arrival of an affidavit sworn by the plaintiff in support of his case.

The defendant appeared in person, and said she wished to explain that she left her husband because he did not support her, and had not supported her for five years. She had a letter from the plaintiff, in which he said he would not take her back again. Witness resided in town.

Maasdorp, J., advised the defendant to appear when the case was again called.

The case was postponed sine die.

HEYDENRYCH V. FRAME.

Security given by wife—Senatus consultum Vellejani.

This was an action brought by Benjamin G. Heydenrych, financier, of Observatory-road, against Mrs. Frame, wife of Alexander K. Frame, of Wynberg, to whom defendant was married out of community, to recover a sum of £146 9s., with interest from the 5th February, 1896, upon a promissory note.

The declaration set out that on the 25th April, 1904, plaintiff sued the defendant in this Court upon two promissory notes for £146 9s. and £19 10s., with interest. The latter claim was settled by defendant, after issue of summons and before the hearing; but upon the former claim, the Court ordered plaintiff and defendant to go into the principal case, costs to be costs in the cause. On the 5th February, 1896, defendant was, and still is, indebted to plaintiff in the sum of £146 9s., as and for money lent and advanced to her, and on the same date he received from her the promissory note now sued upon. Defendant failed and refused to pay the said sum. Alternatively, plaintiff said that on the 5th February, 1896, defendant was indebted to him in the sum of £146 9s., and on that date she undertook to repay the said sum, with interest. She refused and neglected to pay the said sum, wherefore plaintiff claimed payment of the note, with interest from the 5th February, 1896, and costs.

Defendant, in her plea, admitted the formal allegations, except that she craved leave to refer to the annexure for the true construction of the acknowledgment of debt. Prior to the 5th February, 1896, the plaintiff had from time to time advanced to the defendant's husband Alexander Kay Frame various sums of money, against which indebtedness payments were made from time to time by the said Alex. K. Frame. Amongst the moneys so advanced is the amount of £200, advanced on the 2nd December, 1893, for which the plaintiff received from the said A. K. Frame an acknowledgment for £230, being for capital and interest. Defendant signed the same as surety for and on behalf of her said husband, and not otherwise. Defendant's husband, by payments made from time to time, reduced the amount to £146 9s., for which balance an acknowledgment of debt was given and signed by defendant as surety for her husband, and not otherwise. Defendant at no time received any consideration from and out of the said acknowledgment, and was not a public trader, and when she signed the said acknowledgment as surety for her husband as aforesaid, the meaning and effect of the benefits and exceptions which she purported therein and thereby to renounce were not explained to her by a notary or at all, nor did she understand the same, and the said exception of the senatus consultum vellejani was hereby opposed to plaintiff's claim as against her. On the 5th March, 1896, £300, and on the 25th March, £55 14s., were paid by her husband to plaintiff in full and complete settlement between her husband and plaintiff, and no part of the said sum of £146 9s. was due to the plaintiff.

Plaintiff, in his replication, said he denied that the sum of £200 was advanced to defendant's husband, or that she signed an acknowledgment in respect to the said sum as surety for her husband and without receiving any consideration therefor. He said that the defendant herself applied to him, through her attorney, for a sum of £200, and the said sum was advanced to her and not to her husband. He did not admit that the meaning and effect of the exceptions were not explained to defendant. As regarded the alleged settlement, plaintiff admitted that there was a settlement between himself and A. K. Frame in 1896, but he denied that the sum now in dispute was included therein.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Gardiner), for plaintiff; Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. Upington), for defendant.

Mr. Burton submitted that the onus lay upon the defendant to prove her case.

Mr. McGregor said he was quite prepared to take the issue, and he at once called

DUFFUS AND CO. V. TOBIAS.

Provisional sentence—Promissory note—Excussion of principal debtor.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence on an acknowledgment of debt for £58, balance upon the sale of certain horses, with interest.

Mr. Close (for the defendant) read an answering affidavit, by his client, who said that not only did he owe the plaintiffs nothing, but they owed him £16 for a mule. Counsel read supporting affidavits by Berman and Carn, to the effect that the claim had been settled.

Mr. Gardiner read a replying affidavit by D'Arcy Weaver, manager of the plaintiff's horse bazaar, who denied that the promissory note given by one De Villiers had been accepted in full settlement of the purchase price of the horses—£83 10s. De Villiers gave a promissory note, but it appeared unlikely that they would be able to secure anything on it. Berman, whose estate had since been sequestrated, was the purchaser of the horses. The defendant had already been given credit for the price of the mule. The claim had also been reduced £20 by reason of a payment.

Mr. Close, having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, J.: Two defences have been set up to the claim for provisional sentence. The first defence, which has been set up by the defendant himself, is one of fact, namely, that he has paid the debt. The second defence is one of law raised by his counsel, and is that the defendant is only a surety, and that the principal debtor has not been excused. As to the defence on the facts, it is alleged that the plaintiff accepted a promissory note signed by one De Villiers in full settlement of the debt. From the documents before me, however, I think that the plea of payment has failed. De Villiers' promissory note did not fully cover the debt, the plaintiff says he received it only as a collateral security and that it has not been paid; and the correspondence showed that plaintiff had asked defendant's instructions as to taking legal proceedings against De Villiers. Under these circumstances, I cannot accept defendant's version as against the plaintiff's, supported, as the plaintiff is, by the documents. The legal exception is taken by counsel that there has been no excussion of the principal debtor, Berman. There are facts which might be gone into to show that excussion is not necessary under the special circumstances of this case, but at present it is a sufficient answer in law that the principal debtor has become insolvent, and has surrendered his estate. The defence on the facts and on the law having failed, provisional sentence will be granted as prayed, with costs. Of course, it is open to the parties to go into the principal case, if they chose to do so.

FIELD V. IMPEY.

This was an application for provisional sentence on a cheque for £50, signed by the defendant, Mrs. Impey.

The affidavit of Dr. Samuel P. Impey stated that he saw one Rademeyer in regard to a mare at Claremont. He did not purchase the animal, which proved to be Field's. Subsequently, the mare again came under his notice at Kannemeyer's mart, and he eventually effected a purchase on the representations of Kannemeyer and Rademeyer that the animal was sound. He found, however, that the mare lacked staying power, and appeared to tire very easily, and, in consequence of a report by a veterinary surgeon, he repudiated the sale. The cheque was made out by Mrs. Impey. Affidavits by veterinary surgeons were read to the effect that the mare was suffering from disease of the heart and deformed hocks, one of the deponents stating that he had previously examined the animal while she was in the possession of Rademeyer for a client, and that he refused to pass her as sound.

An answering affidavit by an employé of the plaintiff stated effect that the mare had been employed on trying work, and had worked well. An affidavit by Mr. Kannemeyer denied that he had guaranteed to the defendant that the horse was sound. The plaintiff, in an affidavit, denied that he had given a guarantee or authorised anyone else to give a guarantee. He drove the horse regularly for five months, and the only fault he had to find with her was that she shied at trams. An affidavit by Rademeyer, a horse dealer, stated that he was not the agent of the plaintiff in the matter of the sale. He bought the horse from the plaintiff, and received no guarantee for it.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Russell) for plaintiff. Sir H. Juta, K.C., for defendant.

Sir H. Juta submitted that it was beside the mark for the plaintiff to say that Kannemeyer was not his agent. The only consideration that Mrs. Impey got for this note was the sale to her husband. He submitted that upon affidavits the Court could not decide where the truth lay.

Without calling upon Mr. Searle,

Buchanan, J.: If, as counsel argues, the sale was effected solely by Kanne-meyer, it follows that he is the only person that could have given a guarantee of soundness. Kannemeyer positively denied that he ever gave such a guarantee, or that he was authorised to give such a guarantee. The horse was sold and delivered some days before the post-dated cheque was sent by defendant to plaintiff, and it was only the day before the cheque was to be presented that the defendant repudiated the sale. Under these circumstances, and in the absence of a guarantee, provisional sentence must be given, with costs. The parties, if they chose, may go into the principal case.

HILLIER V. HILLIER. { 1905.
Feb. 16th.

Mr. Van Zyl said that plaintiff had claimed for restitution of conjugal rights, and obtained a rule calling on the defendant to return on or before 1st January, or to show cause by the 1st February why a decree of divorce should not be granted. Personal service had been effected, and there was no appearance.

ESTATE WEIDEMANN V. DE VILLIERS.

This was an application by a trustee for an order amending certain proof of debts. The respondent put in a preferent claim, and it was accepted by the Resident Magistrate of Richmond at a second meeting of creditors by virtue of a deed of hypothecation for £150 on a promissory note passed by the insolvent and his brother, and £46 15s. 6d. in respect of certain eight donkeys alleged to be held as security, and to remain his property until paid for. The application was to make the respondent rank as a concurrent creditor. The affidavit of Carl Paul, the sole trustee, set out that the respondent claimed £75 in respect of a certain promissory note for £150 and £46 15s. 6d. It appeared from the deed of hypothecation that the debts secured and covered were the joint debts of the insolvent and A. C. Wiedemann, but deponent denied that they were covered thereby.

The affidavit of the respondent set out that the claim for £75 was half the insolvent's liability in the joint note signed by his brother and himself. They signed the note jointly and severally. The respondent's brother bought fourteen donkeys for deponent's account, and he paid for them. He then sold the donkeys to the insolvent and his brother, and they passed the promissory note, jointly and severally, binding themselves that the donkeys would remain deponent's property until paid for. The donkeys were specially mentioned in the hypothecation, because he thought the debtors might pay for the donkeys in which case they would have to be accounted for.

Mr. Close was for the applicant, and Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Buchanan, J., said it was clear that the creditor was entitled to the benefit of the deed of hypothecation. He thought that the application to strike out the preferent claim of his deed of hypothecation altogether failed. The trustee also claimed to strike out the preferent claim over certain eight donkeys. The claim for preference over the donkeys failed, and the proof of debt must be declared as only concurrent in regard to the claim upon the promissory note, and for which the donkeys were security. There would be no order as to costs.

Mr. Upington moved for leave to withdraw the surrender value of a certain policy upon the life of her husband. The surrender value of the policy was £93 odd, after providing for the loans obtained by her husband. The Master recommended that fresh trustees should be appointed.

Buchanan, J., said that it would be necessary to appoint a fresh trustee to give the petitioner authority to withdraw the surrender value of the policy.

Order granted, appointing Mr. W. T. Buissinne as trustee under the ante-nuptial contract, with authority to realise the policy for the beneficiaries under the ante-nuptial contract.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

TRIAL CAUSES.

MCGREGOR V. MCGREGOR. { 1905.
Feb. 17th.

Divorce—Forfeiture of benefits—
Division of joint estate.

In actions for divorce, where the parties have been married in community, but the plaintiff has not contributed anything to the common property, division of the joint estate and not forfeiture of benefits should be claimed.

This was an action brought by Beatrice Petronella McGregor, of Cape Town, against Alexander McGregor, butcher, Cape Town, for divorce, by reason of the defendant's adultery, for alimony, custody of the minor children, and forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage. Dr. Greer was for the plaintiff. Defendant had been barred from pleading, but Mr. Gutsche appeared for him on the question of alimony.

Beatrice Petronella McGregor (the plaintiff) said she was married to the defendant in community of property on the 1st November, 1892. There were three children of the marriage. Defendant was very intemperate from the beginning of their married life. In consequence of certain information which came to her knowledge last year, she had inquiries instituted, as a result of which she ceased to cohabit with the defendant in October last. Mr. Pinn, a jeweller, of Adderley-street, called at the house in respect of certain jewellery that Mr. McGregor had bought. Witness knew nothing about the jewellery. Her husband had been assistant manager of De Beers Cold Storage, at a salary of £50 a month. He owned landed property, and about a year ago he told witness that he was worth between £9,000 and £10,000. Witness desired to have custody of the children and maintenance from the defendant. She also desired forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage in community.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did you bring any property to the marriage?]

Witness: No.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is there to forfeit then?]

Dr. Greer: We claim half the property.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You don't at all; there is no prayer to that effect. You claim a forfeiture, and you brought no property into the marriage. If you had asked for a division of the joint property I could have understood.]

Dr. Greer asked for leave to substitute for the prayer for forfeiture, a prayer for the division of the joint estate.

De Villiers, C.J., assented to the amendment of the prayer accordingly.

Mr. Gutsche made an offer on behalf of the defendant.

Witness said she would prefer to have a division of property, defendant to pay the costs of the suit.

Mr. Gutsche said he was instructed that the defendant's salary at the Cold Storage had never been above £30 a month, with a commission on the livestock landed. Defendant was at present out of employment.

A young woman named Frances Harris, of Palace Chambers, gave evidence as to the adultery.

Percy E. J. Crockett, manager of Jamieson Chambers, said that defendant and the last witness came to the Chambers and occupied a double-bedded room for a few weeks.

This concluded the case for the plaintiff.

Defendant said that he valued his property at about £3,000. He was willing to pay plaintiff £5 a month at present for the support of his children; when he was in employment, he would pay more.

Decree of divorce granted, with costs, Mr. G. W. Steytler being appointed receiver to divide the property held in community equally between the plaintiff and defendant. The Court further ordered that the plaintiff should have the custody of the children of the marriage, defendant to have access to them at all reasonable times and places; defendant to pay the sum of £3 a month for the maintenance of each child until such child reaches the age of sixteen years.

TROTT V. TROTT.

Partnership — Account — Participation in profits.

This was an action brought by Charles Trott, of Cape Town, against his brother, Robert Trott, of Johannesburg, for a declaration of rights under an alleged partnership.

From the pleadings it appeared that the plaintiff sued his brother for a declaration that they were partners in business, for an account, for debate, and for the appointment of a receiver and division of the property. It was alleged that in 1899 the plaintiff was in England, and that his brother wrote to him from this country, and said that there was business to be done here. Plaintiff came out here, and thereupon they started business together as Trott Brothers, and carried on the business for some time. No deed of partnership was entered into; they carried on the partnership and went into various transactions. The banking account in the meantime was in the name of the defendant, who had been carrying on business before the plaintiff arrived in this country, and so, for the purposes of finance, that banking account continued as it was. The plaintiff held a power of attorney from the defendant. Eventually the defendant went to Natal and entered into business, and also went to Johannesburg and entered into business there. There were a couple of cases in which the parties sued and were sued, in which the defendant, in his evidence, admitted that he was a partner of the plaintiff as late as August, 1904. Some time during last year it appeared that the defendant, at Johannesburg, began to speculate rather heavily in scrip, which brought about unpleasantness between the two brothers, the defendant eventually taking up the position that the plaintiff was not a partner. The defendant, in his plea, denied the allegations of the plaintiff. He said that there was one transaction—the purchase of certain property—in which they were partners, and that for the rest they were not partners at all, and that the plaintiff was a salaried servant in his employ. He, on his part, claimed from the plaintiff sums of money which he had drawn, and which the defendant said that he (plaintiff) had no right to draw.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Dr. Rainsford), for plaintiff; defendant in person.

Defendant objected to the plaintiff putting in any documents. He stated that he (defendant), was served with a discovery order, and he disclosed all the documents that he had. He served a similar order on the plaintiff's attorneys, but he received no answer.

Sir H. Juta produced the record in the case of Saachs, Chiat and Co. v. Trott Bros. (11 C.T.R., 721), and also the summons in the case of the Table Bay Harbour Board v. Trott Bros.

Defendant asked if the documents had been admitted.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the records in the previous cases had been admitted.

Defendant explained that the cases were commenced by plaintiff in his absence from Cape Town.

Charles Albert Trott, the plaintiff, said he came out to this country in November, 1899, at the invitation of the defendant, to join him in the business of produce merchants. They were proposing to supply the transports. In May, 1901, they opened a store in Waterkant-street. An action was brought against them by Saachs, Chiat and Co., in respect of certain eggs, etc., supplied by the plaintiffs. The banking account was in the name of R. Trott. His brother explained that this difficulty could always be arranged by a power of attorney. They also bought a property in April, 1903, in Chiappini-street. It was transferred to the name of the defendant. His brother thought that if trouble arose afterwards, he would be able to assign or cede the property to some one else by a deed of gift.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You agreed to that arrangement?]

Witness: I had not much stake in the matter.

Did you agree to this arrangement?

Witness: Yes, he had not received any salary from the defendant. In January or February, 1903, defendant went to Natal, and entered into partnership with one Kolter. Moneys were remitted to that business from Cape Town to the extent of about £4,000. The partnership of Kolter and Trott was dissolved, but witness had had no account. In Durban, the business was to purchase military stores, and money was frequently remitted from Cape Town. In Johannesburg they disposed of the military stores from Durban. In May last year the defendant asked for money from Cape Town several times, and kept them short of money here. Witness was at that time in Port Elizabeth. Defendant came down to Cape Town, and began to sell off the stock. He had also withdrawn the power of attorney. In the course of last year, witness, on behalf of Trott Bros., sued one Maisel in respect to a large transaction in suits. (14 570, 703). Witness's brother gave evidence in that case. Witness gave evidence in regard to other transactions, in which he said that they were carrying on a partnership.

During the hearing of the case, some question was raised as to whether a settlement could not be arrived at.

Defendant said that he had offered £1,000 to the plaintiff, to be paid when he was in a position to realise his interest in valuable properties in Johannesburg. At present, he was not in a position to pay the plaintiff anything, because as an asset the properties were not at present worth twopence to him.

Sir H. Juta said that the defendant might cede half his interest to the plaintiff.

Defendant said he had no right to enter into any agreement of cession of his interest in the Johannesburg properties at present, but he believed that in four or five years the properties would be worth a good deal of money.

Witness was cross-examined at some length by the defendant. Witness said he bought three racehorses for over £300 upon a bill, payable at 90 days. He ran the horses and backed them. The horses were afterwards taken by defendant to Johannesburg.

While the cross-examination was proceeding,

His Lordship interposed, and asked Sir H. Juta whom he would suggest as a receiver, because it seemed to him that the work would be a very onerous one.

Sir H. Juta mentioned the names of Mr. Nash, Mr. Gibson, or Mr. Close. He added that he did not think there would be any difficulty in ascertaining what were the partnership matters.

Witness was questioned in regard to a telegram that defendant said he sent from Johannesburg, asking that an advertisement should be put in the "Cape Times" as to his having discontinued business under the style of Trott Bros. Defendant put it to witness that he went to his (defendant's) wife, and snatched the telegram from her hand.

Witness: No, I did not.

By the Court: Witness did not think that there would be above £22 worth of property when he joined the business. When witness came here, the defendant was a fish dealer. He had been unable to find the letter sent to him by defendant, asking him to come out to this country. Witness had been a reader on the press in London, and had made from three to five guineas a week.

Defendant informed the Court that he used to be a member of the East End Shoe Black Society when the plaintiff was born, and that he used to have a box outside Vauxhall. He afterwards went to the United States, and was there for a good number of years. He returned to England and got married. The plaintiff, not satisfied with being his brother, married his (defendant's) wife's sister, and thus became his brother-in-law as well as his brother.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

Wm. Elliott, of the Bank of Africa; Mr. Verster, local manager of the Federal Company, and Mr. Watermeyer, attorney, having given evidence.

Defendant said he had always traded as Trott Bros. He put in letters to show that he never received an order from or took counsel with his brother, but always told his brother what he should do, and gave him orders. He also put in letters to show that defendant had carried on business for himself. He submitted that there had never been a partnership. He declared that during his absence the plaintiff, while in charge of the Cape Town business, lost heavily and "went behind" to the tune of £7,000. Witness, while at Durban, made £16,000 or £17,000. Plaintiff never said he was a partner until the 27th August last, when he had got into difficulties with the business he had been carrying on at Plumstead. When plaintiff arrived in the Colony, witness had a balance of £175. Plaintiff has been paid £18 a month as wages, with £15 a month to meet out-of-pocket expenses.

De Villiers, C.J.: The real question to be decided is whether there has been a partnership between plaintiff and defendant in the conduct of the business of Trott Bros. In my opinion, it is clearly established that there was a partnership between the parties, and, if any doubt existed upon the point, that doubt would be dispelled by the evidence which the defendant himself gave on oath. I cannot assume that the defendant would have sworn a falsehood as to the existence of a partnership if none had existed. The defendant now says that the plaintiff was merely a salaried clerk. If that were so, I should have expected some entry in the books, which have been produced showing payments of salary to the plaintiff, but, instead of that, the plaintiff simply appears to have drawn money as he thought fit. All the facts in the present case seem to me to support the existence of a partnership. If that be so, then the plaintiff is entitled to an account, and he is entitled to the appointment of a receiver and liquidator for the purpose of liquidating the partnership estate. At this stage, it is not necessary for the Court to decide whether the Natal business belongs to that partnership or not. That will be a matter for the receiver to inquire into. Judgment will be given as prayed, with costs, and the Court will appoint a receiver and liquidator to divide the assets of the partnership of Trott Bros. equally between plaintiff and defendant. It will then be for the receiver to ascertain what assets belong to that particular partnership. As to the appointment of a receiver, I should wish the parties to come to some agreement.

Defendant: said he did not wish to appoint a receiver. He preferred that the matter should be dealt with by his lordship. He was without means at present.

His Lordship: But are there no assets in the partnership estate?

Defendant: Absolutely none; I should not be here to conduct my own case if there had been. I have nothing, and I know my brother has a bit less, as far as that is concerned. I believe my furniture would make about £24 more than his.

Sir H. Juta: There is a syndicate share that is going to be worth £15,000 in a year or two, according to the defendant. Counsel mentioned the names of certain accountants to whom the matter could be referred.

His Lordship said that the Court would appoint Mr. Gibson as receiver failing him, Mr. Nash, and the costs must be paid by the defendant.

FIELD AND CO. V. ANNENBERG.

Mr. Gardiner, with the leave of the Court, applied for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent. Order granted.

MCIVOR V. REYNOLDS. { 1905.
Feb. 17th.
" 18th.

This was an action brought by J. McIvor, forwarding and commission agent, De Aar, against Sidney Herbert Reynolds, general dealer, of Prieska, to recover a debt of £79 1s. 4d., forwarding charges, commission, etc.

The plaintiff, in his declaration, said that the defendant was indebted to him in the sum of £96 7s. 3d., goods sold and work and labour done, money paid, and services in and about the forwarding of goods and commission. He admitted that he had received on account £17 odd, leaving a balance due to him of £79 1s. 4d., for which sum he claimed judgment, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Defendant, in his plea, said that, taking into account short deliveries, double agency fees which had been charged by plaintiff, and an agreement made between the plaintiff and defendant that the fees should be reduced from 6d. to 3d. He was not indebted to the plaintiff. Defendant set up a claim in reconvention for £204 4s. 1d., less £74 2s. 1d., in which latter sum he admitted that he was indebted to the plaintiff.

Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. Douglas Buchanan) was for the plaintiff; Mr. Close (with him Mr. Sutton) was for the defendant.

Mr. Gardiner, having provisionally agreed to give up the disputed part of the claim in convention, viz., £4 19s. 3d.,

De Villiers, C.J., said he would lay it upon the defendant to prove his case.

Mr. Close proceeded to call evidence.

George Reynolds, senior partner in the firms of Howes and Reynolds and Reynolds and Sons, carrying on business at Prieska and Britstown, gave evidence.

During the hearing of the case, a question was raised as to the reference of a number of small items in dispute to an accountant, but his lordship remarked that it seemed a pity, where there was such a comparatively small amount in dispute, to go to the expense of a reference, and bringing the matter in court again.

G. H. Reynolds, cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner, stated that the marks were not unreliable on these particular goods. He would not accuse the plaintiff of taking any sugar out of the pockets. He did not make inquiry about the fifty cases of sugar that were not delivered in July. He contended that the plaintiff failed in his duty when he did not compare the advice notes with the railway charges.

Re-examined by Mr. Close: It had taken him months to make up his account through the delay on the plaintiff's part.

Sidney Reynolds, defendant in the action, corroborated his father's evidence with regard to the dealings with McIvor.

The statements of accounts rendered by the plaintiff conveyed the impression that he had received the goods. Witness told the plaintiff there were shortages. He did not think that the plaintiff had the number of way-bills he stated.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: If his father diverted goods it would be shown in the account.

Mr. Close closed his case.

For the plaintiff, Mr. Gardiner called William Todd, partner with the plaintiff, who stated that he received 265 bags of meal in 1902, and delivered them. On August 16 he signed for a short delivery of one bag of mealies. He did not admit the receipt of 368 pockets of sugar. The tanks were originally kept back because carriers refused to load them, but ultimately they were retained as security. The railway regulations provided for payment first with the option of claiming a refund. He did not always get advice notes, and had to be guided by the railway.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: The plaintiff would be advised if anything was short. Some of the accounts were charged at sixpence, but some of them were adjusted. There was not considerable trouble in getting the accounts out of him, and it was incorrect to say that he made mistakes. It was not impossible for his firm to lose goods.

Arthur Welch, checker in the C.G.R. at De Aar, stated it was his duty to get the receipts of goods. He could not find any receipt from McIvor for the fifty pockets of sugar.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the question of the appointment of a referee,

De Villiers, C.J., granted an order as follows: That Mr. Nash, or failing him, Mr. Close, be appointed as referee to check the correctness of the accounts put in by the plaintiff of meal, mealies, sugar, and coffee received and forwarded by him, to check the items in the schedules "A" (as amended) and "B" in the claim in reconvention, to ascertain to what extent these items are accounted for by the documents put in, and to check the summaries, the costs to stand over.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

GENERAL MOTION.

In re THE ESTATE OF THE (1905.

LATE WILLEM KEMPEN. (Feb. 17th.

Dr. Greer moved, as a matter of urgency, for an order removing an order of sequestration against the estate as the executor dative was anxious to pass transfer. The estate had been sequestered in error jointly with that of the surviving spouse. The affidavit of Mr. Van der Byl set out that he had made a search in regard to the estate, and he could not find any sequestration during the deceased's lifetime.

Maasdorp, J., said he would grant a rule nisi calling on all persons interested to show cause why the order of sequestration should not be set aside, the order to be returnable on the 12th March, and to be published once in the "Government Gazette," and in a paper circulating in the Carnarvon district.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY]

ALBERTYN V. BASSON. (1905.
(Feb. 18th.

Sale and purchase -- Suspensive condition.

Goods sold under a suspensive condition remain the property of the seller, even if delivered to the purchaser, until the condition is fulfilled.

This was an action brought by Casparus Petrus Albertyn, of Simon's Town, against Willem Johannes Tobias Basson, of Porterville, to recover certain two mules or their value, £50.

The declaration set out that on or about the 17th February, 1903, plaintiff sold to one J. Kulman six mules for the sum of £106, it being agreed between them that the mules were to remain the property of the plaintiff until they were paid for. Kulman paid £40 in cash, and gave plaintiff a promissory note for the balance, £66, made payable on the 30th April, 1903, the condition that the said mules were to remain the property of the plaintiff until paid for being repeated on the promissory note. The mules were delivered to the said Kulman, but the latter had not paid the balance of the purchase price, and he had now disposed of the said mules, and was too poor to meet his liabilities. Two of the said mules had been traced by the plaintiff to the possession of the defendant, but he refused and neglected to give up the same. Plaintiff claimed return of the said two mules or their value, £50, interest a tempore morae, alternative relief, and costs of suit.

Defendant, in his plea, admitted the sale from plaintiff to Kulman, but denied that it was agreed between them that the mules should remain the property of the plaintiff until they had been paid for. He had no knowledge of the alleged promissory note, and put the plaintiff to proof of his allegations. He said further that he purchased certain two mules from Christian Basson, and that he was unaware that the plaintiff had any right in the mules. He prayed that the claim be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Van Zyl for plaintiff; Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers for defendant.

Casparus Petrus Albertyn (the plaintiff) said he went to the defendant at Porterville, and explained to him how Kulman had got hold of the mules. He asked the defendant for two mules that he saw, and identified them as having been in his possession. Defendant said that he had bought the mules from his nephew, who had bought the animals from Kulman. Witness stated that the mules belonged to him, but Basson refused to give them up. Witness told Basson that he must not give up the animals to any one else, and that he (witness) would hold him responsible for them.

Cross-examined: He sold the mules to Kulman, while the latter was at Simon's Town, having carried on business there as a general dealer. He read over the promissory note to Kulman at the time it was signed.

[Hopley, J.: What language does Kulman speak?]

Witness: You can hardly tell what he speaks, sometimes he speaks English and sometimes Dutch. He is a Jew.

[Hopley, J.: I suppose he will speak both badly?]

Witness: Yes.

Further cross-examined: Witness found that the promissory note was not paid. He received a letter from Kulman's trustee offering him 5s. in the £. He went down to Porterville in April, 1903, just after the note was due, but he was unable to find Kulman. His intention was to fetch his mules. The first intimation that he had of Kulman's insolvency was when he received the offer of 5s. in the £ in May, 1904. He went down to Porterville during the same month in order to recover his mules. He had threatened in a letter to Kulman to sue him, but he had not actually taken proceedings. Basson told him that he had paid £60 for the pair of mules in question.

Re-examined: Witness refused to accept the offer in Kulman's insolvent estate.

Nicolaas Albertyn (son of the plaintiff) said he wrote out the promissory note (produced), and read it over to Kulman. Kulman paid £40 in cash, and signed the note. He was satisfied that Kulman understood the document, and that he knew the conditions perfectly well when he took the half dozen mules away.

[Hopley, J. (to Mr. De Villiers): There seems to be no dispute as to the identity of the mules?]

Witness: We don't know anything about that; we know nothing as to the identity of the mules.

Robert Christoffel Laurie, of Porterville, said that to his knowledge Mr. Albertyn came to Porterville to inquire about certain mules. On one occasion while witness was in Mr. Albertyn's company, Mr. Albertyn saw some mules in the street, and pointed out two that he said belonged to him. On the following morning, they went to Mr. Basson's farm, and Mr. Albertyn picked out two mules. Basson said that he had got the mules from another Basson (Christian), who obtained them from Kulman.

Philip T. R. Hodges, law agent, Simon's Town, spoke to instructions that he received from the plaintiff as to recovering the money on the promissory note. As to the offer he received from Mr. Masterton, as trustee in the estate of Kulman, witness replied on behalf of the plaintiff that he could accept no compromise, and must require immediate compliance with the note.

Mr. Van Zyl closed his case.

Joseph Kulman, general dealer, of Porterville, said that he sold or exchanged the mules after the purchase from plaintiff. He did not understand the condition in the note that the mules were not to be sold. He had other mules at his place.

[Hopley, J.: You thought as long as you kept six mules at your place it would be all right?]

Witness: Yes. Continuing, witness said that shortly after he had returned to Porterville he exchanged two of the mules with Christian Basson for a horse and mule and some money. He went away to Namaqualand with mules, and returned to Porterville in June, going again to Namaqualand a little later. In May, 1904, witness became insolvent.

Christian Basson, stock trader, said he was not related to defendant. He spoke to the transaction with Kulman, in which he gave a horse, mule, and £27 for two very good mules that Kulman had. This was in March, 1903.

[Hopley, J.: It did not take Kulman long to make £27 out of those mules, seeing that he only got them in February.]

Witness (continuing) said he sold the mules to Willem Basson for £60.

Willem Johannes Tobias Basson (the defendant), a transport rider, of Porterville, said that he paid £60 cash for the mules. About the end of May, or the commencement of June, he was called upon by Mr. Albertyn and Mr. Laurie, and the former demanded the two mules, which witness had bought from Christian Basson. Witness told plaintiff that if the mules were his, and Christian Basson would return the purchase money, he would give up the animals. Christian Basson refused to refund the money. He still had the mules.

[Hopley, J.: I suppose if you lose this case you will come back on Christian Basson?]

Witness: I shall be obliged to.

[Hopley, J.: And he will come back on Kulman.]

Mr. De Villiers closed his case.

Mr. De Villiers, having been heard in argument on the question of the suspensive condition of the promissory note, and as to whether there had been a waiver of such condition on the part of the plaintiff. Without calling on Mr. Van Zyl.

Hopley, J.: The question raised in this case is not a new one. It has been decided in several cases, and it must be held to be established law that these conditions are valid, and that when goods are handed over by a seller to a purchaser under a suspensive condition, the goods remain in the ownership of the seller until the condition is fulfilled. The cases quoted by Mr. De Villiers, of Quirk's Trustees v. Liddells Assignees (3 Juta 322), and Faasbooi v. Shaw, to which may be added the case to which I have referred, Wolfe v. Rogers, in the High Court, all establish that position most clearly. What I would say is that, as a suspensive condition attached to a property which has been handed over to a purchaser opens the door to a considerable amount of fraud, assuming that the purchaser is a dishonest man, and as honest people are likely to be deceived into the idea that the goods are already the property of the purchaser—as these conveniences arise from such conditions they would have to be very clearly proved in every case, and established beyond any doubt whatever. But once they are established they seem to be perfectly valid and good, and the unfortunate person who deals with a dishonest purchaser has himself to suffer for the fact that he has dealt with a dishonest man, much the same as a man who buys property from a thief. In this case I hold that the evidence is really all one way. The promissory note shows it, and the parole evidence is to the same effect, that there was a suspensive condition when Albertyn sold these mules to Kulman. The property never passed from the plaintiff, and he is entitled to reclaim it. Under these circumstances, as far as I can see the Court has no option but to give judgment for the plaintiff. Judgment will be given as prayed for the plaintiff for the delivery of the two mules or their value, £50, defendant to pay costs of suit, including plaintiff's expenses as a necessary witness.

Ex parte WALLIS, JUN.

Dr. Rainsford moved, as a matter of urgency, for the appointment of a provisional trustee in the insolvent estate of Hirsch Braun Annenberg, general dealer, of Oudtshoorn, who was indebted to petitioner in a sum of £6,685.

Petitioner was appointed provisional trustee, with power to continue the business, pending the election of a permanent trustee.

Hopley, J., remarked that he was averse to granting orders of this kind where the stock was not perishable, but the father in this case represented the great bulk of the claims.

Ex parte GILBERT AND SHERET.

Mr. Alexander moved, as a matter of urgency, for an order compelling George Victor to give up possession of certain premises, known as the Bachelors' Club, Wynberg. Petitioners said that the sum of £320 was due as and for rent for eight months. The present lessee intended to surrender his estate.

Rule nisi granted, calling upon the respondent to show cause on Thursday next, the 23rd February, why he should not be ordered to give up possession of the premises, and pay costs of this application.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

APPEALS.

NEL V. KLEINHANS. { 1905.
{ Feb. 20th.

Water Act, 1899—Functions of Water Court—Prescription.

In an application to a Water Court for the distribution of a stream under the 11th section of Act 40 of 1899, it was pleaded that the stream was a perennial one as far as it flowed over the respondent's land, but that they, being upper proprietors, had for upwards of thirty years continuously diverted all the water so as not to allow any to flow to the applicant's land. Evidence was taken in support of the plea, and the application was dismissed.

Held on appeal, that the Water Court was right in taking the evidence, and as the weight of the evidence supported the plea, the appeal was dismissed.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Water Court, of Ladismith, relating to certain water rights in a stream called the Hoek River for irrigation, and other purposes.

The notice of appeal called upon the respondents to show cause why a judgment of the Water Court, given in an application made by appellants, as owners of the farm Weltevreden, should not be set aside or varied, because it did not state whether the application was dismissed on exceptions, pleas in abatement, pleas on the merits, or pleas in prescription, the reason of the appeal being that appellants, desired the order of the Water Court to be in such a form that they may know what the judgment of the Court was.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for the appellants (applicants in the Court below).

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. M. Biset and Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers), was for the respondents.

Sir H. Juta said that the application to the Water Court was made under sections 11-14, of Act 40 of 1899, for a reasonable apportionment of the water of the perennial stream called the Hoeks River for irrigation, and other purposes. At the hearing, the respondents took the point, an important one, that the applicants could not proceed under sections 11-14, stating that the use, diversion, and appropriation of the water of the stream referred to in the application were in dispute between applicants and respondents, and that such dispute could only be completely dealt with by the Water Court, under section 15 of the Act. Section 16 provided that in the event of a dispute pending as to the use, diversion, and appropriation of water, the case could only come before the Court if both the parties had agreed to the jurisdiction. Counsel went on to say that in this case the parties had not agreed. The first point that arose was whether the Court could deal with the application, under this section, or at all inasmuch as there had been no consent to the submission to the Water Court.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Your clients were the applicants; is it in your mouth now to say that the Court had no jurisdiction?]

Sir H. Juta: The judgment is, "Application dismissed with costs." We want to know on what ground it was dismissed, because that decision may become res judicata, if not appealed against. Is it that the Water Court has not jurisdiction to try the case? I am inclined to think that the Court would be perfectly right if it said it had not jurisdiction. Counsel (replying to the Chief Justice) said that they had only just been supplied to the reasons for the judgment, but those reasons, to his mind, did not make one any the wiser. He went on to read the reasons for the judgment.

[De Villiers, C.J.: There seems to be no doubt as to the reason for the judgment. It appears that there was no water to distribute, seeing that the upper proprietor is entitled to the whole of the water.]

Sir H. Juta argued that this was an exception to the jurisdiction of the Water Court, because the application could not be heard without a consent in writing from both parties.

Mr. Schreiner (answering the Chief Justice) said his contention was that the Water Board had jurisdiction under the Act to deal with this application.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Then your client was wrong in his contention in the Water Court that they had no jurisdiction?]

Quite wrong, by lord. Counsel went on to submit that the Court had jurisdiction, and that they were obliged to do as they did on the merits—dismiss the application—because there was no water that they could distribute. His learned friend asked that the order should be varied, but he had not told them in what way it should be varied.

Sir H. Juta in reply, said that he had already asked that the Court should remit the matter to the Water Court, and let them say on what grounds specifically, they dismissed the application. The Water Court had dealt in their judgment with the distribution in the very dry season of 1903, and not with the normal flow.

De Villiers, C.J.: This is the first case of an appeal from a decision of a Water Court proceedings, and I am bound to say, after a careful perusal of the proceedings, that this Water Court have conducted the proceedings in a calm, judicial, and, in every sense, satisfactory way. Some doubt was expressed at the time of the passing of the Act as to whether the Water Courts would be a success or not, and I must say that if all the Water Courts hereafter should conduct their proceedings upon the model of this Water Court there would be every reason to be satisfied. My own view was that it was a pity that the old Landdrost and Heemraden were abolished, because they worked very satisfactorily. The members were conversant with the local circumstances, and were in a far better position to do justice between the parties than a Judge trying the case hurriedly on circuit, or even the Supreme Court, hearing the case here at greater leisure. First of all, the case raised by the applicants themselves was that this stream is a perennial stream, and that the respondents are not entitled to divert water out of such stream by reason of their ownership of the farm. Then the first objection taken by the respondents was that the use, diversion, and appropriation of the water of the stream are in dispute between applicant and respondents, and such dispute can only be competently dealt with by the Water Court under section 16 of the Act.

But this point could not be decided until evidence was taken, and the nature of the evidence which would be given by the respondents themselves was indicated by the third plea, in which the respondents say "for a period of thirty years and upwards they have continually, adversely, and of right diverted the water of the stream referred to in the application, so as to use all the normal flow—that is, the whole flow of the stream, except abnormal increases from time to time caused by floods, and that by such diversion and use they have acquired a right to continue to use independently of any general riparian rights." The applicants joined issue upon this plea. They did not then withdraw their application and say, "As this question is raised, we shall now proceed under another section," but they proceeded and insisted upon their right to a distribution of the water, which they claimed to be a perennial stream. Clearly, then, it was the duty of the Water Court to inquire whether there was any water to distribute. If it were a perennial stream, there would prima facie be water to distribute; but if the respondents had, as they pleaded, acquired a right to the use of all the water by prescription, then there would be no water to distribute. But how was the Water Court to decide this point without evidence? It was bound to hear evidence; without evidence, it would be wholly impossible to decide the case. I take it that the application was dismissed because, in the opinion of the Water Court there was no water to distribute. The evidence is voluminous; there was evidence given on both sides, but, although there is no appeal on the merits, I am bound to say that there was very strong evidence on behalf of the respondents as to the actual diversion of the water for many years. Old residents were called, who said that they had never known the water to be taken otherwise than by the respondents. After that evidence, the Water Court, in my opinion, was quite justified in coming to the conclusion that the applicant had not proved that there was any water to distribute. That, in my opinion, is the result of that evidence. Whether that judgment can be registered or not is not a question that falls within the purview of the present case. This is an appeal against the judgment, and all we can decide is whether the judgment is correct or not. As at present advised, I should be inclined to think that as evidence was taken upon the matter, the decision would be a decision hereafter as against the applicants, to the effect that the right had been acquired. But it does not come within the purview of the present case to decide that point. In my opinion, the Water Court was quite right in holding that the respondents had acquired the right to take away all the water, that there was no water to distribute, and consequently the appeal will be dismissed, with costs.

REX V. VAN NIEKERK. } 1905.
Feb. 20th.

Summons in criminal case—Description of offence.

A summons charged the defendant with cutting wattles and saplings in violation of regulations made by the Government in that behalf, but did not allege that the defendant had done so without a licence or permit from the Government. The particular regulation was not mentioned in the summons, nor was it produced at the trial, but it was produced at the hearing of the appeal, from which it appeared that a person cutting such wattles and saplings without the licence or permit provided for in section 1 of these regulations, shall be liable to the penalties of section 16 of Act 28 of 1888.

Held, that as the specific regulation was not mentioned in the summons, it was necessary that the summons should contain a full description of the offence charged.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Namaqualand, who had convicted the appellants of contravening section 16 (sub-section b), Act 28 of 1888, in that they cut, injured, destroyed, or removed, in violation of the regulations made by the Governor, certain wattles, saplings, or other forest produce. Mr. Gardiner was for the appellants; Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown.

Mr. Gardiner (for the appellant) said that he wished to point out that no regulations had been made by the Governor as provided by the section.

Mr. Howel Jones (for the Crown) said that regulations were published in the "Gazette" of the 7th August, 1900, and produced a copy of the "Gazette."

Mr. Gardiner said that he had not previously been aware that such regulations had been published, but he would take the objection that the regulations were not produced at the hearing in the Court below. Counsel read the record of evidence taken in the Court below. The appellant Van Niekerk held the land from which the saplings were said to have been cut under the lease. Counsel submitted that the summons did not disclose evidence upon which the accused could be convicted, and was otherwise vague and uncertain. Both the prosecution and accused came into court without knowing that regulations had been made relating to the subsection (b). Evidently, the Crown in the Court below relied on the conditions in the Government notices, and in the leases under which the lands were held. As regarded Van Niekerk particularly, counsel contended that there had been no evidence that he had committed an offence. Van Niekerk said he did not give Coetzee permission to cut wood for sale, nor did he (Van Niekerk) cut wood for sale. Van Niekerk certainly had risked the cancellation of his lease, but he had not committed a criminal offence. The only evidence was that Van Niekerk authorised Coetzee to cut wood for his own use merely.

Mr. Howel Jones submitted that, on the judgment given in the case of Re v. Adams (10 C.T.R., 756), publication of the regulations in the "Government Gazette" was sufficient for the purposes of the prosecution. No prejudice, he contended, had accrued to the appellants. He submitted that no flaw could have been found on the summons, and that the case for the prosecution was fairly and clearly put before the accused when the summons was served upon them. With regard to Van Niekerk, he submitted that Van Niekerk himself knew that under the conditions of his lease he was prohibited from taking wood. On the question of the validity of the summons, counsel quoted the case of Wykeham v. Beaconsfield Municipality (5 High Court, 296). He contended that it was not necessary to give proof of the bye-laws or regulations which had been made in every prosecution that was taken.

Mr. Gardiner, in reply, submitted that the cases quoted by his learned friend did not apply to the present case. In the case of Home (11 Juta), it was laid down that, apart from any regulations there was no offence. The notice published in the "Gazette" set out that the regulations were in lieu of those published in Proclamation 575 of 1895. The Court did not know whether those regulations of 1895 were purely local. Again, the offence was not in the same terms as the Act. The regulations said "cutting forest produce without a permit." The summons did not mention a permit, and there was nothing to show that the accused had no permit.

De Villiers, C.J.: The ground on which this appeal was, in the first instance, urged is not, in my opinion, a good one. The objection raised was that the specific regulation under which this charge was laid was not set forth in the summons, but that was not really the objection taken at the trial. But, assuming that the summons had correctly mentioned the specific regulation, it would still have been necessary in the summons to set out in distinct words the offence with which the accused was charged. Now the offence is thus stated in the summons: "That the said Van Niekerk and Coetze did, in violation of regulations made by the Government in that behalf, cut, injure, take, destroy, or remove a quantity of wattles, saplings, or other forest produce, the property of the Crown, which they did not require for their own use." That, by itself, is not enough, because the offence described by the regulations is as follows: "(13) Any person who injures or destroys, or who cuts, takes or removes, from undemarcated forest, wattles, saplings, or forest produce, without the licence or permit provided for in section I. of these regulations, shall be liable to the penalties of section 16 of Act 28 of 1888." Clearly, therefore, the exact offence is not stated. The omission of the words "without a licence or permit provided for in that section" is, in my opinion, fatal, because under the regulation the cutting of the wood is not an offence, but the cutting without a permit is. It may well be that if the words omitted had been inserted the burthen of proving that he had a permit would have been on the defendant. That is a question depending upon the rules of evidence, which cannot affect the general principal, that a person charged with an offence is entitled to know the precise charge made against him. In the present case the prosecutor not only omitted to mention the regulation under which the charge was made, but he omitted from his charge important words which enter into the definition of the offence given by the regulation produced in this Court on appeal. The appeal must be allowed.

PINKUS V. FENSTER. { 1905.
Feb. 20th.

Sale and delivery—Dominium—
Rent—Sale in execution.

The claimant, a collector of rents, who was personally responsible to the lessor of certain premises for the payment of the rents thereof, purported to buy from the lessee certain furniture in satisfaction of the rent due, but the furniture was not delivered to the claimant.

Held, that upon the attachment of the furniture in execution of a judgment obtained by a creditor against the lessee, the claimant was not entitled to claim the furniture as being his own property.

This was appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of the Cape upon an interpleader summons taken out by the present respondent, Julius Fenster, upon a writ of execution issued in a judgment against one Carn.

On the 5th July last, Pinkus obtained a judgment against Carn, and certain goods were taken in execution of that judgment. Then Fenster brought an interpleader summons against Pinkus, and alleged that the goods seized, or portion of them, were his property. It was against the decision of the Magistrate upon that interpleader summons that the appeal was brought.

From the record it appeared that Fenster's case was that the furniture taken in execution, was sold to him for £12 in satisfaction of rent due, which he (Fenster) collected on behalf of the landlord (Mr. Rayner). The judgment of the Court below was that the articles set out in the list were not liable to execution, but that the other articles be declared executable, with costs to applicant.

Dr. Greer (for the appellant) contended that the circumstances were altogether suspicious, and that, as a matter of fact, there never was any delivery from Carn to Fenster. If these extraordinary transactions were allowed there would be no security whatever to creditors.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the great case on the point was Harris v. Buissin. (2 Menz., 105.)

Dr. Greer said that he had been unable to find that particular case.

De Villiers, C.J.: If in this case the claimant had himself been the landlord something might have been said in favour of the judgment of the Magistrate. It might then have been argued that the landlord by virtue of the tacit hypothec for his rent had a quasi possession of the articles alleged to have been sold, and by virtue of his tacit hypothec he had a prior claim to that of the execution creditor so long, at all events, as the furniture remained in the leased premises. But it is not the landlord who is in question, but a man called Fenster, who is a collector of rents, and receives a salary and is liable to deductions for losses that might be sustained if tenants fail to pay their rents. Well, this collector of rents arranged with the debtor that for two months' rent that was due the furniture should be sold to him, not to the landlord, but there was no delivery according to the evidence, the property remained with the debtor, and apparently was to remain there as security to Fenster. Anyhow, there never was a delivery, such a delivery to Fenster as to pass the dominium to him. Accordingly, when there was an attachment of the property, the goods which still belonged to the debtor were properly attached, and the circumstances of the case do not satisfy me that it was in any sense of the word a bona fide sale, and delivery to Fenster. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that the Magistrate was wrong in holding that Fenster had a good claim. The Court must, therefore, allow the appeal with costs, and declare that all the property was executable.

FELTMAN V. BUIRSKI. § 1905.
(Feb. 20th.

Magistrate's Court—Exception to summons—Vague and embarrassing.

It is a good exception to a civil summons in a Magistrate's Court which is unintelligible and does not give a sufficient indication of the case the defendant has to meet, that it is vague and embarrassing.

This was an appeal from a judgment given by the Resident Magistrate of the Cape, in an action brought by appellants against B. and I. Buirski to recover £12 1s. 6d.

At the hearing in the Court below, the defendants excepted to the summons on the ground that it was vague and embarrassing and bad in law, in so far as it disclosed no cause of action.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said he dismissed the summons as vague and embarrassing, because it seemed that the plaintiff did not know against which of the two defendants his action lay.

Mr. Alexander (for appellant) said that the matter arose out of a debt owing by one Sousa, trading as the Raymoss Co., in Walstreet, for cake and bread supplied. Sousa had left the Colony, and Isaac Buirski had been in lawful occupation of the premises, and B. Buirski had acted as the responsible person in connection with the property. It was agreed between the plaintiffs and the said B. Buirski that the latter should take over the aforesaid debt, and, in consideration, they were to hold the furniture which had been left in the premises by Sousa. Isaac Buirski was really the undisclosed principal in the matter. Counsel submitted that the Magistrate was not justified in holding that the summons was vague and embarrassing. He admitted that the summons was somewhat inartistically drawn, but he urged that it clearly set out the cause of action. If anything, the plaintiffs had been somewhat redundant in setting out the facts in the summons, but no possible prejudice could have occurred to the defendants on the score that they did not know what they were brought into court upon.

Respondent in default.

De Villiers, C.J.: A summons in a civil case before a Magistrate may be good, although not artistically drawn, but it should be intelligible, and should indicate to the defendant the nature of the case which he is expected to meet. The summons now in question is wholly unintelligible without the explanation given by counsel, and even after that explanation it is by no means clear on what ground one, at all events, of the defendants was brought into Court. The Magistrate sustained the objection that the summons is vague and embarrassing, and I am not prepared to find fault with the decision. The appeal must be dismissed.

CIVIL APPEALS.

BOTMA V. NORTON. { 1905.
Feb. 20th.

Interrogatories—Magistrate's discretion.

Plaintiff had sued respondent in the R.M. Court of Paarl before the Acting A.R.M. The defendant applied for interrogatories on which to examine his witnesses. As the A.R.M. was about to leave the Paarl and did not consider that the interests of justice would be furthered by granting the application, he refused it.

Held on appeal, that the A.R.M. had right by exercised his judicial discretion.

This was an appeal from a decision of the A.R.M. of Paarl, in which he refused the application of the plaintiff's attorneys for interrogatories, and dismissed a case in which the plaintiff sued the defendant for £2 18s., for goods sold and delivered. The matter came before the A.R.M. of Paarl on a summons for £2 18s. for goods sold and delivered. The plaintiff's attorneys applied for interrogatories, and the defendant objected to the case being postponed for interrogatories on the ground that he was only acting temporarily as A.R.M., at the Paarl, and was about to leave to take up a permanent appointment at Fort Beaufort, and that the plaintiff had been well aware of this for some time. The plaintiff's application was refused, and as he had no evidence, the case was dismissed, with costs. The Magistrate, in his reasons, said that the defendant, who had been acting as A.R.M., at Paarl, temporarily, at the time the summons was issued, was about to leave for Fort Beaufort, and the plaintiff's attorney was well aware of this. The defendant denied the debt, and suggested that the case should be heard in Fort Beaufort. The Magistrate held that the plaintiff had plenty of time to bring his action, and the defendant would be very much inconvenienced, and the interest of justice would not be served by granting plaintiff's application.

Mr. Close (for appellant) contended that by the Magistrate's decision the plaintiff would be bound to issue another summons in another district. If he was about to leave, the decision would amount to waiting until a man left, and then prove his case, no matter what inconvenience the plaintiff was put to. There was absolutely no evidence given as to why the case had been held over, and counsel submitted that the real test in the case was, even if a person delayed somewhat in bringing his case, whether he had brought it in the right place.

Respondent in default.

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiff, who resides at Tulbagh, sued the defendant in the Court of the R.M. of Paarl, for £2 18s., for goods sold and delivered. The defendant denied the debt, whereupon the plaintiff, instead of proceeding to prove his claim, applied for interrogatories to examine his witnesses. It is not stated what witnesses were to be examined, or where they reside, but I presume the witnesses reside at Tulbagh, where the debt was alleged to have been incurred. The Resident Magistrate heard the defendant, in reply to the application for interrogatories, and in the circumstances of the case, he exercised his discretion in refusing to grant the application. This appeal is based on the ground that the Magistrate did not exercise a judicial discretion. From the facts on the record, and the Magistrate's reasons, I do not find anything to convince me that this discretion had been improperly exercised by the Magistrate. The plaintiff does not reside at the Paarl. The defendant had been at the Paarl for three months on special duty, and the alleged debt had been incurred long before the defendant went to the Paarl. The defendant objected to the postponement of the trial as he was about to be removed to another station. The defendant was prepared to meet the claim, and the plaintiff could not go on with his action. It is suggested on the record that these proceedings were taken purposely to harass and annoy the defendant. In this matter the Magistrate had all the facts of the case before him, and he knew all the circumstances. There is nothing to show on the record that he has not exercised his discretion in a proper manner, and the appeal must be dismissed. To make the matter clear the judgment recorded in the Court below should be absolute from the instance, with costs.

Divisional Council—Negligence—

Councils' Act.

Respondent's wagon had met with an accident traceable to *the negligence of a Divisional Council. The Council pleaded

(1) Respondent had not given notice specifying the time at which the accident had occurred.
(2) That all the funds in repairs had been exhausted.*

Held on appeal, that as respondent had given notice within 14 days, and as they subsequently repaired the road and could have obtained more money by raising the rates, both defences must fail.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Court of the Resident Magistrate of Clanwilliam, in which the present respondent successfully sued the Council for £5 18s. 6d. for damages sustained by reason of the defendants' negligence in not maintaining the main road in proper repair.

From the record it appeared that the plaintiff, while passing carefully with his wagon, drove into an excavation on the road, and the vehicle was overturned. Plaintiff sustained certain injuries, and the wagon was much damaged. The defendant Council pleaded contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, and that they had discharged their duty in keeping the road in repair to the utmost of their ability. An exception was taken to the summons on the ground that notice had not been given to the defendants within fourteen days, as required by the Act. The exception was overruled, the Magistrate holding that there was no prejudice to the defendants. Mr. P. Jones (for appellant) pointed out that the date of the accident was not given in the notice sent to the Council, and consequently they were prejudiced in not being in a position to make proper inquiries as to the state of the road on that particular date. The Magistrate found that there was no contributory negligence, and that the damage was solely attributable to the state of the road, and that the council had not done all in its power to properly maintain the road. Counsel contended, according to the Act, that the Council, having expended all the funds at its disposal, they were relieved from their liability.

Without calling on Mr. Gardiner (for respondent),

Buchanan, J.: The wagon of the plaintiff in the Court below, while travelling over the Main road on the 6th September last, fell into a dangerous hole in the middle of the road, of which hole plaintiff had no previous knowledge. It was night time, and he did not see the hole. The wheel of the wagon was smashed. He thereupon gave notice to the Divisional Council on the 5th October of this accident. Thereupon the Council, having a road party on the road the next day, had the hole repaired. On suing in the Magistrate's Court, the defendants first objected that they did not receive the notice, which was required by the second section of the Act, specifying the time the accident occurred. The Magistrate overruled that objection, and sensibly held that as within fourteen days notice had been given, and no prejudice had resulted to the Council from the fact that the actual time of the accident was not stated in the notice, there had been a substantial compliance with the Act. It was next contended that the Divisional Council was not liable for the damage done, because they expended more money on this road than they received from the rates for road purposes. There are several answers to that, one is that they were actually mending this road, and that they had money at their disposal for that purpose, and that after they received notice of the accident they mended the hole. It was not shown what rate had been levied by the Council, and had they raised the rate they could have had plenty of money to repair the road. The foundation of all these actions is negligence on the part of the Council, as some time before the accident they had received an intimation of the existence of this danger. There was a road party on the road, and the superintendent was informed of the hole, and instead of repairing it he left it in a dangerous condition until the accident occurred, when he immediately repaired it. I think this is as strong evidence of neglect as you can wish for in a case of this kind. The £5 odd claimed seems to be a reasonable amount for damages. It is true that 30s. is for loss of time, and perhaps exception might have been taken to this item, but it is a trifling sum, and has not been objected to. I think there was negligence on the part of the Council, and the Magistrate properly gave judgment against them for the damages which resulted from such negligence. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

LAFAYETTE V. BARNES AND (1905.
OTHERS. (Feb. 20th.

Magistrate's Court—Amendment of summons—Service.

The respondents carried on business as Barnes, Van Staaten and Deans. The appellant sued the firm under that name in an R.M. Court, and the summons was personally served on one of the defendants. Plaintiff's attorney had applied to defendants to disclose the full names of all members of their firm, but this request was not complied with. When the case came into Court, a power of attorney in the name of all and singular the defendants was filed. Plaintiff's attorney craved leave to amend his summons accordingly, but this leave was refused and the exceptions (1) That no proper summons had been issued; (2) That due service had not been effected were upheld.

Held on appeal, that the service was good and that the Magistrate ought to have allowed the summons to be amended.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Aliwal North, in which he allowed certain exceptions to the plaintiff's summons, and dismissed the case. The plaintiff sued for £20 damages for breach of contract, and being unable to obtain the proper names of the defendants, the partnership was summoned, under the style of Barnes, Van Staaden, and Deane, a firm of builders and contractors. Exception was taken to the summons on two grounds: (a) that the partners of the firm should have been joined in the firm with the names of all the partners, as well as the style of the firm, and that the name of the firm was insufficient and bad in law; and (b) that the service was bad and insufficient in law, because a copy of the summons was served on one of the partners outside the place of business. An application by the plaintiff's attorney to amend the summons by inserting all the full names was refused. The plaintiff's attorney previously wrote for the names, and stated that if they were not disclosed he would make formal application for the amendment. The defendants' attorney, in reply to that, contended that the defendants were not bound to assist the plaintiff in bringing the case before the Court in the proper form. The exceptions were sustained and the summons dismissed. The Messenger of the Court served a copy of the summons on Van Staaden only at the former's office. The Magistrate based his judgment on the fact that no proper service had been made on the defendant firm, and the evidence of the Messenger showed that the original and a copy only of the summons were handed to him.

Mr. Upington was for the appellant, and Mr. Molteno for the respondents.

Mr. Upington said the appeal was brought on the ground that the Court had never slavishly followed forms and technicalities where no injustice had been done. There was no question that the defendants knew who the summons was intended for, because they filed a power to defend the case to the final end, and not merely a power to take exception to the summons. The objection under those circumstances that the name of the firm was given, and not the names of the individuals was a sheer technicality which the Supreme Court had never favoured, and, in addition, the plaintiff made reasonable efforts to obtain the names of the parties, and the defendants refused to accord that information. Counsel quoted the 11th rule of the Magistrate's Court, which he contended met the case for the plaintiff, and submitted, further, that to allow mere technicalities such as these exceptions would be a gross injustice.

Mr. Molteno contended that the plaintiff was entirely to blame for the form of the summons. On the 15th November he gave the defendants twenty-four hours' notice to supply the names, and without waiting until the twenty-four hours were up, they issued the summons. A firm, unlike a Corporation, could only be sued through the parties to the firm. The partnership was sued, and there was not an individual mentioned in the summons. The Court would not go so far as to hold it a good summons where there were no names mentioned, as in this case, and where there might have been any number of partners. The summons simply said: "Messrs. Barnes, Van Staaden and Deanes, a firm of builders and contractors," and therefore the firm was summoned, and not the individuals. If the appellant had waited the twenty-four hours, in all probability he would have got the full names.

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiff, Lafayette, a painter, entered into a contract with a firm of builders carrying on business in Aliwal North. He alleges that there had been a breach of this contract, and thereupon he wished to sue the firm for damages for this breach. His attorney, not knowing the names of the partners of the firm, wrote to the firm asking them to supply the names of the individual partners. He gave twenty-four hours for the reply, but without waiting for the expiration of the twenty-four hours, on the same day he issued a summons in this form: "Summon Messrs. Barnes, Van Staaden and Deane, a firm of builders and contractors, the full names of the partners being unknown to the plaintiff," and the names the defendants' attorney has disinclined to disclose. When the matter came into the Court the defendants filed a power of attorney giving their full names, and describing themselves as carrying on business together as a firm. They gave authority to their agent to defend the case to the final end. When the case came on the plaintiff's attorney applied for leave to amend the summons by inserting the full names of the partners in the summons which had been personally served. It is true there was ground for a technical objection to the summons, but when the names had been disclosed, and the plaintiff applied to amend this summons, the Magistrate was clearly wrong in refusing to insert the names which for the first time had been given. The defendant's agent said he did not feel bound to aid the plaintiff in bringing his case, but when once the names were given there could be no possible prejudice to the defendants in amending the summons. The other question upon which the exception was taken was whether there was sufficient service. The summons had been served on one of the partners personally, but not upon the others. The 11th rule of the Magistrate's Court distinctly lays down if two or more persons jointly sued (they are jointly sued here) are partners in trade (they are partners in trade here) service upon either of them shall be sufficient. It is said that the service was not made at the place of business of the firm. True, it was not made at the place of business; but it was personally served on one of the partners. There is no prejudice here, because all the partners have given power to their attorney to defend the case to the final end. The defendants would not supply their full names to the plaintiff, and I do not think the plaintiff ought to be prevented vindicating his claim in Court. The Magistrate was clearly wrong in refusing this application to amend. The Magistrate was right in saying that the summons was bad until amended, but the information upon which the amendment was to be made was wholly in the knowledge of the defendant, and not in the knowledge of the plaintiff. The appeal will be allowed, the application to amend the summons by inserting the full names of the defendants allowed, and the case to be remitted to the Magistrate for hearing on its merits. The costs in the Magistrate's Court will be within the Magistrate's discretion, but the costs of appeal will have to be paid by the respondents.

SEYMOUR V. TUKISI AND ANOTHER.

Summons—Principal—Managing agent.

Though the principal of a shop is the proper person to sue and be sued, the Court will not interfere on appeal where the managing agent of a branch shop, who had previously taken legal proceedings in his principal's interest, has been sued, provided no substantial injustice is done.

This was an appeal from a decision of the R.M. of Mount Fletcher, in which he overruled an exception taken by the defendant (present appellant) that the principal of the firm should have been sued. In the original action in which one Klubi was defendant, Daines and Seymour obtained a writ of execution for 49 goats, and then the goats were claimed by the respondents in an interpleader action. The appellant was summoned, and excepted on the ground that he was the manager of the firm. The Court considered the exception a quibble, as the defendant had received instructions to defend the action, and overruled the exception.

Mr. Sutton was for the appellant, and there was no appearance for the respondents.

Mr. Sutton having been heard in argument,

Buchanan, J.: I quite agree with Mr. Sutton that as a general principle the agent ought not to have been sued, but the principal. But in this case there are special circumstances. The firm of Daines and Seymour have a number of branch agencies in the Transkei, and one Seymour as manager of this agency took out a summons on their behalf, and got judgment against Klubi. In execution of the judgment against Klubi the messenger seized certain stock. This stock is claimed by Tukisi and the other plaintiff, and the Magistrate under the rules of Court directed a summons to be issued to Seymour, the manager of this particular branch, to show cause why the stock should not be released. The man appeared as the agent of the firm, and this was the man who obtained the original summons. On the merits it is clear that the stock seized was not the property of Klubi, but the property of the present respondents. I think, under the circumstances, the technical mistake of the Magistrate in directing the summons to the agent in this case ought not to upset the decision in the interpleader claim. The parties interested were before the Court to decide whether the property belonged to the claimants or to the defendant in the case. The evidence shows clearly that the property belonged to the respondents, and as it has been released, I don't think we ought now to interfere.

MADOLO V. MLIJIMI.

Magistrates's finding on evidence.

The Court refused, on appeal, to reverse a Magistrate's finding on the evidence, though it did not consider his reasons for judgment satisfactory.

This was an appeal from a decision of the R.M. of Victoria East, in an action brought by the plaintiff to recover a cow and calf, or their value, £15, and damages, £5.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for giving judgment for the defendant, with costs, stated that there was absolutely no evidence to prove that the cow and the calf were the plaintiff's property. In the absence of such proof, the plaintiff could not succeed, as everything went to show that the lawful owner was one Nje, and he had no alternative but to give judgment for the defendant.

Mr. Close was for the appellant, and Mr. P. Jones was for the respondent.

Mr. Close contended that the whole of the Magistrate's reasons on the evidence were incorrect. The most important fact was that Nje swore himself that the cattle were the plaintiff's property. Nje had every reason to support the defendant, and not the plaintiff.

Mr. Jones, having been heard in reply,

Buchanan, J.: The action was brought in the Court below by Madolo against Mlijimi for the recovery of a cow and calf, or £15, their value, and damages. The evidence before the Magistrate is every voluminous, and as far as one can ascertain from the record, the action arose out of loans made by the defendant, Mlijimi, to one Nje. Nje himself admits that these loans were made, and that disputes arose between him and the plaintiff in consequence. The first loan was for £3 10s., for which certain goats were alleged to have been pledged. Nje says he did not pledge goats, but pledged grain. He, however, seems to have paid that loan. Another loan of £10 was given, for which the defendant says Nje pledged his cow and calf. The defendant went to Nje, and demanded payment of the loan, and, on Nje failing to pay, defendant took the cow and calf. There is a direct conflict of testimony as to whether the cow and calf belonged to Nje or to plaintiff. The Magistrate, in his reasons, says there is absolutely no evidence to prove that the cow and the calf were the property of the plaintiff, but there is considerable evidence to show that they belonged to Nje. Now there is some evidence on the record in favour of plaintiff's claim, but I take the Magistrate to mean that, in his opinion, it was established that the cattle belonged to Nje. The only question is, whether on the evidence there should not have been absolution from the instance, but the Magistrate has gone through the whole of the case, and in the conflict of testimony he has decided for the defendant. It is useless, therefore, to send the case back, and, although the reasons given are not satisfactory, the Court is not prepared to interfere with the Magistrate's finding, seeing there is evidence to support his judgment. The record shows further a curious conflict of testimony as to what took place before the case came before the Magistrate. Plaintiff has laid his complaint before the headman, who held a council upon the claim. The headman says he found against the plaintiff, but two of the councillors say he found for the plaintiff. As the defendant is in possession of the property, it lay upon the plaintiff to prove that the cattle were his property, and the Magistrate has held that he has failed to do so. It is a question purely of fact. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed, with costs.

DE WET V. JAPHTHA.

Claim in reconvention.

Whatever may be a Magistrate's opinion as to the merits of a defence, he cannot give judgment in reconvention unless the claim is specifically pleaded.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate, of Engcobo, in which the plaintiff was unsuccessful in his action to recover an ox, or its value, £7 10s

The respondent in the Court below denied the debt, and the plaintiff sent in interrogatories to prove his claim. The defendant failed to pay a debt of £34 16s., and he signed a new promissory note for £30 14s., and agreed to deliver up an ox for the remainder of the debt, but failed to do so. The Magistrate, in his reasons, stated that the summons was ambiguous, and it was not clear that the defendant had not a claim in reconvention against the plaintiff. There was no explanation of the plaintiff's failure to attend, but the reason was obvious. The defendant gave his evidence in a clear manner, and he was supported by documents and receipts. It was clear from the evidence, the receipts and promissory notes that the defendant paid the plaintiff £79 16s. 6d. for four oxen, which the latter had taken away. The summons would be dismissed, and there would be judgment for the defendant in reconvention for £79 16s. 6d.

Mr. P. Jones appeared for the appellant, and there was no appearance for the respondent.

Mr. Jones, after arguing on the first claim, pointed out that the plaintiff had no notice of the claim in reconvention, and contended that that judgment could not be allowed to stand. The story told by the defendant was a most improbable one.

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiff, De Wet, sued Japtha for £7 10s. The evidence given as regards this claim is in direct conflict. The Magistrate, believing the defendant and his witnesses' evidence, which he said had been given in a clear and candid way, had no hesitation in believing it, and gave judgment accordingly for defendant. The Magistrate must be held to be right in giving judgment, with costs, for the defendant in convention. But the Magistrate wishing to give the defendant what his evidence disclosed he was entitled to, gave judgment for the plaintiff in reconvention for the sum of £79 16s. 6d. Now the Magistrate was not justified in giving judgment on a claim which had never been pleaded, and of which the plaintiff was unaware. The judgment will be altered to judgment in the Court below for the defendant, with costs on the claim in convention, and the record amended by omitting from the judgment all reference to a claim in reconvention, with costs of appeal.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

TRIAL CAUSES.

ESTATES SWART AND BASSON (1903, V. GREEFF AND WALTER. (Feb. 21st.
Negligence of administrators—
Abuse of trust.

The plaintiff's declaration set out that he resided in Prince Albert. He sued in his capacity as executor dative in the estates of his late parents. The defendants carried on business as law agents at Laingsburg. In March, 1900, the plaintiff employed the defendants to undertake the administration of the estate and to collect certain outstanding moneys in Laingsburg. Plaintiff delivered all the assets of the estate, together with the documents and papers, and the defendants thereupon proceeded to collect the debts. In April, 1900, the plaintiff paid £400 at the defendants' request, and although he had repeatedly called on the defendants to complete the administration of the estate, they had failed to do so. Plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to withdraw the agency and to recover £477 in all, paid into the estate, and £80 damages, with costs.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the plaintiff, and the defendants were in default, having been barred from pleading.

Nicholas Swart, executor dative of his late parents, stated that after he was appointed to his office, he employed a certain Macleod to sell the movables in the estate, which realised £36 0s. 6d., and Macleod collected outstanding debts to the amount of £360. In March, 1900, he transferred the estate to the defendants, because Macleod had left Laingsburg, and he caused to be handed over to the defendants what Macleod had collected. The defendants got all the other assets in the estate. They filed an account, which the Master rejected. Since August last year he cancelled the agency of the defendants, and he had found out that the outstanding debts to the amount of £1,031 had been practically collected. Being one of the heirs, he had to pay one-third of the £1,152, the value of the immovable property. In December, 1900, the defendants said he still owed £400 to settle the whole matter. Since that time they had failed to file any accounts. He had since found as executor that there were certain heirs who had not yet been paid out. The defendants debited the witness with £83 5s. 6d., which had not been paid out to him. Since he assumed the administration, he had filed an account, which was the same as the defendants' account, with the exception that only £25 was allowed for commission. He had suffered £80 damage through the defendants' delay in paying out the heirs, being sued twice by the Master. Certain heirs were about to sue him, and he had a deal of correspondence and attorney's expenses over the matter.

By De Villiers, C.J.: Witness saw Walters in town this morning. Walters was still carrying on business, and he did not believe the firm was insolvent. A cheque had been sent for £200 by the defendants to pay out the remaining heirs, which had been disallowed.

De Villiers, C.J.: The defendants have not appeared in this case, and I take it they practically admit the justice of the plaintiff's demand. I am bound to say that the conduct of the defendants appears to me to be extremely disreputable. They are law agents, practising at Laingsburg. They undertook to administer this estate on behalf of this poor farmer, who implicitly trusted in them. He trusted to their doing the work properly, and he himself apparently was too ignorant to carry on the administration. It clearly was their duty to assist the plaintiff in every way, and to carry on this liquidation, not only expeditiously but honestly, to account for every penny they received, and not to debit the estate for a single penny until that payment was actually made. Large sums we find debited to the estate which have never been paid, and when called upon to account to the plaintiff, the defendants simply lie by, and do not even take the trouble to appear before the Court in order to explain the position. I am not sure that the defendants by their conduct have not rendered themselves liable to a criminal prosecution. The judgment of the Court is for the plaintiff as prayed on all counts, except the last amount, for which there will be damages for £40, instead of £80. The defendants to pay the costs, including the plaintiff's expenses. Judgment against the defendants jointly and severally.

GOUS AND KOESER V. RITTER.

Sale and purchase—Weight of evidence.

This was an action brought by the plaintiffs, farmers at Malmesbury, to recover £562 10s., the price of twenty-five mules, and £50 damages, for pasturing the mules.

The declaration set out that the action arose out of the sale of certain mules, which the plaintiff alleged the defendant entered into, and which the defendant denied. On the 2nd January the plaintiffs jointly sold twenty-five mules, to be selected by the defendant, for £22 10s. each. The mules were to be accepted within eight days from the date of sale, but the defendant failed to do so, although the plaintiffs tendered to him the selection of the mules. Plaintiffs claimed £562 10s., the price of the mules, and £50 for pasturing. The defendant, in his plea, set out that he went with one Cloete to inspect the mules for his principal, who was buying on behalf of the German Government. He merely inspected the mules, and agreed to inform Cloete whether the purchase would be completed or not. Subsequently he wired to Cloete from Caledon that the mules would not be required.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan (with him Mr. D. Buchanan) appeared for the plaintiffs; and Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Russell) appeared for the defendant.

Jasper Gous, one of the plaintiffs in the case, stated that he was a speculator in stock. He was approached by a Mr. Cloete about the end of December or the beginning of January. At that time he had about 40 mules running on the farm. On the 2nd January, Cloete and Ritter came to Malmesbury. Ritter agreed to pay £22 10s. each for the mules delivered at the Docks, and completed the contract by accepting 25 mules at the price if the plaintiff would keep them for a few days. Ritter had not his branding iron with him, and witness objected to Cloete's suggestion to cut them on the head. It was arranged that Ritter should call on the following Friday and pay for the mules. The mules cost witness on an average £22 each. At that time there were several buyers after the mules. Witness understood that the defendant, whom he met for the first time, was going in largely for stock-buying. In the presence of his partner witness explained the position, and Koeser was satisfied, but said that another party who had made an offer must be acquainted with the sale. After that he had an offer for the mules from Mr. Gird. Later on, Cloete wired from Caledon that Ritter did not require mules. In reply, witness insisted on the sale. It took him some time to find out the address of the defendant, and when he did he caused a letter to be written to him from an attorney. The defendant, in reply, denied the sale, stating that he went to Malmesbury with Cloete to buy some mules he had for sale, and pointed out that many of them were very poor. He had suffered damages to the extent of £50 in keeping the mules from the 8th January.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He made arrangements with Cloete to bring Ritter out, and Cloete was to get his commission for putting through the sale. The defendant did not say that he was buying the animals for someone else. The defendant had hardly time to select the twenty-five mules and put them aside. The defendant pointed out that some of the mules were young and thin, but he did not say that he might be able to pick out a few; nor did he say that he would wire to Cloete whether or not he wanted the mules. Without selecting any particular mules he said he would take twenty-five. He was to come back from Caledon to select the mules. He did not know Ritter's address, otherwise he would have communicated with him when he received the wire from Cloete that the mules were not wanted.

Re-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He gave the commission to Cloete on account of the introduction.

Albert Cloete, of Bellville, who introduced the plaintiff to the defendant, stated that the defendant was told by witness that there were twenty-five mules at Malmesbury for sale, and it was arranged they should leave on Monday morning. The defendant, in witness's presence, agreed to take twenty-five mules at £22 10s. each. Ritter, not having his branding iron with him, said that he would come on Friday and pay for and mark the mules. Gous agreed to the mules staying a couple of days at the farm, and asked for a couple of days' notice to secure trucks.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Ritter did not mention anything about selecting a few mules. The defendant might have told witness that he was sorry he could not find his principal.

Nicholaas Koeser, joint plaintiff, stated that he went into speculation with Gous. Witness lent his cart to take them out to the farm. Gous on his return said that Ritter had bought twenty-five mules for £22 10s. each, and witness agreed to let them run on the farm for a couple of days.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Gous told witness that Ritter had no knowledge about mules, and that the defendant would bring a man to pick and brand them on Friday.

The plaintiff Koeser's driver testified to having driven out the defendant, Cloete, and Gous, and hearing a conversation to the effect that Ritter had purchased twenty-five mules at £22 10s. each. He heard Koeser saying that he would refuse the offer from the other man.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Witness only heard what they said when they returned to the cart. There were many more than twenty-five mules on the farm, and the defendant pointed to a few.

Mr. Buchanan closed his case.

Chas. Wm. Ritter, defendant, stated that he was a commission agent and fancy dealer in Cape Town. In December last a friend of his came down from the German territory, and had a commission to buy stock on behalf of the German Government. Witness was to get a commission for giving him assistance, and mentioned the matter to, among others, a Mr. Dreyer, who brought him in contact with Cloete. Cloete, in the presence of Dreyer, said that he had mules for sale at Malmesbury, and witness understood that he was acting on commission. Witness had already bought twenty-five mules and told Cloete that he did not think it worth while to go out. Cloete pressed witness to go out, and witness agreed to do so, but made it clear to Cloete that he would merely inspect the animals, as his principal could not go out with him. When witness got down to Malmesbury, Cloete and Gous pressed him to purchase the mules, and witness then asked Cloete if he had explained the circumstances to Mr. Gous that he was not in a position to buy. Witness asked Gous if the buyer was satisfied would he keep the mules for a few days until the vessel left, and the plaintiff said he would. Witness most emphatically denied that there was a purchase of twenty-five mules at £22 10s. each.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was there any mention of mules when you came back?]

Witness: No, my lord.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Do you suggest that these people are conspiring against you?]

Witness: Yes, my lord.

Continuing, witness said that he bought no mules at Caledon, but he found the mules there better than those at Malmesbury. Witness bought mules provisionally on the parade, which his principal refused to pay for. Witness thought that six or seven of the Malmesbury mules would be suitable, and told Gous so. Witness arranged that he would wire to Cloete what the decision was.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He gave Cloete the name of his principal, and explained definitely to him that he could do nothing without his principal's sanction. He did not give the full circumstances of the case when he wrote to the plaintiffs' attorney, because he thought it was a game of bluff. His principal did not arrange with the German Consul that he and witness should work in partnership. There was a good deal of buying on speculation for the German Government. Witness recognised Cloete as the party he had to deal with. He could not explain why Cloete suggested that the mules should be clipped. The mules at Caledon were very much better than those at Malmesbury.

By De Villiers, C.J.: He would not have given more than £15 for the mules, and he could not come to any arrangement until he had seen his principal. He believed the plaintiffs were conspiring against him. If the mules were only worth £15 he could not explain why he did not say that it was useless to talk about business.

Marthinus Dreyer stated that he communicated with Cloete on what he heard from the defendant. Cloete told the defendant that the cart was hired at Malmesbury, and witness heard the defendant say that he was going to inspect the mules for his principal.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: Witness knew that Cloete had no mules, and the defendant understood that. Witness told Cloete that the defendant had an order for twenty-five mules or more, and horses and oxen.

Mr. Searle closed his case, and counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

De Villiers, C.J.: If the evidence for the plaintiffs is correct, there can be no doubt there has been a concluded contract of sale between the parties. Plaintiffs themselves have both given their version of what occurred on the 2nd January. It was the plaintiff Gous, who, with Cloete, accompanied the defendant on the way from Malmesbury to the place where the mules were, and both he and Cloete state that after the mules had been inspected a definite contract was made between the parties, that the defendant purchased twenty-five mules, which he was to be allowed to select from the troop which was in the enclosure, that he was to pay £22 10s. per head for these mules, that they were to be selected, and branded on a subsequent date, paid for in cash, and delivery to be made within eight days at the docks. That is the definite statement not of one witness, but of all the witnesses, who were present. The driver was not present throughout the whole of the negotiations, but he says he was present after the inspection had taken place, and he heard a conversation which took place between these parties, the details of the conversation agree with the two other witnesses, and their evidence is corroborated by Mr. Croese, who did not accompany the parties to the farm, but remained at Malmesbury. It is further stated on the return of the parties from the farm there was a conversation about Croese's horse, and that he was definitely informed by his partner that the twenty-five mules had been sold at £22 10s. a piece, to be delivered at the Docks—a conversation, according to these witnesses, which was loud enough for the defendant to have heard. When that conversation took place the defendant must have heard it, and if he then did not raise any objection, and did not in any way demur, then his silence may fairly have been taken as a consent to the transaction. Against the evidence of these four witnesses, on the other hand, there is the evidence of the defendant himself. Now, the Court has never been in the habit of counting heads in weighing evidence. The evidence of one witness may be as valuable as the evidence of fifty other witnesses, and if the evidence of one witness is clearly consistent with all the other facts, the Court would not necessarily hold with numerical preponderance. In the present case, however, it appears to me there is not only the greater number on the one side, but the probabilities seem to be on the side of the plaintiffs. The defendant on the Monday was clearly anxious to make a bargain, and when he heard there were other people after the mules, he naturally would like to clinch the bargain. If he delayed someone else would go in and snap up the mules. He had seen Cloete, and taken the trouble to go all the way to Malmesbury on the Monday. He said it was a holiday, but I have no doubt, beyond that fact there was a desire to make this bargain. He thought he might make a good thing of it by disposing of the mules to the German Government. When he met Schmerenbeck, cold water seems to have been thrown on the whole matter, Schmerenbeck thinking that a better class of mule could be bought for £23. Naturally, there would be an anxiety on the part of the defendant to get out of the bargain. I do not mean to say that Mr. Ritter intentionally came here to swear to a falsehood, but I do think he was very eager on the Monday, and no longer eager on the Wednesday, and he led himself to believe there was no bargain. I am confirmed in this view by the disingenuousness of his subsequent conduct, when he tried to show there was no one else in the matter except Cloete, and that Cloete was the man with whom he had to deal. The defendant must have known after his journey to the farm that he was no longer dealing with Cloete, and that Cloete was merely a go-between. Then, again, I was struck by a remark made by the defendant during his evidence, when he said the mules were not worth more than £15. It is impossible to conjecture why he did not at once break off the negotiations, as he could not have hoped to bring the plaintiffs down from £22 10s. to £15. The defendant seems to me to have been somewhat hasty at the time, and if by his words and his conduct he led the plaintiffs to believe that the bargain was concluded, his own feelings and intentions in the matter cannot be taken into consideration. I am of opinion that there was a sale, and the judgment will be for the plaintiffs for £562 10s., as the purchase price of twenty-five mules, on the plaintiffs' tender to allow the defendant to select twenty-five mules out of the forty still in their possession. In regard to the charge for the grazing of the mules under the contract, the plaintiffs would have been bound to keep them until the 10th, and the date of the summons is the 25th, so that there would be fifteen days at 1s. per mule, which would make £18 15s., and there will be judgment for the plaintiffs for the further sum of £18 15s., interest a tempore morae, the defendant to pay the costs, including the plaintiffs' expenses.

Managing agent of mercantile firm—Salary—Share of profits—Agreement with principals—Goodwill.

Where the managing agents of a certain firm had considerably extended their business, and had invested considerable sums of money therein on the termination of their agreement: the Court held that the plaintiffs were entitled to a statement of account and to the percentage specified in the contract.

This was an action for a statement and debate of an account and for a declaration of rights.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1 The plaintiff resides in Port Elizabeth.

2. The defendants carry on business in partnership under the style or firm of Hansen and Schrader, at Port Elizabeth, in this Colony, and they have also offices and carry on business in London, Johannesburg, Delagoa Bay, and elsewhere.

3. In and since the year 1886 and till the end of 1903, the plaintiff was one of the managers of the defendants' business at Port Elizabeth, the other manager being Oscar Bracht, and his engagement was terminated in December, 1903, by the Act of the defendants.

4. The agreements under which the plaintiff was engaged and duly served the defendants, as aforesaid, were:

(a) An agreement for the period ending the 31st December, 1891, dated the 16th December, 1886, signed by the parties to this suit, of which the following is a true copy, to wit:

Mr. A. H. Waite, as one of the managers of Messrs. Hansen and Schrader's

Port Elizabeth business, agrees strictly to adhere to all their instructions, more especially without their sanction not to take up any constituent or supporting account, not to buy shares or landed property and not to stand security for any one.

The yearly balance-sheet shall on all occasions be prepared in strict accordance with Messrs. Hansen and Schrader's instructions.

Rent on Messrs. Hansen and Schrader's store property shall be £500 per annum, exclusive of all rates, sub-letting of parts of the building shall be to the benefit of the business.

Rent on dynamite store shall be £75 per annum, leases on Farie's and Clark's stores shall be at existing rentals.

Mr. Waite's guaranteed allowance shall be £400 per annum, and he shall be at liberty to draw monthly accordingly. Mr. Waite engages himself for a period of five years to the 31st December, 1891. However, Messrs. Hansen and Schrader shall be at liberty to terminate this agreement by giving two month's notice, in which case Messrs. Hansen and Schrader will indemnify Mr. Waite by £100 over and above the amount that he will then be entitled to according to this agreement.

At the termination of this agreement the result of all business operations from 1st January, 1887, shall be ascertained, and after the allowance and the share in any profits due to other employees, and after Mr. Waite's own allowance of £400 per annum have been deducted, Mr. Waite shall share in any nett profits made to the extent of 10 per cent. (ten per cent.). Mr. Waite, however, shall not be interested and concerned in profits made on share account or on landed property.

(b) An agreement which is embodied in a letter from the defendants, dated the 22nd November, 1889, whereof the following is a true extract of the material portion, to wit:

We increase your guaranteed allowance from £400 to £600 per annum, to be reckoned from 1st January, 1889; we also increase your share in the nett profits from 10 per cent. to 12½ per cent., to be reckoned from the 1st January, 1890.

(c) An agreement between the parties for the period ending the 31st December, 1894, dated the 12th September, 1890, whereof the following is a true copy, to wit:

Mr. A. H. Waite extends the agreement made with the firm of Hansen and Schrader, and dated December 16th, 1886, for a further period of three years, i.e., until 31st December, 1894, upon the following conditions:—

£600 (six hundred pounds sterling) per annum from the 1st January, 1890, such allowance to be a charge to the business as hitherto.

. 15 per cent. (fifteen per cent.) of the net earnings calculated as stipulated in the agreement of 16th December, 1886.

£100 per annum for attending to Messrs. Hansen and Schrader's interests in shares and properties.

It is further agreed that Mr. Waite has the permission of Messrs. Hansen and Schrader to draw the approximate amount due to him per 31st December, 1889, as shown in the Statement of Private Accounts, dated April 7th, 1890.

(d) An agreement for the period ending 31st December, 1899, dated the 20th April, 1895, signed by the parties, whereof the following is a true copy, to wit:—

It is hereby agreed that Mr. A. H. Waite renews his agreement of December 16th, 1886, and September 12th, 1890, with Messrs. Hansen and Schrader for a period of five years, i.e., from the 1st January, 1890, to 31st December, 1899, upon the following conditions:—

1. Mr. Waite has the right to draw the amount due to him per 31st December, 1894—£3,517 12s. 10d.; as per Statement of Private Account rendered, such amount to be drawn to not greater extent than three equal amounts per annum spread over the first three years of his agreement. It is, however, specially agreed that, should the New Brighton property, in which Mr. Waite has 1-5 (one-fifth) interest, not be sold during the first two years of this agreement, Mr. Waite has to provide the 1-5 share of the cost of the said property.

2. During the first two years of this agreement Mr. Waite's share in the profits of the business and allowances shall be as provided for in the agreement of September 12th, 1890.

3. During the last three years of this agreement Mr. Waite shall receive an increased interest in the profits of the business, such increase to be arranged at the end of 1896, but is not to exceed an increase of 5 per cent. (five per cent.).

4. Mr. Waite shall share in the profits on Stand properties and Douglas Colliery, as follows:—

Stands in and near Johannesburg, 15 per cent. (fifteen per cent.)

Douglas Colliery, Johannesburg, 10 per cent. (ten per cent.).

It is, however, specially agreed that Messrs. Hansen and Schrader reserve to themselves the right to dispose of the above mentioned property and Douglas Colliery whenever they consider such advisable, should the said property and colliery not be realised when the connection between Messrs. Hansen and Schrader and Mr. Waite terminates, then in order to determine the value thereof it shall be at the option of Messrs. Hansen and Schrader either to sell the property and colliery by public auction or appoint an impartial valuator or valuers to be mutually agreed upon, whose valuation shall be accepted by both parties to this agreement.

(5) The first clause in the agreement of December 16th, 1886, shall now read as follows:—

Mr. A. H. Waite, as one of the Managers of Messrs. Hansen and Schrader's business, agrees strictly to adhere to all their instructions and exercise due caution in taking up any constituent or supporting accounts, not to buy shares or landed property, and not to stand security for any one.

(c) An agreement for the period ending the 31st December, 1903, dated the 24th July, 1899, signed by the parties, whereof the following is a true copy, to wit:—

It is hereby agreed that Mr. A. H. Waite renews his agreement of April 20th, 1895, with Messrs. Hansen and Schrader for a period of four years, i.e., from 1st January, 1900, to 31st December, 1903, upon the following conditions:—

1. Mr. Waite has the right to draw the amount due to him per 31st December, 1898, i.e., £13,535 14s. 9d. as per statement of private accounts rendered, such amount to be drawn to not greater extent than four equal amounts per annum spread over the four years of the agreement. It is, however, specially agreed that should the New Brighton property, in which Mr. Waite has 1-5 (one-fifth) interest, not be sold during the first three years of this agreement, Mr. Waite has to provide the one-fifth share of the cost of said property. This clause is to be taken in conjunction with clause 1 of the agreement of April 20th, 1895, the amount of £3,517 12s. 10d. mentioned therein being included in the above-mentioned amount of £13,535 14s. 9d.

2. During the term of this agreement Mr. Waite's share in the profits of the several businesses of Messrs. Hansen and Schrader shall be 20 per cent (twenty per cent.).

3. Mr. Waite's share in the profits on properties and Douglas Colliery to remain as provided for in agreement of April 20th, 1895. Such properties at present consist of the following: 15 per cent. Marshall's Stands, 153, 155, 156, 154, 157, 158; 15 per cent. Height's Stands, 55/6, 110/111; 15 per cent. City and Suburban Stands, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507; 15 per cent. City and Suburban Stands, 510, 511, 512, 513; 15 per cent. Delagoa Bay property, occupied by the H. S. Company; 20 per cent. New Brighton Farm; 10 per cent. Douglas Colliery, Limited; 15 per cent. Royal Oak Tavern, Graham's Town.

It is, however, specially agreed that Messrs. Hansen and Schrader reserve to themselves the right to dispose of the above-mentioned properties and Douglas Colliery shares whenever they consider such advisable, should the said property and colliery shares not be realised when the connection between Messrs. Hansen and Schrader and Mr. Waite terminates, then in order to determine the value thereof, it shall be at the option of Messrs. Hansen and Schrader either to sell the property and Douglas Colliery shares by public auction or appoint an impartial valuator or valutors to be mutually agreed upon whose valuations shall be accepted by both parties to this agreement.

4. Mr. Waite is at liberty to be absent from the business of Messrs. Hansen and Schrader for a period of nine months during the year 1900 at his convenience.

5. A certain clause in the original agreement of December 16th, 1886, viz.: However, H. and S. shall be at liberty to terminate this agreement by giving two months' notice, in which case Messrs. H. and S. shall indemnify Mr. Waite by £100 over and above the amount he will be then entitled to according to this agreement—is hereby cancelled.

6. The rent for "Anderson's Bond" property to be £250 (two hundred and fifty pounds sterling) from 1st January, 1899.

Dated at Johannesburg, 24th July, 1899.

HANSEN & SCHRADER.
A. H. WAITE.

Witness:

B. K. Lightfoot.
F. H. S. Corder.

5. The defendants, before December, 1903, disposed of the Delagoa Bay landed property aforesaid which included with other properties valuable concessions to the foreshore, also of the general business and the goodwill thereof, including certain valuable agencies carried on at Delagoa Bay as a branch of the Port Elizabeth business of Hansen and Schrader, and the plaintiff became and is entitled to a full disclosure, and account not only of a certain cash payment of £20,000 received by the defendants in respect of the disposal of the said landed property (which payment has been disclosed), but also of all profits and shares in any company or syndicate and other valuable consideration whatever received or to be received by the defendants in respect of the disposal of the said landed properties, of the said concession to the foreshore, and of the general business and goodwill thereof, carried on at Delagoa Bay as aforesaid, but the defendants notwithstanding lawful demand have failed and neglected to make such disclosures or render such account, or to disclose to the plaintiff the agreements entered into by them relative to such disposal.

6. In the year 1892 a certain property now of great value known as New Brighton at or near Port Elizabeth was purchased by the plaintiff from one Sarah Berry for £2,500, and the said purchase was effected as a joint speculation on behalf of the plaintiff, the defendants, and the said Bracht in equal shares of one-fifth each, the remaining share of one-fifth being intended for one W. English who subsequently disposed of his interest to the defendants.

7. The said property was transferred to and stands registered in the names of the defendants who are entitled to three-fifths thereof in their own right, but as to one-fifth they hold the same in a fiduciary capacity as the plaintiff's representative, and the said property is the New Brighton property or New Brighton Farm referred to in the above agreement (e) set forth in paragraph 4 of this declaration.

8. The defendants have in their hands moneys belonging and due to the plaintiff far exceeding one-fifth share of the cost of the said property and all proper expenses and charges connected therewith, and all things have happened, all times have elapsed, and all conditions have been fulfilled entitling the plaintiff to demand that either one-fifth share of the said property shall be transferred to him, against payment of one-fifth of the cost and all such proper charges and expenses, or that the defendants shall agree with the plaintiff upon an impartial valuator or valutors of the said property in order to determine the value of the said property, but the defendants though they have elected not to sell the said property by public auction have wrongfully and unlawfully failed to take steps to come to an agreement with the plaintiff as to such valuator or valutors with a view to ascertaining the value of the property as aforesaid.

9. The plaintiff is further entitled to demand from the defendants in respect of the New Brighton property a true and correct disclosure and account of all the dealings of the defendants therewith, and of all income received therefrom, and that in such account shall be included a reasonable allowance of £500 per year to be paid to the plaintiff out of the joint venture for his services in managing the New Brighton property during the years 1899 to 1903 inclusive, and he is also entitled to obtain an order restraining the defendants from in any way alienating, disposing of or dealing with the said property or any part thereof, without the plaintiff's consent, until his rights shall have been satisfied in respect of the said property; but the defendants refuse to recognise the plaintiff's rights in respect of the said property, and claim to be entitled to alienate, dispose of and deal with the said property without the plaintiff's consent or concurrence.

10. The plaintiff is further entitled upon the termination of his engagement as aforesaid to receive from the defendants a true and correct account showing the amount to which he is entitled under the agreements referred to in paragraph 4 of this declaration, including his share of the profits of the several businesses of Hansen and Schrader, and of the profits on the properties and Douglas Colliery, and of the proceeds or values, ascertained under the aforesaid agreement, of the said properties, and shares held by the defendants in the said Colliery, and to be credited in such amount with interest at 6 per cent. for the year 1903 on the balance due at the end of the year 1902; and he is entitled to debate such account and to be paid the balance due to him, all drawings by him being deducted and also such amount as may be determined to be his one-fifth share of the cost, expenses and charges referred to in paragraph 8 hereof.

11. The plaintiff is entitled to claim that from such account as is referred to in the last paragraph there shall be excluded certain items, whereof the defendants have, before action was brought, had full and detailed notice with particulars of the plaintiff's objections to the said items, to wit:—

I. The cost of, and any loss or charge in connection with, certain 700 shares in the South African Super-Aeration Company, Limited, purchased or acquired by defendants in London, the cost of which (£700) has been wrongfully charged to the Port Elizabeth business of Hansen and Schrader.

II. The cost of and any loss or charge in connection with certain shipments of currants to Port Elizabeth in 1900, which formed a separate and private speculation of the defendants in London, and were not ordered by or required for the business at Port Elizabeth of Hansen and Schrader, but should have been consigned thither by the defendants for disposal on their own account and profit and loss as the case may be.

III. A certain amount of £5,462 12s. 6d. representing the total of improper overcharges of interest and exchange made by the defendants against the business at Port Elizabeth due to 31st December, 1902.

IV. Certain sums amounting to £4,500 representing charges improperly made by the defendants against the business at Port Elizabeth in respect of their own services in London during the years 1900, 1901, and 1902, which charges are contrary to the theretofore established and agreed course of dealing in the said business and between the parties.

V. Certain sums amounting to £2,631 19s. 10d., being further charges improperly made by the defendants against the business at Port Elizabeth in respect of expenditure on their own account in connection with their London business during the years 1898 to 1902, which charges are contrary to the theretofore established and agreed course of dealing in the Port Elizabeth business and between the parties.

12. And the plaintiff is further entitled to claim that in such true and correct account as aforesaid there shall be included as an asset of the business a sum of £7,736 12s., due and owing to the business at Port Elizabeth by one W. G. Stevens, but from which the defendants wrongfully and improperly, without the plaintiff's consent, released the said Stevens.

13. A part of the general business of the firm of Hansen and Schrader at Port Elizabeth, secured for the said firm in 1891 by the efforts of the said plaintiff, was the agency for the Government of the late South African Republic, and the said firm acted as such agents before, in, and after the year 1893, and the commissions or profits resulting from such agency, wherever executed, formed properly a part of the general business at Port Elizabeth.

14. In and after the year 1893, the defendants, on behalf of the said Government, specially undertook and were engaged upon a matter arising out of or in consequence of the said agency, which matter was described by them, in writing, to the firm at Port Elizabeth as a very important matter, which, if put through, would considerably benefit the business at Port Elizabeth, but which required entire secrecy and the absence of the defendants for some time at Lisbon.

15. The defendants received sums of money or other valuable consideration in respect of the services rendered by them, as aforesaid, to the said Government in connection with the said matter, but have refused to disclose the amounts or valuable consideration so received by them, which the plaintiff contends must be brought to account as part of the commissions or profits resulting from the agency obtained and introduced by him to the defendants, and carried on as aforesaid, as part of the general business of the firm at Port Elizabeth, upon which he is entitled to his percentage at that date 15 per cent. or in the alternative he claims to be entitled to such reasonable percentage as shall represent a quantum meruit for his obtaining and introducing the said agency as aforesaid.

Wherefore the plaintiff prays for:

1. An order compelling the defendants to disclose and bring into account with the plaintiff, and declaring the plaintiff to be entitled to 15 per cent. in respect of all profits, shares in any company or syndicate, and any other valuable consideration whatsoever received or to be received by the defendants or either of them or any other person, firm or company on their behalf in respect of the disposal of the landed properties, the concession of the foreshore, and (or) the general business and (or) goodwill thereof carried on at Delagoa Bay and referred to in paragraph 5, and an order compelling the defendants to disclose all agreements entered into by them relative to such disposal.

2. An order declaring the plaintiff to be entitled to a one-fifth part, share and interest in the said New Brighton property, a further order compelling the defendants either to transfer to him in due and customary form of law an undivided one-fifth share of the said property upon payment by him of one-fifth of the cost of the said property and of all proper expenses or charges in connection therewith, or to agree with the plaintiff upon an impartial valuator or valuations of the said property in order to determine its value; and in either alternative a further order restraining the defendants from in any way alienating, disposing of or dealing with the said property or any part thereof without the plaintiff's consent, until his right in respect of the said property shall have been satisfied, and compelling the defendants to disclose to the plaintiff and render to him a true and correct account of all their dealings with and income derived from the said property, to debate such account and to pay to the plaintiff his one-fifth share of such income: such account to include an allowance of £500 per year in favour of the plaintiff for his services during the years 1889 to 1903, inclusive, as set forth in paragraph 9 hereof, or such other allowance as this Honourable Court may determine to be reasonable.

3. An order compelling the defendants to render to the plaintiff a true and correct account, as claimed in paragraph 10 hereof, excluding items I., II., III., IV., and V., set forth in paragraph 11 hereof, and including as an asset the sum of £7,736 12s., set forth in paragraph 12 hereof, to debate such account when rendered, and to pay over to the plaintiff the amount found due to him at foot of such account when debated:

4. An order compelling the defendants to disclose and bring up in the said account all sums of money or other valuable considerations received by them in respect of the services rendered to the Government of the late South African Republic, and referred to in paragraphs 13, 14, and 15 hereof, and declaring the plaintiff entitled to 15 per cent. thereof, or to such reasonable percentage as this Honourable court shall award:

5. A declaration of the plaintiff's rights and such orders in the premises as against the defendants in so far as this Honourable Court may deem that the claims hereinbefore set forth should be in any respect varied or modified:

And generally such further or other relief as to this Honourable Court may seem meet together with costs of suit.

To the declaration the defendants pleaded:—

1. They admit paragraph 1.

2. As to paragraph 2 they admit that they carry on business at Port Elizabeth, and that they have an office and carry on business in Johannesburg. They say that business of and for and on account of the firm has been carried on in London in premises used for that purpose and that they have ceased to carry on business at Delagoa Bay since October, 1901. Save as above they admit paragraph 2.

3. They admit paragraph 3 save that they say that the plaintiff's engagement was terminated not by their act but by effluxion of time and upon previous notice to that effect given by the plaintiff.

4. They admit paragraph 4 save that the figures £3,561 13s. 10d. in section (d) of the declaration does not appear in defendant's copy of the said agreement of December 31st, 1899, and the defendants do not admit the said figures.

5. As to paragraph 5 they admit that in or about October 1901, they disposed of the Delagoa Bay landed property and certain agencies carried on at Delagoa Bay for the sum of £20,000, but they deny that the said Delagoa Bay property included any other properties or any concessions to the onshore or any other concessions. They admit that the plaintiff is entitled to a full disclosure of any agreements entered into relative to the said disposal and of the money received in consideration thereof and to a full account of the said money, and say that he has had such disclosure and account and has duly been credited with and received his share of the same. Save as above they deny the allegations in paragraph 5.

6. As to paragraphs 6 and 7, they admit that on the 31st December, 1892, the plaintiff obtained an option to purchase the said New Brighton property, but say that he did so for and on behalf of the defendants, who subsequently purchased the property, and deny that the said property was purchased as a joint speculation on behalf of the plaintiff, the defendants and the said Bracht. They admit that the said English disposed of his interest to the defendants, and that the said property was transferred to and stands registered in their names. As to the respective interests in and rights to the said property of the plaintiff and defendants they crave leave to refer to the terms of the agreement set forth in paragraph 4 of the declaration. They admit that the said property is the New Brighton property or farm referred to in section E, set forth in paragraph 4 of the declaration. Save as aforesaid, they deny paragraphs 6 and 7.

7. They deny that they have in their hands moneys belonging and due to the plaintiff exceeding one-fifth share of the cost of the said property, and all proper expenses and charges connected therewith. They admit that the plaintiff is entitled to demand that the defendants shall at their option either have the said property sold by public auction or have it valued in terms of the said agreements. They say that before the declaration was filed they tendered to have the said property so valued, which tender the plaintiff refused, and the defendants now claim either to sell or to value at their option upon the claim of the plaintiff being decided by this Honourable Court. Save as above they deny the allegations in paragraph 8.

8. As to paragraph 9 they admit that the plaintiff is entitled to demand a true and correct disclosure and account of their dealings with the said property, and of all income which may reasonably and legitimately be reckoned as derived therefrom, and say that they have always been ready and willing, and hereby tender to render within a reasonable time such account in accordance with the usual course of business when plaintiff was a manager. They say that the plaintiff, while in the service of the defendants, has had a true and correct disclosure, and is fully acquainted with the dealing and income derived from the said property, and they deny that the plaintiff is entitled to any further or other remuneration than as contained in his said agreements. Save as above and save that they admit that they claim that they are entitled to alienate, dispose of or deal with the said property they deny the allegations in paragraph 9.

9. While they deny that the plaintiff is legally entitled to be credited with interest for the year 1903 on the balance, if any, due at the end of the year 1902, they say that they are ready and willing to so credit him upon such balance, if any. They say further that they have always been ready and willing and have tendered and do hereby again tender to render the account claimed in the said paragraph within a reasonable time after the 31st December 1903, and in accordance with the usual course of business when plaintiff was manager. The plaintiff and the defendants have agreed upon a valuation of the properties mentioned in the said agreements, save and except the New Brighton property, the Douglas Collieries and the Royal Oak Tavern. The defendants have tendered and do hereby again tender to have the Douglas Collieries valued in terms of the said agreements, or, in case the parties are unable to agree upon a valuator or valutors, by such valuator as this Honourable Court may appoint. The Royal Oak Tavern has been sold, and the defendants are ready and willing to bring up the purchase price thereof in the said account. They say that the allegations in paragraph 10 of the declaration are, so far as the New Brighton property is concerned, subject to the allegations in the previous paragraphs of the plea contained, and in so far as they are inconsistent therewith they are denied.

10. As to paragraph 11, they deny that the plaintiff is entitled to claim that items I, II, III, and V should be excluded from the said account. They say that the transactions set forth in items I and II were part of and were entered into for and on behalf of the defendants' business including the Port Elizabeth business, and that the plaintiff had knowledge of and consented to the said transactions, and has had the benefit thereof. They deny that the charges of interest and exchange included in item III improperly charged to the said business. They say further that the sum of £5,462 12s. 6d. does not represent all that is properly chargeable to the said business. They deny that the sum of £2,631 19s. 10d. set forth in item V includes any expenditure on their own account. They say that the said sum is expenditure for and on account of and for the benefit of and in connection with the defendants' business and of which the plaintiff has had the benefit and is properly chargeable to the Port Elizabeth business. While not admitting that the plaintiff is legally entitled to claim to have the sum of £4,500 excluded the defendants say that they have charged the same to capital account and that therefore the plaintiff's interests under his agreements are not affected thereby. Save as above they deny paragraph 11.

11. As to paragraph 12 they say that at the end of the year 1902 the said Stevens stood in the firm's books as a debtor to the said business for the sum of £7,736 12s. and say that there were questions between the defendants and the said Stevens as to the sum of about £6,500 which was due to him at the end of 1900, and as to whether he was liable for losses for the years 1901 and 1902, and as to the over charges and as the said Stevens was also entitled to maintenance for his wife and children during those two years over and above £600 in regard to which he had actually drawn moneys for living purposes and as the said Stevens was not in a flourishing financial position, the defendants with the consent of the plaintiff released Stevens from his liability if any. Save as above they deny paragraph 12.

12. Save that they deny that the said agency was secured solely by the efforts of the plaintiff they admit paragraph 13. They say that in the accounts drawn up from time to time between the parties the plaintiff has been credited with his share in the profits resulting from the said agency.

13. They deny each and all the allegations in paragraphs 14 and 15. The defendants did in or about 1893 proceed to Lisbon with a view of obtaining certain business which business was entirely unconnected with the said agency, but they failed to obtain the said business.

Wherefore subject to the above tenders they pray that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

For the purposes of the hearing, these actions were consolidated. The plaintiffs were respectively Arthur Herbert Waite and Oscar Bracht, residing at Port Elizabeth, and the defendants were Hansen and Schrader, carrying on business in Port Elizabeth, Johannesburg, London (England), and elsewhere. Plaintiffs had been employed as joint managers of the Port Elizabeth business, and they brought the actions for a declaration of rights under certain contracts upon which they were employed by defendants. Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington) was for the plaintiffs; Sir H. Juta (with him Mr. Gardner) was for the defendants.

Mr. Schreiner stated the principal points in both cases. Plaintiffs, he said, had been employed by defendants as joint managers of the business at Port Elizabeth during a period extending from the 1st January, 1887, to the 31st December, 1903. A number of contracts were entered into between plaintiffs and defendants from time to time. There were certain differences between the cases of the two plaintiffs, but in the main the points in dispute were identical. One of the main points was as to the construction of Bracht's agreement, dating from the 1st January, 1900, to the 31st December, 1903. There was no definite formal agreement entered into, but certain correspondence took place. Mr. Bracht had been dissatisfied with the terms of his engagement, because he found that he was placed in an inferior position, so far as remuneration was concerned, to Mr. Waite. Mr. White and others, working at Johannesburg and elsewhere, were getting better terms, and Bracht was aiming at getting an agreement which would equalise his interests all round as Waite's interests were. Bracht had had a salary of not less than £600 a year and a 40 per cent. share of the profits on wool. Then the defendants wrote a letter of the 31st July, 1899, of which it would be for the Court to determine the construction. Bracht said that he was entitled to receive 10 per cent. in relation not only to the merchandise business, in which he was getting a certain percentage formerly, but he claimed that he was entitled to read that letter in connection with his immediately current contract, and that it extended to the Douglas Colliery and the defendants' landed properties in Johannesburg and Delagoa Bay. The defendants said, however, that he was only entitled to get 10 per cent. on the merchandise and so forth, that he would still get his 40 per cent. on wool, but said that they split up the 10 per cent. which they agreed upon, and that he would only get 5 per cent. on the Douglas Colliery and the Johannesburg and Delagoa Bay properties. The question between the parties on this part of the case was whether Bracht was entitled to 10 per cent. or only 5 per cent. in relation to the Douglas Colliery and the Johannesburg and Delagoa Bay properties. This was really a great case, and he (counsel) had only reached one branch.

Sir H. Juta: I would like to know, from my learned friend, whether he intends to go into the accounts.

Mr. Schreiner: I won't go into the accounts at this moment, but I shall reach them in due course. Continuing, counsel called attention to paragraph 5 of the declaration, which stated that before 31st December, 1903, defendants disposed of the Delagoa Bay property, which included a concession of the foreshore, also the general business and the goodwill thereof, including valuable agencies. The plaintiffs said they were entitled to a full disclosure of account not only of a certain payment of £20,000 received by the defendants in respect of the disposal of the landed property at Delagoa Bay—a company having been floated with a capital of £20,000—but of the important agencies carried on there under the control of the Port Elizabeth business, and there was also the foreshore concession. Defendants said that there was nothing about £20,000, and that they could disclose nothing. Plaintiffs wanted to know more particularly what became of the foreshore concession, and they also said that the landed property at Delagoa Bay had been disposed of for £20,000. Paragraphs 6, 7, and 8 of the declaration raised an issue of prime importance for the Court to determine in any event, viz., what were the rights of Bracht and also of Waite in relation to certain New Brighton property? In 1892 the property was purchased from Mrs. Berry under an option that she gave to Mr. Waite for £2,500. This property, if worth a penny to-day, was worth £150,000 to £200,000. The person who first of all got the option was one English, who was also in the employ of Hansen and Schrader. Waite had made several investments, notwithstanding the fact that his contract with the defendants said he should not make investments, and he exercised this option in writing. Hansen and Schrader held three-fifths (having come in at the purchase with a share each, so that the position was that Hansen and Schrader held three-fifths (having secured the fifth that English had failed to pay for), Waite one-fifth, and Bracht one-fifth. Waite entered into a contract with defendants, which placed him, so far as this property was concerned, in a different position from Bracht. Bracht claimed as a legal right that which ought to have been done long ago, viz., that this property should be transferred out of the names of Hansen and Schrader, in whose names it had stood from the original transaction, and put in the names of the persons who were really interested in it, according to the law of the land. Mr. Waite agreed to certain things in consideration of his being allowed to withdraw a certain sum of £135,534 14s. within a certain period, but it was specially agreed that, should the New Brighton property, in which Mr. Waite has one-fifth interest, not be sold during the first three years of the agreement he was to provide one-fifth share of cost of said property. The agreement was important, because it enabled the defendants to dispose of Waite's share in the New Brighton farm, as it was called, at their option, either by public auction or under a valuator. Bracht, however, had never prejudiced himself by entering into such an agreement. In the case of Bracht, the claim was for an order declaring him entitled to one-fifth part or share in the property, requiring defendants to pass transfer of such share, and restraining them from disposing of, alienating, or dealing with such property, also for a true and proper account, debate, and payment of such moneys as may be found to be due. Waite asked for a declaration that he was entitled to one-fifth share of the property, or that defendants should agree with plaintiffs upon an impartial valuator in order to determine the value of his share and to restrain the defendants from alienating, disposing of, or dealing in any way with the said property until his rights had been satisfied. The defendants admitted that the option was obtained by Waite, but said he did so for and on behalf of the defendants, and that the property was purchased as a joint speculation on behalf of Waite and defendants. They said they had always been ready and willing, and hereby tendered to render within a reasonable time an account as to the property. They also said that plaintiffs, while in their employ, had had a true and correct account. In Waite's cases, defendants and plaintiffs were entitled to demand that defendants should at their option either have the property sold by auction, or have it valued, but said that, before the declaration was filed, they tendered to have the said property so valued, and they now claimed either to sell or to value at their option upon the claim of the plaintiffs being decided by this Court. Plaintiffs said defendants could not possibly now go to sale by public auction without the rights of the plaintiffs being declared, but if his lordship appointed—as he (counsel) should be glad if he would, so far as Waite was concerned—a proper person to value and determine his right, then they could ascertain what he was entitled to in cash. Coming to what he described as the next branch of the case, counsel said plaintiffs were entitled upon the termination of their engagements to have from the defendants a true and correct account, showing the amounts to which plaintiffs were entitled. They said they were entitled to debate of such account and payment of such moneys as may be found due to them. On the 20th August, 1904, long after the action was brought, accounts were rendered by defendants to Bracht and Waite, and these accounts had been subjected to a very careful and diligent scrutiny at Port Elizabeth by Mr. Gibson, who had been engaged as plaintiffs' accountant adviser. These accounts were wholly away from the basis of accounts taken between the parties during the long period from 1887 to 1903. For instance, an extraordinary amount had been shown as against the plaintiffs' accounts in the way of bad debts. Counsel (proceeding) said that the plaintiffs were practically advertised out of the defendants' employ on the 18th December, 1903, although their agreements would not have come to a close until the 31st December, 1903. The plaintiffs were advertised as having no longer the firm's power, although they had been with Hansen and Schrader for nearly 20 years. The plaintiffs also claimed that a certain sum of £700 debited to the Port Elizabeth business, certain Supererotation Company shares, was wrongly charged to the business. It appeared that in 1900 Hansen and Schrader, in London, thought that currants were a fine thing for the future, and they went in for a speculation in currants on their own account, but they did not pay, they did not answer, the defendants sent over a ship load to Port Elizabeth, and a loss occurred. The plaintiffs, as managers of the Port Elizabeth business, said that that loss should not be debited against the business. Now came a very important point as to a charge for interest and exchanges made from London over against the Port Elizabeth business. Moneys were advanced from time to time in London by the partners over against the Port Elizabeth business, but from the very outset they did not render proper accounts of the interest, and they put in a lump sum for interest, but this was protested against, and eventually the partners told the Port Elizabeth people to write up the accounts on the proper basis. This was done, and it appeared that there had been an overcharge against the Port Elizabeth business of £5,462 on the item of interest and exchanges. Plaintiffs said that must be struck out. Then in the fourth paragraph plaintiffs said that certain sums amounting to £4,500, representing charges improperly made by the defendants, had been made against the Port Elizabeth business for their own services in London at the rate of £1,500 a year. That, however, had now been abandoned, and Mr. Waite had, in consequence, abandoned a claim for £500 a year that he had made in respect of the management of the New Brighton property. The next item was certain sums amounting to £2,631 19s. 10d., charges improperly made by defendants against the Port Elizabeth business in respect to expenditure on their own account in connection with the London business from 1898 to 1902. This was mainly composed of a room in Mr. Hansen's office, and the salary of Mr. Hansen's private secretary, Mr. Toque. The plaintiffs also said there was included a sum of £7,736 12s., a withdrawal, in favour of W. G. Stevens, for which the defendants wrongfully released the said Stevens. Defendants said that the plaintiffs consented, but plaintiffs denied this. They did not, however, propose to go particularly into that item. It referred to an employe of defendants at Johannesburg, the release probably having been given by defendants in a spirit of generosity towards a man who had long served the firm up there. They now reached a part of the case which was of a different character. Part of the general business of Hansen and Schrader, secured through the services of Waite, was an agency for the Government of the late South African Republic, and in and after 1893 defendants, on behalf of the said Government, undertook and engaged in a matter arising out of the agency, which matter was described by them in writing as very important and requiring entire secrecy. Defendants received certain sums of money, and other valuable consideration in respect of services rendered to the South African Republic, but they had refused to disclose the amount. This special service was brought into the Port Elizabeth business, whatever the service was, and involved the defendants, one or more of them, going to Lisbon, and working there in the interests of the South African Republic. Plaintiffs did not know what defendants had received, and they said it was part of the Port Elizabeth business of Hansen and Schrader, which ought to be brought into the account. Defendants denied that they specially undertook or were engaged upon the matter, or that it was in consequence of the agency. They said that they proceeded to Lisbon to obtain certain business, but denied that it was in connection with the Port Elizabeth business. There was a document that the defendants had referred to, and which plaintiffs had not seen. They said they did not wish the plaintiffs to see the document, but they were willing that his lordship should see it. If his lordship, after seeing the document, thought it completely disposed of their case, then plaintiffs were willing that it should be left in his lordship's hands. Furthermore, the defendants said that the plaintiffs' engagements were terminated, not by their act, but by effluxion of time.

Evidence was then called in support of the plaintiffs' case.

Oscar Bracht (one of the plaintiffs) gave evidence bearing out counsel's opening statement. In regard to the Delagoa Bay property, he said he found that the transfer of the land represented £6,000, and the balance of £14,000 was represented by the goodwill and agencies.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Hansen and Schrader were in Johannesburg in 1903.

Sir H. Juta: By what authority did you and Waite, without consulting the partners, draw several thousand of pounds in the middle of December, 1903?

Witness: I drew £2,000 on the strength of the last distribution.

What did Waite draw?—I don't know exactly.

You were a manager?—He drew £6,000.

And you drew these amounts without any consultation with Hansen and without letting him know a word about it?—Yes, that is so.

Answering further questions, witness said he simply drew money which stood to his credit, and to which he was fully entitled. There was nothing in his agreements to prevent him doing so. He supposed that it was because of this incident that the firm withdrew the general powers of attorney held by himself and Waite in the middle of December. In regard to the shares in the Superstation Company, he admitted having signed a letter agreeing to take 700 shares in consideration of the firm having the South African agency for the Superstation. In regard to the shipment of currants sent by Hansen and Schrader from London, he admitted he was not a partner in the firm, and that it was not for him to say what the partners should try on the market.

Sir H. Juta: If the partners chose to send out a thousand cases of currants, what have you got to do with it.

Witness: Well, we might have thought they were mad.

But you could not dictate to them how they were to carry on their business?—No, I could not dictate.

If they chose to send out currants to sell at Port Elizabeth you could not object?—No answer.

The fact is, you and Waite were getting a little bit too big for your boots, and were wanting to dictate to the partners how they should carry on their business?—No answer.

These currants were sent out to the firm and dealt with by the firm?—Yes.

Then what on earth is your case in regard to the currants?—No answer.

In further cross-examination, Sir H. Juta put it to witness that when he applied to Hansen and Schrader for better terms, and asked for an interest of 20 per cent. all round, he did not mean the properties.

Mr. Schreiner objected that the question was not admissible, and said that the correspondence furnished the best answer to the question.

Buchanan, J., ruled that the question was admissible.

Witness replied that he did not mean the properties.

Witness had the management of the Douglas Colliery. He went to the colliery in 1896, but he did not go again between 1896 and 1903. As to the Delagoa Bay interests of the firm, witness fixed the profits on the Lourenco Marques Boat-ing Company at £750 a year. Hansen and Schrader also held certain insurance agencies, and the Milner Safe Agency; he thought the profits from these sources would be £400 or £500 a year. As to the so-called foreshore concession, he admitted that defendants were only granted a sub-lease of the foreshore. He was not aware that the conditions of the lease prohibited sub-letting and erection of buildings. He still thought there was a value in the lease. The company, to whom the foreshore had now been transferred, were carrying on a business, and it was evidently of some value to them. There was also the forwarding agency through Delagoa Bay to Johannesburg. As to the overcharge of £5,462 for interest and exchanges, witness considered that that amount had been improperly charged against the Port Elizabeth business by Hansen and Schrader in London. Witness's last agreement was made in 1899. The interest and overcharges extended over 12 years. There was a good deal of business done by the partners in London; that used to be done without clerical assistance. He objected to the charge made by the partners because it was too high. As to the New Brighton property, witness claimed that he was a joint-purchaser in 1892. He was not present at the purchase, but it was arranged in the office that he should have a fifth share. At the beginning of 1892 it was agreed that a joint purchase should be made; he did not know who was present at the time. He agreed with Waite and English that he should have a fifth share. He saw the letter sent by Waite to Mrs. Berry taking up the option, and asking that the property be registered in the names of Hansen and Schrader, "for whose account" (Waite added) "I have bought." He admitted having heard of a letter sent by Mr. Schrader to Hansen and Schrader at Dresden. This was after the letter had gone. He afterwards went to see Waite.

Sir H. Juta said that the letter stated that an exception would be made in regard to this property, and that Waite would be admitted to an interest to the extent of 15 per cent, English 15 cent., and Bracht 4 per cent.

[Buchanan, J.: You see, they were not bound to admit you to this transaction at all. Waite could not purchase landed property at all under his agreement with the firm.]

Witness, further cross-examined, said he founded his claim to a share in the New Brighton property on the agreement he made with Waite. Schrader subsequently told him that his interest in the property was to be 20 per cent. instead of 4 per cent. He agreed to that. He based his claim to co-ownership upon a subsequent agreement that he should leave sufficient funds in the firm to cover one-fifth share of the property. This was in March, 1896.

Sir H. Juta: When do you say you made your purchase?

Witness: I suppose the correct date would be when the money was paid, that was on the 3rd January, 1892.

Cross-examination continued, nearly £10,000 had been put into the New Brighton property for development purposes. This was paid out of the revenue from the property. He did not think there had been a debit in Hansen and Schrader's books of £12,000 against the property. He made a request in 1902 for his share to be transferred in his name. He did not see the draft scheme when it was proposed to float the business of Hansen and Schrader as a limited company. He believed a proposal was discussed to float the New Brighton property. He did not remember the draft scheme (produced), which was in Mr. Chabaud's writing. Part of the property had been sold; the transfers were all from Hansen and Schrader, who had undertaken certain obligations, for instance, with regard to the maintenance of the railway to the dynamite stores. All the agreements referred to Hansen and Schrader as representing the owners of the property. He admitted it would be very difficult to take away a fifth of the property; that was why he asked for a fifth undivided share. He believed that last year Mr. Hansen suggested that the property could be cut up into fifths. Witness did not know how it could be done; he did not say that it was impossible.

Mr. Schreiner (interposing): We are not asking for a partition of the estate.

[Buchanan, J.: The Court may on this evidence have to appoint a receiver to sell this property.]

Cross-examination continued: Witness remembered the law suit between Hansen and Schrader, and the Government in regard to certain portion of this land. He was not aware that at the trial English said he supposed his share had lapsed to the other partners. He abided by the value put by the experts on the Douglas Colliery shares, viz., 15s. per share. He knew there was a liability against the shares.

By Buchanan, J.: The shares were mostly fully paid up. Hansen and Schrader held 73,000 shares.

Witness (further cross-examined) said that the colliery had not made sixpence directly during the fourteen years that it had been working. It had, however, brought other business. It stood indebted to the firm in the books at £12,000. There were 7,000 uncalled shares. There was an overdraft of £10,000, and also a liability to the Netherlands Railway of £6,700. He was not aware that the Netherlands Railway had commenced an action against Hansen and Schrader. The shares had not been put on the market. He believed 17,000 were bought by the Oceana Company at par.

Sir H. Juta: Would you be surprised to hear that the Oceana bought at 4s. per share.

Witness: Yes.

By Buchanan, J.: In 1902 the firm's books showed a credit in his favour of £5,000 odd, and in 1903 he drew about £3,000. He had seen the accounts for the 31st December, 1903, showing a balance in his favour of £1,272.

Mr. Schreiner: But Hansen and Schrader, in their account, show a loss of £41,000 for 1903, which they say will have to be set off against the balance.

Buchanan, J., suggested to counsel that they should discuss between themselves the question of whom they should appoint to go into the accounts.

Re-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Witness said that although they did not consult the partners, when they drew money from the firm in December, 1903, they consulted the attorney, Mr. Chabaud. Their arrangements were coming to an end at that time, and they thought they were doing what they had a right to do. As to the currants, the accounts showed a loss of £185 on that transaction. He had never seen the document of lease between Hansen and Schrader, and the Delagoa Bay Agency Company.

Mr. Schreiner demanded from the plaintiffs production of the document in question.

Sir H. Juta handed a document to his learned friend.

Mr. Schreiner said he was supplied with a copy of a resolution passed by the Agency Company in December, 1903.

Sir H. Juta: That is all we have. There is no other document.

Witness (further re-examined) said he should have said that the New Brighton property was bought to joint account in January, 1893, not January, 1892. He should say that there was over 600 acres of land at New Brighton still unsold; there was only a bagatelle, relatively, that had been sold. About 36 acres had been sold up to the present. As to the Douglas Colliery, witness considered that he should be paid his share of the value. Both sides had appointed valuers already, but Hansen and Schrader would not agree to the appointment of a referee to fix a price. In 1898 Hansen and Schrader said that the Oceana Company bought the shares in the Colliery at par. The Colliery now had a contract for the supply of 24,000 tons of coal to the C.S.A.R.

By the Court: The accounts between witness and Hansen and Schrader were agreed upon up to the end of 1901. The London office acted as agent for the Port Elizabeth business, and charged nothing for agency.

Buchanan, J., remarked that he was surprised witness, as a manager, should contend that the partners were not entitled to send out what they liked to the Port Elizabeth business.

Arthur Herbert Waite said he had made out a profit and loss account of the business between 1887 and 1901. This showed interest paid on capital £96,000, and net profits, roughly speaking, of £137,000, averaging about £9,000 a year. As to the New Brighton Estate, it was entirely through English that the purchase was made. He did not understand that his agreement debarred him from making purchases of landed property. In 1891 he had actually let a rough goods store to Hansen and Schrader. Witness, Bracht, and English conferred as to the New Brighton property, and they afterwards decided to ask Schrader to stand in with two fifth shares for his firm. At the end of 1903 there was a credit in the books to the New Brighton property of £1,200. He claimed that, so far as his interest was concerned, he should have an impartial valuation of the property. Witness was also examined as to other aspects of the case. In regard to the accounts for 1903, furnished by defendants, witness said he was dissatisfied with what was shown there. The firm showed a loss of £41,000 odd, Mr. Gibson, who had been through the various items with witness showed a profit of £7,000 to witness. As to the Port Elizabeth business alone, defendants showed a loss of £9,932, while Mr. Gibson found a profit of £16,900. On the Johannesburg business defendants showed a loss which was £22,000 odd more than Mr. Gibson found. Witness observed that defendants had in making the accounts written down the stock below cost, and carried to suspense account outstandings, a considerable portion of which was good, and for which they had security.

Sir H. Juta objected to these statements going before the public, seeing that an arbitrator was to be appointed. He thought there could only be one object in putting out these statements.

Mr. Schreiner thought the objection was uncalled for.

[Buchanan, J.: I think this evidence is altogether unnecessary, as I shall not go into the accounts.]

He spoke as to the New Brighton property and the Delagoa interests of the defendants. He said that roughly speaking the clear profits from the Delagoa Bay agencies were about £1,500 a year. Defendants were carrying on business at Delagoa Bay as the Hansen, Schrader Co. The Company went into liquidation. He considered that £20,000 would be a fair value for the land, with the store formerly held by defendants at Lourenco Marques, although the transfer price was £6,000. As to the foreshore concession, he knew nothing in regard to this except what appeared in the correspondence. He had asked for, but had not been supplied with particulars as to how the foreshore concession was dealt with by the Hansen, Schrader Co. in disposing of it to the Delagoa Bay Agency Company. In the course of further evidence witness said that he did not want to take shares for his interest in the Douglas Colliery; he wanted to be paid his value.

Witness (further examined) said that the Douglas Company was principally dominated by Hansen and Schrader, and the Oceana Company, and he, as the holder of a small parcel of shares, would be placed in an unfavourable position.

Buchanan, J., remarked that the Court would adopt an effective means of ascertaining the value of the shares.

Witness (continuing his evidence) said that in the account furnished in August last year defendants set down a large item of outstandings under "suspense account."

Buchanan, J., said that any objections that witness had to the account could be urged before the arbitrator, to whom the account would be referred. The great fight seemed to him to be over the account.

Mr. Schreiner: Yes, and the New Brighton property.

Cross-examined: Witness and Bracht drew out certain moneys in the middle of December, 1903, without consulting the partners because he thought they were entitled to the money under the distribution.

[Buchanan, J.: I may say at once that their is nothing at all surprising that their powers of attorney were summarily cancelled.]

Mr. Schreiner said that that remark was very serious from the plaintiffs' point of view. His Lordship had not yet heard the evidence of Mr. Chabaud, the attorney.

[Buchanan, J.: It is outside the case altogether, and I am surprised that it has been brought in.]

Mr. Schreiner said that he had purposely refrained from examining the plaintiffs on this point, because he thought it was outside the case. It had, however, now been brought in, and it was only right that he should ask Mr. Waite why this money was drawn.

[Buchanan, J.: There was every reason to cancel the powers of attorney, because they never communicated with their principals. I am surprised at your bringing it in the case at all.]

Mr. Schreiner: Defendants brought it in.

[Buchanan, J.: It is in your declaration. As far as the case stands at present, I did not see that it is necessary for the Court to express any opinion.]

Further cross-examined, witness said that, with regard to the Douglas Colliery, he knew there was an obligation upon defendants. There was £7,000 for unpaid calls. He knew that defendants were liable for the overdraft, whatever it was, to the extent of £10,000. They also had a liability to the Netherlands Railway of £6,000. No profits had been returned from the colliery because the large profits made were withdrawn and spent upon developments. He did not believe that the transaction with the Oceana Company in Douglas Colliery shares at 4s. per share was a sale at all. Witness was being cross-examined in reference to the lease of Mr. Stevens, who had been employed at Johannesburg by defendants, from certain debts amounting to £7,736, when

Mr. Schreiner interposed, and said that plaintiffs did not press this part of their claim.

Sir H. Juta proceeded to cross-examine the witness in reference to a claim that he had originally put in for salary for management of the New Brighton property.

Mr. Schreiner again interposed, and said that he had taken special care to shorten his case as much as possible, while his learned friend now introduced matters which had, as a matter of fact, been abandoned.

Buchanan, J., said he did not want evidence upon any claim that he was not to adjudicate upon.

Sir H. Juta next called witness's attention to what was described as the "Lisbon matter," and asked him if he knew that nothing whatever was made out of it.

Witness said he did not.

Cross-examination continued: Witness understood that there was a document showing what was the transaction between the late Transvaal Government and Hansen and Schrader. He was responsible for the agency obtained for the firm from the Republican Government, and he considered that if anything was made from the transaction the Port Elizabeth business should be credited with it.

John Anthony Chabaud, attorney, Port Elizabeth, was also called, and examined in reference to a certain draft document.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

Viggo Hansen, a member of the defendant firm, detailed the negotiations which took place between plaintiffs and himself with regard to preparing an account. In 1904 he arrived in Port Elizabeth from Johannesburg. On looking into the business he found the books very much behindhand, and he found further that the bookkeeper, who had been entrusted to carry on the books, had not properly closed the books for years. A gentleman, whom he had engaged as joint-manager, suddenly broke his engagement, and left the firm. The bookkeeper also broke his engagement, and left the firm. Witness was therefore placed in a very embarrassed position. He appealed to Waite and Bracht for certain information. Bracht could not give any information, not only generally, but also as to business matters which were under his direct supervision. Waite flatly and rudely, in a letter, declined to have any intercourse with him whatsoever. Witness engaged an experienced accountant to go into the books. He could not close the accounts any sooner than he did, and owing to the backward condition of the books, he could not render his accounts until August of last year. It was not until the day before the trial commenced that he received notice of objection from the plaintiffs. In the agreements with his employees he always constituted himself arbiter as to how his balance-sheets should be made up. He maintained that they had always treated their employees liberally and equitably upon their agreements. Dealing with the Delagoa Bay interests, witness said that he received no consideration in money from the Delagoa Bay Agency Co. for the foreshore concession. It all went in as part of the £20,000. His firm was as a matter of fact a sub-tenant of the Agency Company. As to the Lisbon matter, his partner went to Lisbon to try and get something. He was willing that his lordship should see the document on which the Court could declare whether plaintiff was justified in his assertions. He swore they got nothing out of the matter; they had expected to get something, but did not.

Buchanan, J., said he could not look at the document unless Mr. Schreiner saw it.

Witness volunteered to allow Mr. Schreiner to see the document privately.

Mr. Schreiner said he did not like to see any document that his client could not inspect.

Witness (in further evidence) said that the document was not relevant to the case. He had thought it was not in existence, but it had been found in Europe.

Mr. Schreiner said he was willing that his lordship should look at the document, and decide as to its relevancy.

Buchanan, J., perused the document, and observed: This document affords me more amusement than anything else; but for the names mentioned, it is absolutely outside the case. It does not bear on the case at all. I might describe it in a few words, but I think it best not to do. It might enlighten you as to how far ambitions can soar.

Witness (in further evidence) said that in the Douglas Colliery Co. there were 66,750 fully paid-up shares, and there was a liability of 12s. a share upon 11,250 shares. His firm were liable for an overdraft up to £10,000; the Netherlands Railway were claiming between £6,000 and £7,000 against the Douglass Colliery, Hansen and Schrader and the Oceana Company. The cost of the colliery was debited in the firm's books at £12,600. There was also a liability for calls amounting to about £7,000. The shares in the Douglas Company sold to the Oceana Company were transferred at 4s. per share. Witness considered that 4s. per share would be a fair value. That was the book value of the shares. He did not object to the shares being sold by auction. Witness also gave evidence in reference to the New Brighton property, and the advances made by his firm towards its development. He thought it was utterly impracticable to partition the property.

Viggo Hansen, a member of the defendant firm, said he had not written to Waite objecting to his making private purchases of property. He considered that Waite's agreement in 1892 debarred him from private purchases of property. He did not say that he raised specific objections to any purchases made by Waite, but he did not like it.

[Buchanan, J.: You did not want your managers to go speculating in property?]

Witness: That is so, my lord.

[Buchanan, J.: Quite right. That you are legally entitled to do.]

Mr. Schreiner was continuing his cross-examination upon certain negotiations that took place between witness and plaintiffs, after the latter had left the firm, when

Buchanan, J., interposed, and asked counsel what these things had to do with the issues the Court had to try.

Mr. Schreiner said the points were raised by witness in his examination-in-chief.

Proceeding with his cross-examination, Mr. Schreiner asked witness whether he thought that to advertise out in the newspapers of Port Elizabeth two men who had been with the firm, one 20 years and the other 17 years, until he heard their explanation, was the right thing to do?

Witness: Sir, I had for two years been subject to provocation, hostility, and offensive correspondence, which no chief in this world would have put up with for a moment from these people. Then they wrongfully and illegally withdrew money from the business which they knew they were not entitled to. That filled up my cup. They screened themselves behind the solicitor. I said these people don't deserve the generous treatment I have given them all these years they have been in the business.

Mr. Schreiner: That is pretty candid, but it is not quite consistent with your attitude towards Waite in a letter you sent him.

[Buchanan, J. (to Mr. Schreiner): Do you wish me to give any decision on that point?]

Mr. Schreiner: I ask you for nothing that is not in the pleadings, my lord.

[Buchanan, J.: Then why cross-examine on something that is not in the pleadings?]

Mr. Schreiner: Because the witness has taken a line that is not in the pleadings. Why did my learned friend examine on it?

[Buchanan, J.: I stopped him from going into it.]

Mr. Schreiner: Not on this point. It was a small speech made by Mr. Hansen at the outset of the evidence.

[Buchanan, J.: You say distinctly this is not a matter that is in the pleadings, and yet you bring it out here.]

Mr. Schreiner: I am very sorry that it was led up to by my learned friend in the examination of witness.

[Buchanan, J.: My impression is that it was introduced by yourself in stating the declaration, and I tried to stop you.]

In further cross-examination, Mr. Schreiner took the witness to what has come to be known as the "Lisbon matter," in which it is alleged the late South African Republic had an interest.

[Buchanan, J. (to Mr. Schreiner): I am sorry you did not see the agreement submitted to me by witness yesterday, or you would not ask any questions. I may say that it would have done credit to the most brilliant Elizabethan mercantile adventurer. Had there been a result it would have been a thing that the wide world would have known.]

Mr. Schreiner informed witness that he did not want him to reveal any confidences.

[Buchanan, J.: The principal objection is the names that are mentioned in the document.]

Mr. Schreiner (to witness): Do you object to letting us on this side know who drew up that document?

Witness: I will let you know personally. I object to disclosing anything that is in this document, except to you privately. It has nothing whatever to do with the case.

Mr. Schreiner: It was a matter in which you were going to Lisbon on behalf of the late Transvaal Government?

Witness: No, you are totally wrong.

[Buchanan, J. (to Mr. Schreiner): It has nothing to do with the Transvaal Government. If it had referred to the Republican Government it might have been relevant to the case, but it has nothing to do with the firm's agency of the Transvaal Government.]

Mr. Schreiner asked witness whether he was paid his expenses of going and staying in Lisbon.

Witness: I am not going to make any disclosure on that point. I decline to answer the question.

Mr. Schreiner pressed his question, but his lordship ruled that it was not obligatory on witness to answer.

Mr. Schreiner formally applied for the question to be noted.

Buchanan, J., said he would make a note.

Witness (replying to further questions) said there was certain correspondence in regard to the Lisbon matter in December, 1893. The matter, he admitted had something to do with Delagoa Bay. He received no profit whatever from it; there was no result whatever.

Buchanan, J., expressed his surprise at the line taken by counsel, seeing that the document was submitted to him by consent, and he had ruled that it was not relevant to the case. "In future," he added, "I shall exercise my own discretion as to how far I shall take the consents of counsel."

Mr. Schreiner said that he had not been cross-examining so much in regard to the document as with reference to the matter itself.

Witness was next cross-examined in reference to the Douglas Colliery in Pretoria district. He stated that he would be willing to accept 7s. 6d. per share for their holding in the company. He considered that plaintiffs' valuation of 15s. was excessive, and, in fact, he thought that the difference between that estimate and their own of 4s., viz., 9s. 6d. per share, would be too high a value. Asked in regard to the charges he had made against the Port Elizabeth business for expenses incurred in London, witness maintained that he had debited the business with very reasonable charges.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

Mr. Upington read certain evidence taken on commission in Johannesburg. Gustave A. Troye, mining engineer, stated that he valued the shares in the Douglas Colliery at 18s. per share. The plant, he found, was out of date, and he considered that the mine should be re-equipped to a great extent. He thought that in the past the company had been spoiling a good asset. He considered that £20,000 would be sufficient to re-equip the mine. William Frederick Morris, colliery manager in the Middelburg district, Transvaal, gave evidence as to the market for Colonial coal. Wm. English, now of Johannesburg, formerly employed by defendants as joint manager, had also been examined for plaintiffs.

Mr. Gardiner next read the evidence of Thomas Douglas, chartered accountant, Johannesburg, who valued the shares in the Douglas Colliery at 4s.; Charles R. Arburrow, civil engineer, Johannesburg; and Mr. Eggars.

Mr. Upington then read the evidence of Henry Adams Rogers, of the Witbank Collieries, and Mr. Gascoigne, mining engineer, formerly superintendent of the Douglas Colliery, the latter of whom said that if the colliery were in his hands he could make £400,000 to £500,000 before it was worked out.

Mr. Gardiner read the evidence of Arthur Crosby, the present manager of the Douglas Colliery, and Mr. McCallum, chairman of the Douglas Company, who said he would not give £50,000 for the property.

Mr. Schreiner, in argument, dealt with the question of whether Bracht should be paid 10 or 5 per cent. in relation to landed property. During further argument, he took up the matter of the New Brighton property, and submitted that it was not impracticable to partition the estate, developments, such as the railway servitudes, and so forth, notwithstanding. Bracht should, he contended, get his one-fifth undivided share in the property. Waite was entitled to a declaration of rights, and he should be paid out on a valuation of the estate. The defendants were not entitled to alienate this valuable property until they had satisfied Waite's rights. The whole correspondence, he submitted, showed that defendants had not got a separate right to deal as they pleased with New Brighton. Referring to the proposed reference of account to an arbitrator, counsel suggested that, as the points in dispute were large and important, each side should nominate a suitable person, say an accountant, and the Court should appoint a counsel of standing to decide the quasi legal questions. As to the Douglas Colliery shares, he should suggest that if the Court had any difficulty on the evidence on commission in deciding their value, a separate valuator should be appointed.

Buchanan, J., said he would first have to hear counsel for defendants on that point.

Mr. Schreiner went on to refer to the values of the Delagoa Bay property, which had been held by Hansen and Schrader. He urged that the foreshore concession should be treated as a definite asset of the Hansen, Schrader Co. Counsel also contended that defendants had no right to debit against the Port Elizabeth business, upon which plaintiffs claimed a percentage of profit, the Supererotation shares. As to the currants, he did not press that point very much, though he thought defendants should bear the loss if they sent an over-shipment of currants. He admitted that plaintiffs would be liable to a certain proportion of Mr. Hansen's private secretary's salary to be debited against their claims.

Sir H. Juta argued that the Colliery and Johannesburg and Delagoa Bay properties were not included in the agreement to allow 10 per cent. to Bracht, where "general business" was merely spoken of, and that Bracht was to have only 5 per cent. on the colliery shares or landed properties, though he had 10 per cent. on the general business. It was clear from the correspondence that it was intended that the term "general business," as used in the agreement, meant wool, produce, and feathers, and did not embrace the colliery shares and landed properties. As to the New Brighton property, he submitted that Bracht had not proved his claim that he was a joint purchaser. It was clear that that property was bought on behalf of Hansen and Schrader by Waite, and that the contract was as between the seller (Mrs. Berry) and Hansen and Schrader. He could not understand how defendants could be said to be acting in a fiduciary capacity for plaintiffs. Defendants must either have been buying for themselves or as agents. There was nothing whatever to show agency on the part of Hansen and Schrader. Afterwards the partners distributed percentages of interest to plaintiffs, who never were co-owners. That Waite bought on behalf of the firm was supported by the agreement between Waite and defendants, under which the former, as general manager, was debarred from purchasing property on his own account. With regard to the Delagoa Bay business, counsel contended that the plaintiffs had no right to any interest in the foreshore concession, as it went to defendants when plaintiffs had no right to any Delagoa Bay interests of defendants. As to the Colliery shares, his clients were prepared to offer 5s. 9d. to plaintiffs for their shares, otherwise the shares would be sold by public auction, in which case they would see whether plaintiff's valuation of 15s. per share was justified. In regard to the account, he suggested that Mr. Syfret be appointed for the reference.

Postea (February 27th).

Buchanan, J., after giving judgment, ordered: That the defendant disclose and bring into account with the plaintiff, and the plaintiff is declared to be entitled to, Waite 15 per cent., and Bracht 10 per cent., in respect of all profits, shares in any company or syndicate, and any other valuable consideration received, or to be received by the defendants, or on their behalf in respect of the disposal of the landed property, and the general business and goodwill formerly carried on at Delagoa Bay; the plaintiff (in both cases) is declared entitled to one-fifth shares, and interest in the New Brighton property, and the defendants ordered to render true and correct account of all their dealings with and income derived from the said property, and to debate such account and pay the plaintiff his share thereof, and also pay to the plaintiff his fifth share of the value of the said property on the 31st December, 1903; that the defendants render a true and correct account of their dealings with the Douglas Colliery, and pay to the plaintiff 10 per cent. of the profits, if any, of the venture, and of the value of the said property or of the shares held therein; that the cost of or any loss or charge for certain shares in the South African Supererotation Company, Ltd., and in the shipment of certain currants referred to in clause 11 (sections 1 and 2) of plaintiffs' declaration is chargeable to the business carried on at Port Elizabeth, and that the sums of money mentioned in sections 3 and 5 of the said clause 11 of the declaration be referred for the settlement of the special referee hereinafter mentioned; that the value of the sub-lease, if any, held by the defendants' Johannesburg business before the 31st December, 1903, from the Delagoa Bay Agency Company, Limited, be brought into account; that the value of the New Brighton property and of the Douglas Colliery be ascertained in each case by an arbitrator to be agreed upon by the parties; that the said several accounts, when rendered, shall be referred to a special referee, who shall try and determine all questions arising thereon under section 21, Act 29, 1896; that failing an agreement by the parties upon the said arbitrators and the said special referee within one month, any of the parties to these suits shall be at liberty to move the Court for the appointment of such arbitrators and such special referee, or either of them, or for such other order to ascertain the values of any of the said properties, as the Court shall determine; that the accounts rendered by defendants be accepted as the accounts to be debated; by consent of parties, Mr. E. R. Syfret be appointed special referee; costs of action to be paid by defendants; as to costs of commission, no order, wasted costs; all costs of reference to be dealt with by special referee; Mr. Bracht to be allowed witness's expenses.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte JACOBS. { 1905.
Feb. 22nd.

Mr. Struben said that this matter had previously been before the Hon. Sir John Buchanan, and it was ordered to stand over for a further affidavit as to the disposal of certain land in the estate of the petitioner's wife. An affidavit was read from the auctioneer, which set out that the sale was well advertised, and the price, £1 3s. 6d. per morgen, he thought, was a very fair one. Petitioner purchased the property as executor dative in the joint estate of his late wife and himself, and he asked for an order authorising transfer of the landed property to himself in his individual capacity.

Order as prayed.

Ex parte THE GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAY, LTD.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for the confirmation of the liquidator's report, and for the fixing of a period within which all claims should be filed.

Report confirmed, and all other claims to be filed within two months from the present date.

CELLIERS V. HEINTJES.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved to make absolute a rule nisi calling on the respondent to show cause why he should not be interdicted from removing certain goods until the applicant was paid for rent in arrear.

Rule made absolute.

KING V. JOOSTE.

Mr. P. Jones moved for an order attaching certain ground, to found jurisdiction, pending an action for the recovery of £33 12s. 10d., for goods sold and delivered. The defendant was the owner of two blocks at East London, and he had left for Potchefstroom without paying his debts. The lots were valued at £2,000.

[Hopley, J.: I suppose one block would be sufficient for £33 12s. 10d.?]

Yes, my lord, we will take block 20.

[Hopley, J.: Isn't it usual to sue by edict in a case of this sort?]

Yes, my lord. I was going to ask for that.

Hopley, J., said there were sufficient facts set forth on which the Court would grant leave to sue by edict, and granted an order that lot 20 be attached. Leave granted to sue the respondent by edictal citation, and notice to be served personally, returnable 15th April.

Ex parte MOOS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to amend a certain plan and pass transfer of a road as land to one Arans, who had purchased the ground from the petitioner. A private road was shown on the sub-divided plan, and to meet the requirements of the Registrar, Arans and the petitioner had agreed to waive their right to that road.

A rule was granted calling on any person concerned to show cause by the 13th March why the Registrar of Deeds should not be authorised to pass transfer of the land shown in the general plan as a road to the said Arans, as land free of any burden or servitude as a road, one publication in the "Cape Times" and the "South African News."

Ex parte THE EXECUTOR OF THE ESTATE BANKS.

Mr. P. Jones moved for an order cancelling a certain bond for £1,100 on the estates of the late James Banks and Clara Banks. The petitioner sued in his capacity as executor dative in the estate of the late James Banks. The late James Banks and his predeceased spouse made a joint will, by which the estate was left to the two male heirs. During his lifetime James Banks passed a mortgage bond on the estate for £1,100, and afterwards he surrendered his estate, but there was no mention of the bond at the meeting of creditors. The bond was to be repaid in 1869, and it was after that Banks went insolvent, and the bond appeared to have been paid at some time or other.

[Hopley, J.: There seems to have been nothing heard of this bond since 1869, but don't you think there should be publication?]

Mr. Jones: I think so, my lord.

Hopley, J., granted a rule calling on all persons by the 15th April to show cause why the Registrar of Deeds should not be authorised to cancel the said bond, one publication in the "Graham's Town Journal" and one in the "Penny Mail."

Ex parte THE TRUSTEE IN THE ESTATE MCCABE.

Mr. Close moved for an order expunging a certain claim in the insolvent estate of James McCabe, of Queen's Town, in which the petitioner was sole trustee. The insolvent put in a claim by his son for £98 10s. 4d., and on examination of the books, it was found that the claim had been entered up at a subsequent date. The insolvent was called on to give an explanation, but failed to do so. There was a dividend out of the claim for £65, and petitioner prayed that the amount should be devoted to: (a) payment of costs of this petition; (b) payment of all other costs incurred in connection with the matter; and (c) a division among the creditors pro rata. The trustee had repeatedly made efforts to find the insolvent, but failed to do so.

A rule nisi was granted calling on James William McCabe to show cause by the 15th April why a certain proof of debt filed by him in the estate of the insolvent should not be expunged, and on due proof that it is impossible to serve personally, one publication in a Queen's Town paper.

Ex parte THE EXECUTOR IN THE ESTATE MOSTERT.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for a rule nisi for the cancellation of a certain bond on the estate of the late Hercules Mostert, in which the petitioner was executor dative. The deceased purchased certain land in the Cape Division in 1862, and passed a bond for £300 on the property. The deceased and the bond holder died shortly afterwards, and there was no trace of any interest having been paid, and the deed of transfer could not be found. By the will of the deceased his sister was appointed as sole heir, and she had signified her intention of selling the lots, but the bond would have to be cancelled before the sale could go through.

A rule nisi granted, calling on any persons concerned to show cause by the 15th April why the bond should not be cancelled, one publication in "Ons Land," "South African News," and the "Cape Times."

Ex parte MACCALLUM.

Mr. P. Jones moved on behalf of the petitioner, Wm. Alexander Maccallum, sen., who was the father and natural guardian of Wm. Alexander Maccallum, jun., a minor son of ten years of age, for leave to dispose of certain property in Alice, which he had donated to his son. The property consisted of five erven of ground at Alice, with all buildings and erections thereon, and it was bequeathed subject to the condition that the petitioner should have a usufruct during his lifetime. On the property there were certain licensed premises, known as the Royal Hotel, and the petitioner, holding adverse views to the liquor trade, had great objections to derive any profits from the sale of liquor. The premises were at present let at the monthly rent of £25. The petitioner had made repeated efforts to obtain a higher rent without success. A sworn appraiser had valued the hotel property at £2,270. Petitioner prayed for an order authorising him to dispose of the property and reinvest the money in good and sound security or on first mortgage. The father of the petitioner made an affidavit giving his approval, but the Registrar of Deeds would not allow transfer, as the interests of a minor were concerned. The Master reported that, as the donor had signified his consent to the sale, he saw no objection to the application being granted.

[Hopley, J.: There is £300 a year coming from this property. How are you going to get £300 a year out of £2,270?]

Mr. Jones: I don't know, my lord. It may be that they are not prepared to accept that price.

[Hopley, J.: Here we have a minor interested in property bringing in £300 a year, and which will always bring in that income. You want to sell that for something else, because the father seems adverse to that class of property?]

Mr. Jones: If the £2,270 were put out on bond, there would not be rates and taxes to pay.

[Hopley, J.: They don't say they are paying rates and taxes now. Notwithstanding their conscientious scruples, I think the hotel property the more valuable.]

Mr. Jones: If there is to be any reduction in the income from any other property, the petitioner would be the sufferer during his lifetime.

[Hopley, J.: He would have the consolation of a good conscience. When the son comes of age, he may probably have very different views of the liquor trade.]

Mr. Jones: But the father now has the opportunity of shaping his mind.

[Hopley, J.: I think you might ascertain what they could get for this property. They say vaguely there is a good purchaser. I do not say that the applicant is a fanatic, but he holds very strong views. I think, in the interests of the minor, the Court should see that he gets a fair price. You can get a supplementary affidavit, and set forth what you can get for it. Why should the minor part with this good property? The old grandfather apparently had no scruples.]

Mr. Jones: Your lordship would not leave that matter to the Master?

Hopley, J.: You may mention this matter again. Let them put forth the supplementary affidavit to say what the ready purchaser will give for the property, as I shall be glad to know that before I give a decision in a matter of this sort.

VAN DRIEL V. VENTER AND NIEBERG.

Mr. D. Buchanan was for the applicant, and Mr. Close for the respondent. Mr. Buchanan said that the matter was standing over from November 2 last year, when a rule nisi was granted, calling on the respondents to show cause by the 14th November why the plaintiff should not be allowed to sue in forma pauperis for certain sums of money for extra work done and material supplied and damages. On the 14th November, the return day, counsel was present in Court to oppose this application, which had been standing over ever since. Now counsel moved that the rule be made absolute.

Mr. Close put in an affidavit by the respondents setting forth that the applicant was engaged to construct a bridge at Hope Town. The claim put forward was frivolous and vexatious, as they were in possession of a document of acquittance.

Hopley, J., said he did not think that the applicant could be allowed to sue in forma pauperis on such scanty information.

Mr. Buchanan: Would your lordship allow the matter to stand over for further information?

Hopley, J.: The matter may be mentioned again on satisfactory information being forthcoming by the 11th May, affidavits of such information to be supplied to the other side by May 9.

Ex parte KING BROS.

This was an application to have a rule made absolute declaring the petitioners entitled to certain lots of ground at Durbanville, which they and their predecessors in title had held in uninterrupted possession for upwards of thirty years.

This was the return day of a rule nisi calling on all persons concerned to show cause why these lots should not be transferred to the applicants. The petitioners were the registered owners of the farm Johannesfontein, of 162 morgen, which they acquired from a Mrs. Lawrence, who, in turn, acquired it from the insolvent estate of one Rowan. For upwards of thirty years no claim had been put in, and the petitioners and their predecessors in title had used it without hindrance from anyone, and paid the rates. The petition was supported by the evidence of witnesses, who had lived at Durbanville for a considerable number of years. The municipal valuation of the farm Johannesfontein included the plots in question.

The affidavit of Rowan, one of the previous owners of the farm, set out that he was aware at the time that the lots, although he used them, did not belong to him. He ascertained this when he attempted to have an amended title of the farm.

The affidavit of the executor dative in the Estate Myburg, set out that he believed the lots marked blue belonged to Myburg, who twenty-five years ago left this colony, and went insane. A curator was not appointed to look after his affairs.

Mr. Scarle, K.C., was for the applicants, Mr. M. de Villiers was for the Estate Wassefall, and Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the estate of Meld van der Spuy Myburgh.

Hopley, J. said, as regards the Estate Myburg, the rule must be discharged with costs. With regard to the other land, the rule will be made absolute, but as regards the claims by the Estate Wassefall, the rule will be discharged, the costs to abide the action to be brought by the applicants. If they do not bring their action before next term, then they will have to pay the costs of this application.

REX V. JAN THOMAS.

Mr. Nightingale, moved, as a matter of urgency, and convenience, to have this matter tried at the Beaufort West Circuit Court.

Since then the defendant had gone through the form of marriage with the applicant's wife, who was divorced on account of the defendant, who was co-defendant, and against whom £200 damages was granted.

The defendant went into the box, and swore that he had no means excepting £1 15s. a week, which he received from "Ye Olde Thatched Tavern" as a billiard marker. He received his food there, and paid 15s. a week for his lodgings.

Examined by Mr. Buchanan: His wife had been sick for the past six weeks. The 15s. included rent for his wife. Before the case came on he had a good deal of money, which he spent freely. He thought his wife would be ill again, although she was at work that day. His employer was good enough to advance him money when his wife was sick. If he could possibly do it, he would make both ends meet, and keep his wife on 25s. a week.

Order granted, and execution suspended so long as the defendant pays £1 a month, first payment on the 1st March.

PICKARD V. THE S. A. TRADE PROTECTION SOCIETY AND ANOTHER. { 1905.
Feb. 23rd.
" 25th.

Libel—Privilege—Legal malice—Damages.

The defendants had, without express malice, falsely stated in a paper privately circulating among some 3,000 subscribers, that a judgment had been obtained against the plaintiff in a certain R.M. Court. They pleaded the absence of malice and privilege.

Held, that as they had been guilty of legal malice and as the statement in their paper was not privileged; the plaintiff was entitled to recover substantial damages, even though he had not proved special damage.

This was an action brought to recover £1,000 damages for defamation of character by reason of a statement made by the defendants in the "South African Mercantile Gazette."

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was a contractor and hotel-keeper of Oudtshoorn, the first-named defendant a duly incorporated company, and the second defendants printers, carrying on business in Cape Town. On the 26th March, 1904, the "South African Mercantile Gazette" wrongfully, falsely, and maliciously caused to be written, and the second defendants wrongfully printed, that a provisional judgment had been obtained against the plaintiff by one F. W. Nuns for £41 17s., whereas the matter was referred to arbitration.

The plea set out that the paper was not sold or available to the public. It was only given to business men on condition that the information would be regarded as private and confidential.

The words were printed by error and published without malice. An apology was published in the next issue. If the plaintiff was pressed for his accounts it was not through the paragraph in question.

Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. Bisset) was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. W. P. Buchanan) was for the defendants.

Wm. Henry Pickard, proprietor of the Imperial Hotel at Oudtshoorn, stated that in March, 1904, he had a contract for the building of the Standard Bank, and since then he had taken contracts. In a paper it appeared that in March, 1904, he was sued for certain money, but that was not so, as the case was referred to arbitration. The other side had to pay costs, witness only paying £32 out of a claim for £41. There was no tender, as witness did not get a specified account. The plaintiff was asked for a specified account, but he did not supply it. He heard first of all from the Standard Bank that there was a provisional judgment against him. The manager of the bank had a letter which came from the general manager's office. At that time witness had an overdraft at the bank. Witness then got a copy of the paper, and he was positive that the statement did him an immense amount of harm, as several people wanted to get paid at once. Witness instanced a couple of firms that changed their style of business. Instead of thirty or sixty days one firm drew at sight, which was not in accordance with the usual custom of dealing. A firm at Mossel Bay absolutely refused to assist him without the cash.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He might have had financial assistance from his son-in-law in May. In one case a firm drew on him because his account was outstanding for some months. He had no particular reason of not mentioning in his affidavit that Parker, Wood and Co. were pressing him. At that time money was very tight, the bank being anxious to get in their money. Only on two occasions, once before and once since this action, had he paid on a legal demand. It was because a young attorney wished to make a mark for himself that he got these letters over small amounts. During the election he asked Mr. Vincent to give him an extension. He could overdraw with the bank to the extent of £13,000. He took the manager of the bank to the attorney and explained the matter.

By the Court: If they had offered him £200 and apologised in the other papers he would have been satisfied.

Douglas Alexander Smith, of the Standard Bank, stated that his attention was drawn to the paragraph in question, and in consequence of that the bank wrote to the Oudtshoorn branch.

Mr. Searle: I suppose you saw the apology also?—Yes.

Mr. McGregor closed his case.

Thos. J. Kannemeyer stated that his firm at Oudtshoorn was the agent for the defendants. The first he heard about the matter was when the defendant society asked him if the report was correct, and witness then found out the mistake, and explained to the plaintiff how it occurred. He thought the matter had dropped until he had seen the case set down. People were being sued right and left at that time, and the banks were refusing to discount even to wealthy men. The plaintiff was somewhat dilatory in paying his accounts.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: He was not the local attorney in the case.

Alfred Pocock, articleed as a clerk to the last witness, stated that he was in the habit of copying judgments for this paper. On that particular day, Mr. Archibald copied the judgment, and witness sent it off to the society's office.

Wm. Archibald stated that his principal was the agent for a gazette similar to that of the defendants. He was doing both on the week in question, and witness made a mistake in the case of the plaintiff. Unfortunately following down the list of provisional cases he put "ditto" to the case of Pickard.

Re-examined by Mr. McGregor: The same day that he copied the judgment he found out that he made a mistake, but he did not mention it to Pocock.

Alexander Gill, one of the managers of Prince, Vincent and Co., and a subscriber to the "Gazette," stated that the plaintiff was a rather difficult man to get money out of; he paid only at the last moment. As a rule the plaintiff paid after due date.

Re-examined by Mr. McGregor: He would be quite satisfied if all business men paid on a little persuasion.

Leopold Krammer, a partner in the firm of the Castle Wine and Brandy Co., stated that at the beginning of last year the plaintiff owned certain moneys, and they received £40 in May.

James Bolan, manager of the defendant society, stated that in all the copies of the publication there were the words "private and confidential," and it circulated among subscribers only. The "Gazette" was not sold at any public place.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: All the subscribers signed was an ordinary form of order.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Mr. McGregor (for the plaintiff) argued that although a full and correct report of judicial proceedings is privileged, no privilege can be claimed for a report which is admittedly false. The rules of law as to privilege are not to be extended—Davis v. Shepstone (55 L.J., P.C., 51). In this case it could not be contended that information (even if it had been true) given to 3,000 subscribers to a paper very few of whom had ever heard of the plaintiff, was necessary in the public interest. His financial position only concerned his actual creditors. It is a serious matter to impute an unsound financial position to a business man. Such an imputation must affect his credit and thus injure him in his business. Odgers, p. 29 and 87, Shepherd v. Whittaker (10 C.P., 502). Whether the defendants believed the truth of what they stated and acted without express malice or not are considerations which have no bearing on the issue (Capital and Counties Bank v. Henty (7 Ap., 787)). The fact that the Bank called upon plaintiff for an explanation shows that the false statement made by the defendants was calculated to injure him. He offered to accept a reasonable apology, but that tendered by the defendants was wholly inadequate. I submit he is entitled to substantial damages.

Mr. Searle, for the defendants, cited a case against "Stubbs's Gazette" in the English Courts, where the "Gazette" had taken a minute from the judgment which was incorrect, and it was held that the communication was privileged. These societies, counsel contended, existed to prevent fraud, by protecting merchants, and to show how far the Court would go in supporting privilege, there was the case of Thompson v. Dashwood, in which a defamatory communication was put in a wrong envelope, and yet it was held to be privileged, although that judgment was afterwards disapproved of. Another case was that of Waller v. Loch (51 Q.B., 274), where the plaintiff sued a charity organisation society for having told another person that she was a person unworthy of receiving charity. The plaintiff was getting up subscriptions, and someone who knew her gave the unfavourable report, and it was held to be absolutely privileged as long as malice was disproved, quite independently of whether the statement was true or not. Counsel proceeded to quote several instances of the meaning of privileged communications, and contended that express malice must be proved. The facts were that this society existed for the purpose of protecting merchants and others—

[Maasdorp, J.: The question is whether they exist for that purpose or some other—to draw the five guineas from any number of subscribers they can get.]

Mr. Searle: It is always taken that these societies are for the protection of the mercantile community.

[Maasdorp, J.: The object of the company is to make money, I suppose? I don't say there is any harm in that, if they do their duty.]

Mr. Searle contended that in all the cases he referred to, it was recognised that these black lists were of great assistance to the mercantile community, who could hardly get on without such societies. It might have the object of making money, but it had a public interest as well to perform. A copy of the paper containing this incorrect statement, which was made by the error of a clerk in the office, who copied the list wrongly, was shown to the plaintiff, and when he complained, the matter was set right at once. The bank did not alter its course of business with this man in any way, and on the point of damages, counsel strongly urged it was not a case for any damages whatever. The plaintiff did not call either of the gentlemen whom he alleged had altered their course of dealing with him on account of anything appearing in this periodical. The mere fact that these two persons were subscribers proved nothing, as there was a witness for the defendants, who said he was a subscriber, and never saw the statement at all. It was almost idle to discuss special damages in a case of this sort. The plaintiff got an apology, and a promise that this matter would be set right as soon as possible. It was a pure technicality on which the defendants were brought into court, and as the error was rectified before any harm was done, counsel could not help thinking that it was a trumpety and unsubstantial case.

Mr. McGregor having been heard on the question of special damages, Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff seeks to recover damages from the defendants by reason of a false and injurious statement contained in their paper, injuriously reflecting upon the credit of the plaintiff as a trader. The defence set up in the case is that the communication is privileged. Now, it seems to me that the statement contained in the paper was false, and injurious to the credit of the plaintiff, and consequently the action for defamation can be based upon such a false and injurious statement. It was also proved satisfactorily that the defendants, in making the publication, were not actuated by any express malice or ill will. If the defendants succeed in showing that the communication was privileged, they would be entitled to judgment, notwithstanding the fact that it was incorrect. On the other hand, if the defendants fail to prove this privilege, then upon the finding that the statement was false and injurious, legal malice will be inferred. The main question to be decided in this case is whether this was a privileged communication. It seems that the defendants published this paper, the "South African Mercantile Gazette," for which they collect a good deal of information in respect of the financial position and standing of traders in this colony. They issue this paper to their subscribers, and the object in collecting and publishing this information is to keep the subscribers, who may be taken also generally as traders, informed of the position of traders and other dealers throughout the country, to enable them to protect themselves against dealing with persons of doubtful credit. It seems that in this case there are 3,000 subscribers, and each subscriber pays £5 5s. per annum. The defendants published in their journal a statement which in fact amounts to an allegation that, on the day mentioned, a provisional judgment was given at Oudtshoorn in the Magistrate's Court. The most the defendants' statement would convey is the meaning suggested in the innuendo, that a trial took place upon an action for debt in the Magistrate's Court, where the defendant was in default, and judgment went against him by default. As a matter of fact, it appears that the plaintiff had been sued in the Magistrate's Court, but upon exception taken by him that the matter was beyond the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, the case was dismissed. That is a very different state of affairs from an allegation that he had judgment against him. Upon this publication being brought to the notice of the plaintiff, in April, 1904, by the manager of the Standard Bank at Oudtshoorn, he communicated with the defendants, and complained of the injury done him. Upon this communication in the newspaper being brought to the notice of the plaintiff by the bank, he communicated with the defendants, demanding reparation for damages. An answer was written on the 28th April, stating that the defendants admitted their mistake, and in the next issue of their paper, which would not be issued until 7th May, they intended inserting an apology. In the issue of the 7th May, in a foot note appearing under the column where judgments are entered, an explanation is given, and it amounts to this: "We regret through an error in our issue of 26th March, under the heading: Civil judgments, Oudtshoorn, in the matter of F. W. Nunns v. Pickard, for £41 7s., on account of work done, it appeared that judgment provisionally had been given for the plaintiff, with costs. This should have been an exception taken to the summons, on the ground that the amount involved was beyond the jurisdiction of the Magistrate. The exception was sustained, with costs. We make this insertion, and tender our apologies for having occasioned Mr. Pickard any inconvenience and annoyance." The plaintiff was not satisfied with the explanation and apology, and continued to press the defendants for further amends; and in a letter of the 4th July, from the defendants to the plaintiff, they conclude as follows: "We are of opinion that the attached slip does away with your claim, as being wilful and malicious." Thereupon proceedings were taken by the plaintiff. Now the question to be decided is whether the communication made by the defendants to the subscribers of this paper is privileged, and whether that privilege consequently grants them immunity from damages, even though it should appear that the communication was false. The general principles upon which these cases are generally decided will be found in Odgers, on page 248: "Impartial and accurate report in any proceedings in a law court is privileged, unless the Court itself has prohibited the publication, or the subject matter of the trial be unfit for publication." Further on, he says that "a report must be an impartial and accurate one, of what really occurred at the trial." Then the further principle is of most importance in this case, and upon it this case hinges. It is stated in the following words: "Where the defendant has an interest in the subject matter of communication, and the person to whom the communication is made has a corresponding interest in such case, then communication honestly made is privileged by reason of the occasion." Now the first privilege spoken of, that of communicating the proceedings in a court of law, is such as the defendant cannot now avail himself, because he did not give an accurate account of the trial. He gave an incorrect and false account. Therefore the privilege of communicating to the public proceedings of the court of law will not be available to him. Then the question arises, in how far the case comes under the other principles laid down, where there is a company interested, one party may communicate information to another, and be exempt from liability, so long as the communication is honestly made. A number of cases have been cited bearing more or less directly or indirectly on this case, but it was necessary, in order to find a case almost exactly in point, to go to the Supreme Court of New Jersey; and Mr. Searle has criticised the judgment given in that case, in which there was a difference of opinion. Even in appealing to that case, he does not appeal to the judgment of the Court, but rather to the opinion expressed by the minority of the dissenting judges. In this case also, a false communication had found its way into the paper of a society similar to that of the defendants, and the judgment of the Court was to the following effect: "The publication by a mercantile agency of a notification on a sheet which is sent to its subscribers, irrespective of their interest in the plaintiff's standing, is not a privileged communication, and the proprietors are liable for a false report of the plaintiff's special condition in such publication.

The dissenting minority of judges held there was a sufficient interest in the subscribers to this paper to know the position of every trader throughout the whole of the United States of America, and consequently such communication would be a privileged communication. But that view was not adopted in the judgment of the Court. Even a judgment of one of the dissenting judges is in an important respect qualified at the conclusion of the judgment, in which appears these words: "In my opinion, the defendants, in furnishing information to the subscribers under the conditions imposed, are not subject to the presumption that they were moved by malice, and I therefore vote to reverse the judgment below." The conditions imposed were these: the paper was issued to subscribers only on entering into an agreement that they would not divulge the contents of it. The dissenting judges, in holding there was a common interest, thought it necessary to guard their opinion by saying it was safeguarded by a promise not to divulge. The judgment of that case, if it was adopted by this Court, would be available to the plaintiff. In this case also a communication was made to 3,000 subscribers, and it is quite clear that the vast majority of these subscribers had no special interest in the financial standing of the plaintiff. Therefore, the dissenting judges held that every trader is interested in the position of every other trader in the whole of the United States of America, but if that wide and liberal construction is allowed in a matter of privilege, I don't see why it should not be extended by holding that every member of the community may at some time or other come into contact with some trader, and be entitled to be informed of his position, and every newspaper would be entitled to inform every member of the community how every trader in the community stood. That contention cannot be upheld by the cases which have been cited by Mr. Searle, which go no way near extending the privilege, so far as it would have to be extended in order to protect the defendants in this case. I hold, therefore, that this is not a privileged communication, and in the absence of privilege it appears that a false and injurious statement was made by the defendants of the plaintiff, and consequently the Court must infer what is termed legal malice in this case. For this injury, the plaintiff would be entitled to some compensation. Now it seems to me that this is by no means a very serious case, and it is a pity it should have gone as far as it has done; but I can only attribute that to the position taken up by the defendants. They had done the plaintiff an injury, and the plaintiff demanded reparation, as is generally done, in a heavy sum of damages.

That is very often met by the defendant taking all means possible in his power, to correct the wrong impression conveyed by a false publication, by giving a correction as much publicity as possible. However, they in an obscure footnote put an explanation in their own paper that cannot be considered sufficient by the plaintiff. When the plaintiff insisted upon further amends, he received a letter from the printers, in which they stated: "We are of opinion that the attached slip does away with your client's claim, as being wilful and malicious." They simply take up the legal position, as they did not act maliciously, the plaintiff could have no case to proceed upon. The position they ought to have taken up was to make amends for the injury as far as possible, and they made no attempt to do so. Then, again, their plea is one which certainly cannot commend itself as being a position taken up by the party injuring another towards an injured party. They admit in their plea the incorrectness of the statement in their paper, but they proceed in so many words to say we were, after all, not so very far out in what we said, because, as a matter of fact, the debt was due, and in arbitration an award was made against the plaintiff. Here again I think they went much too far. They did not state the circumstances under which this took place, and consequently the plaintiff was bound, considering the attitude taken by the defendant, to come into court and seek to establish his position by a public inquiry and also recover damages if he was entitled to such. These proceedings could have been prevented by the defendants taking up a more considerate position. Notwithstanding that, I don't think any great injury has been done to the plaintiff in this case. It is quite clear that his credit as a trader was injuriously affected to some extent and the mere fact that the bank sent to him to make an explanation of his position was sufficient to show that a financial institution would have altered their course of dealings unless a satisfactory explanation was made. I am of opinion, upon the authorities which have been cited, that when a trader's credit is affected by a false statement of the nature in question that he is entitled for the injury to general damages, and even if there is no proof of any special damages the plaintiff is entitled to some damages. He has proved he was injured, but as to the exact amount there is no evidence before the Court. Under all the circumstances, if the Court awards him a sum of £20 damages in this case it will meet the justice of the case. Judgment will be given for the plaintiff for £20 with costs, with the plaintiff allowed costs as a necessary witness.

TRIAL CAUSE.

GIBBS V. THE B.S.A. ASPHALT COMPANY.

Sale and purchase.

This was an action to recover £130, being the purchase price of a stone-breaking machine, £18 the price of a screen, and the price of two plates sold to the defendants.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was a mechanical engineer and proprietor of the Britannia Works at Observatory. On the 14th July the plaintiff supplied to the defendants one 12 by 7 Simplex Stone Breaking machine for £130, the terms being £65 paid at the end of July, and the balance at the end of August. About the 21st and 28th July plaintiff sold to the defendants two plates, and it was agreed that the plaintiff should order a revolving screen from England, and supply it to the defendants for £18. In the month of September plaintiff tendered the screen, but the defendants refused to accept it. Plaintiff claimed £130 for the machine, £18 for the screen and the price of the plates.

The plea admitted the formal allegations, but set out that the machine was incapable of crushing four tons of stones per hour as contracted for, and the plaintiff had failed to remedy the defective parts. The defendant company tendered the machine and, by reason of hindrance to them in contracts, they claimed in reconvention damages for £150.

Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. P. Jones), was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Uppington (with him Mr. Van Zyl), was for the defendants.

John Henry Gibbs, plaintiff, stated that he was a mechanical engineer of twenty-eight years' standing, and proprietor of the Britannia Works at Observatory. The defendants saw the machine on the 13th July. It was a Standard machine, and described in the catalogue book as made by Mason and Co., of Leicester. The defendants agreed to take the machine, and asked plaintiff to put his terms in writing. The machine was not in a defective condition on the day it was delivered. Several times afterwards he saw the machine, and it worked all right. The defendants were instructed to erect the machine on a good level foundation, and the bearings must be kept tight. On the 15th July he saw the defendants' engine driver actually loosening the bearings, and witness warned him that he would ruin the machine. Subsequently he found the machine out of the level, and a small crack in the boss of the flywheel, which had been caused by one of the keys being screwed too tight. On the 4th August Mr. Allen, who bought the machine on behalf of the firm, expressed surprise that witness had not been paid. There was no complaint made to him about the machine up to the time he received the letter of demand. The machine was not equipped for granulating; witness could not say whether the defendants granulated or not. When the defendants instructed him to cable for a screen on the 21st July, there was no complaint whatever about the machine. He had disposed of similar machines to other parties, and there were no complaints. The defects would be caused by improper handling.

Cross-examined by Mr. Van Zyl: Mr. Allen did not specify any capacity that would be required for the machine; he saw it stated in the catalogue that it would crush four tons an hour.

Mr. Allen said the machine was rather small, but the witness did not guarantee that it would crush four tons an hour. Witness saw the machine started, but he took no part in working it. A new plate was sent for on the 21st July, but any machine was liable to break a plate. The shaft was bent through the defendants working the machine with the broken plate. If the machine were put in proper condition it would do the work it was catalogued for.

Wm. Hansen, builder and contractor, said he had a smaller size of the same machine supplied by the plaintiff, and it always worked satisfactorily.

James Garvey, mechanical engineer, Woodstock, saw the machine working after it had been at work for about a week. The shaft was bent, and the crusher consequently could not turn out so much work as it otherwise would. The bearings were moving, whereas they should have been tight. The engine was a second-hand one, and had no governor.

Alexander Drassy, contractor, described the working of the machine by the engine. The engine used to race, and shook the machine all to pieces.

Alex. Grassick, who selected the machine, thought it was in perfect working order when delivered. There was special fitting for granulating work. The supply of coal was not by any means satisfactory for the engine. Now and then they got a bag of coal, and for a fortnight they might receive none.

Cross-examined by Mr. Van Zyl: He was formerly sub-contractor to the B.S.A. Co. He was not dismissed from the defendant company. He did piece-work for them under contract. The City Engineer refused to pass his work, and in consequence of that witness gave up the contract. The machine was bought on the understanding that it would do something like what was credited to it in the catalogue. The failure of the machine was principally due to the engine and the unsatisfactory nature of the foundation. Witness did not interfere with the construction of the foundation. On the 8th August he wrote complaining of the machine, but he mentioned nothing about the engine or the foundation. If he adjusted the machine to crush to a quarter of an inch he would get four tons an hour out of it.

Re-examined by Mr. McGregor: What he meant by saying that the crusher was inadequate was that it was really too small for the way in which he was instructed to carry out the contract.

Mr. McGregor closed his case.

Andrew Allen, managing director of the B.S.A. Co., stated that the purchase was made on the 12th July, and the terms fixed up afterwards. The plaintiff guaranteed that the machine would crush four tons an hour, and to convince the defendant he produced the catalogue and letters from people who had experience of the same class of machine. Witness had no special knowledge of the machine. The plaintiff was asked to be present at a trial test, but he did not seem anxious to come. The same day that the plate broke a complaint was made to the plaintiff, who sent a new one to replace the damaged one.

The plaintiff promised to put the shaft right. Shortly after the plate broke a complaint was made to him about the fly wheel. It would be hard to say whether the crack was old or not, as it had been painted over. When the fly wheel was out of order it was a dangerous thing to work the machine, and plaintiff, on witness's request, promised to supply a new wheel. Witness was determined to give the machine every chance. Witness was still prepared, if the plaintiff could prove that the machine could turn out anything like he said, to accept it. The machine was no good to them whatever. As a matter of fact, they had to hire another crusher to carry out the contract.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: He did not think that it was a singular coincidence that his first complaint in writing was sent after he received the letter of demand. He did not think it necessary to make his complaints in writing, as he trusted Mr. Gibbs. He didn't know that the granulating process could only be done by special equipment. The plaintiff told him that he could use the machine for granulating in the meantime while they ordered the granulating jaws from England. It was Mr. Gibbs who should have tested the foundation. When witness purchased the machine the plaintiff agreed to see the machine in proper working order. The supply of coal, as far as he was aware, was not defective. The crack in the fly wheel he thought was due to a flaw in the casting. His attention was not drawn to the bearings of the machine being too loose.

The Secretary of the B.S.A. Co., Mr. Davies, stated had they been able to have a sufficient supply of stone the contract would have been finished before the wet weather set in.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: Witness never told Mr. Gibbs that he was distinctly having the plate as a gift, but he understood from the plaintiff that he would replace the plate. Witness refused to pay for the machine on account of the defects. The plaintiff merely said that he would go to his attorney.

Irvine Thorpe, in the employ of the defendant company, stated that he had worked with stone crushers for a little time, but he had a great deal of experience of engine work. He worked the stone crusher with an engine that was in practically good condition. The engine was without governors, but that omission would not create any great damage. The plaintiff gave full instructions as to the erection of the engine. Two men and two men more could not move the machine, and the bearings were so stiff that the belt was thrown off. Witness noticed a flaw in the plate, which was not exactly broken off, but pretty near. The plaintiff said he would send a new shaft. The machine could not give a good ten minutes' run. What she turned out was nothing near the four tons an hour. The foundation was quite satisfactory; the plaintiff never made any remark about it.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: He was there when Garvey inspected the machine, and when he was there the bearings were slack. The plaintiff did not say that the foundation was to be kept level and the bearings tight. Before the plaintiff complained witness had to work on an unlevel foundation and slack bearings. A couple of days after the plate was cracked he noticed that the shaft was bent.

Harry Wm. Miller, engineer, who inspected the machine, gave it as his opinion that the machine as it stood could not crush four tons of stone in an hour. Governors on an engine were an adjunct, but not essential where there was a skilled driver. The machine was altogether too small to crush to a quarter of an inch.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: If the machine could do what it was catalogued to do he would be surprised.

By the Court: It was not supposed to be a machine that should be mathematically levelled up. He did not think it a serious thing to allow the engine to run without governors.

The Superintendent of Works at the Newlands Reservoir said he had about three continuous years' experience of stone crushing, and that the machine in question could be used for granulating. That would not injure the machine. The machine he did not consider capable of putting out four tons an hour.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: He had no experience of Mason's machines. An ordinary intelligent workman should be able to work the machine. It was very advisable to have governors on an engine. He would not call it careless to run without a governor.

Wm. Arthur Pallison, civil engineer, stated that he had many years' experience of working stone crushers. On several occasions he had used an engine without governors, but he preferred to have them where he had not got a thoroughly trustworthy man. The machine in question had been superseded by several other machines.

By the Court: The work of the machine was erratic, but he could not say when he saw it work whether the shaft was erratic or not.

Mr. Van Zyl closed his case, and was heard in argument on the facts. Without calling on Mr. McGregor.

De Villiers, C.J., in giving judgment for the plaintiff, with costs, said he was satisfied there was no contract on the part of the plaintiff to see to the fixing of the machine before it was started, and therefore he could not be held responsible for any defect. The defendant did not, after a reasonable time, give notice of the defects to the plaintiff, and the defects could be fully explained by the manner in which the machine was handled after it got into the possession of the defendant.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ROBERTSON V. HOLT AND HOLT. { 1905.
Feb. 25th.
Mar. 2nd.

Traveller—Contract of service—
Travelling expenses—Medical attendance.

This was an action brought by John Robertson, commercial traveller and commission agent, of Bloemfontein, and late of Port Elizabeth, against his late employers, Holt and Holt, of Port Elizabeth, to recover the sum of £124 17s. 7d., balance of travelling expenses, etc.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, stated that he had been employed by the defendants as a traveller under an agreement which expired in April, 1904. He prayed for judgment (1) for the following sums which he said were due and owing to him by the defendants: £32 15s. 8d., balance of unpaid travelling expenses, including a sum of 12s. 6d. a day incurred by the plaintiff in the defendants' business at Bloemfontein; £13 4s. hotel expenses, incurred at Heilbron; £64 6s. 8d. commission on goods sold; £14 11s. 3d., salary from the 1st to the 21st April, 1904; (2) interest a tempore morae; (3) alternative relief; (4) costs of suit.

Defendants, in their plea, said that from the sums claimed by plaintiff there should be deducted sums of £96 12s. 6d. hotel expenses wrongfully charged, and £13 4s. hotel expenses claimed that would not be paid, and other sums which extinguished the amount claimed by the plaintiff. They prayed that the claim might be dismissed with costs. For a claim in reconvention the defendants said that on a true and correct account between the parties, as furnished to the plaintiff, there remained a balance in their favour of £52 13s. 8d., for which sum defendants prayed judgment, with costs.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for the plaintiff; Mr. Close (with him Mr. Pyemont) was for the defendants.

The plaintiff said that he came out about four years ago upon a three years' agreement entered into with the defendants in England. His salary as stipulated by the agreement was £250 a year, and by arrangement on his arrival, he was also paid a commission of 1 per cent. on cigarettes, and 2½ per cent. on soft goods. He was allowed travelling expenses except when in Port Elizabeth. The defendants' principal business was at Port Elizabeth, they also had branches at Kimberley, Johannesburg, Durban, and Cape Town. He was six months in the office and he then went on the road. While in Port Elizabeth he had £20 16s. 8d. a month, and he was allowed £2 5s. a week expenses, and a pony and trap. He was in Port Elizabeth on the road for about 15 months. He went to Bloemfontein in September, 1902. No question was raised as to a variation of the agreement on the substitution of Bloemfontein for Port Elizabeth. The defendants only once furnished him with a half-yearly account as set out in the agreement. Before he left for Bloemfontein his wife and family had come out to this country. In December, 1902, witness came down to Port Elizabeth and asked Mr. Albert Holt if he thought it advisable that he should take his wife and family to Bloemfontein. Mr. Holt told him that he thought it was not advisable because they might wish to send him to Durban. In April, 1903, witness saw Mr. David Holt, and asked him a similar question. Mr. Holt told him he could please himself, and that he (Mr. Holt) did not want to be troubled with such matters. He did not agree to forego travelling expenses while he was at Bloemfontein. Witness treated himself as a traveller while at Bloemfontein, and charged expenses as such. He did not make any special agreement with the defendants when his wife and family went to Bloemfontein in May, 1903. He paid £10 a month rent in Bloemfontein, and found that the cost of living was much higher than at Port Elizabeth. From September, 1902, to May, 1903, he always drew his hotel expenses from the firm. He had a number of expenses at Bloemfontein outside his hotel expenses. He had decided to draw his money from defendants in a lump sum, and allowed it to run on, his understanding being that he should be paid interest at the rate of 6 per cent. on the money standing with the firm. At a later date he wrote to the defendants from Kroonstad, saying that he was short of cash, and that unless he received money from them he should have to draw on his hotel account of 12s. 6d. a day. Witness was engaged in looking after the interests of his firm, and other creditors in the estate of Abrahams and Hasser, which was sequestered in Bloemfontein.

The amount eventually paid out of the estate was 18s. 6d. in the £. Witness was allowed £60 by the Master of the High Court, Bloemfontein, as remuneration for his services in the matter during a period of two months. Defendants not only received 18s. 6d. in the £ on their claims, but also the £60 witness had been allowed. After he had severed his connection with the firm he received from them a demand for £292, to be reduced, subject to their requirements in certain respects being satisfied, to £19 odd. An item in dispute was medical charges in connection with an accident he sustained while on the firm's business. He was driving in the firm's cart towards Bloemfontein, and in crossing the Caledon River the trap swerved, his samples were thrown out, and he was pitched into the river, and his head was hurt.

In cross-examination, witness said he did not acknowledge any responsibility for the bad debts and he claimed to be paid commission on those amounts because for every order that he obtained he had to make inquiries as to references, and the firm exercised their own discretion as to whether they executed the orders. He was not allowed to decide which orders should be fulfilled and which rejected. In several cases the firm did not execute orders, because they did not think the customers' credit good enough.

Re-examined: The matter of reverse commissions that the defendants now charged against him were never mentioned to him until after he had left their service. They gave him a very satisfactory testimonial when he ceased to be in their employ.

Mr. Buchanan closed his case.

David Holt, a managing director of Holt and Holt, said that he saw the plaintiff in Port Elizabeth in April, 1903, when the latter came down from Bloemfontein. The matter of plaintiff's family living in Bloemfontein was mentioned to him by plaintiff. Robertson said he should like to be permanently stationed in the Orange River Colony, and that it would be very beneficial to him. He added that it would also be very beneficial to the firm, because it would save them a large amount of expenses in regard to hotel accommodation. After further conversation, witness agreed that plaintiff's family should reside in Bloemfontein, and during the time they were there the defendants were not to pay any costs in regard to hotel expenses. Witness had pointed out to him that it was very much better for the firm that their travellers should live at the base. He did not think he should have consented to the proposal had it not been for the saving that would have been effected to the firm.

By the Court: He did not think that he had misunderstood plaintiff, and that he consented to the arrangement because it would save Robertson's expenses in the hotel in the evening. New travellers, it was recognised, had to spend something in hotels, even in Port Elizabeth, because of the business that the firm did with hotel keepers. He did not consider that there was a great difference in the cost of living between Port Elizabeth and Bloemfontein.

Cross-examined: Mr. Robertson's wife and family returned to Port Elizabeth in January, 1904, and the firm then allowed him hotel expenses from that date to the termination of the agreement. Witness was not in Port Elizabeth at the time plaintiff's family returned, or he thought he should have raised some objection to the payment of these expenses. Witness had left for Johannesburg in the interval.

Sydney James Davidson stated that he was partner in and secretary to the defendant company. Mr. Robertson came out here in 1901. His base was fixed here at Port Elizabeth. In April, 1903, Mr. Robertson asked to be fixed permanently at Bloemfontein, and stated, as an inducement, that if he were fixed at that place, he would set up his private establishment there, and thus save hotel expenses. Witness said that he, himself, could not decide the matter, and Mr. David Holt being at the office, the matter was referred to him. Witness did not attend the interview, but was subsequently told by Mr. Robertson that the matter had been arranged. Witness had never heard of any arrangement by which 12s. 6d. per diem was to be allowed to Mr. Robertson as expenses at Bloemfontein, and left to accumulate at 6 per cent. It was on March 5 that witness first heard of the £96. supposed to be 155 days' expenses. The letter of February 22 contained no reference to the amount. Witness had thought that this letter had been lost, but, on a wire being sent to Port Elizabeth, it had been discovered. It contained merely a request that plaintiff's commission account for November, December, and January should be forwarded to his wife. As this was not done, witness communicated with Robertson to the effect that the firm had refused to settle the commission until their claim for a portion of bad debts incurred had been allowed. When Robertson went outside to obtain orders, he was informed that he was out on the same basis as any other traveller, and that it was his duty to ascertain particulars as to each customer's financial position. In the event of bad debts being incurred, he would be responsible for a portion of the same.

Hopley, J., said that during a bad time a traveller might not make anything per annum.

Mr. Close said this was not so. There had been an agreed salary of £250 per annum, and an arrangement by which the total amount of salary and commission should never go below £350.

Witness (continuing) said it was usual to make a fine for bad debts.

Hopley, J., asked where this fine or penalty appeared in the agreement.

Mr. Close said it was not contained in the agreement, but it was the custom of the firm.

Continuing, the witness stated that the commission was one per cent. on business in town, and 2½ per cent. for country business. All the items were shown in a detailed statement, which was rendered in April, 1904. The commission was paid upon the balance, after deducting the amount of bad debts and penalties from the amount of business which had been done. Witness had never heard about an accident befalling Mr. Robertson until the present case came on. However, witness's firm admitted no liability with regard to accidents. The firm had never paid medical expenses in connection with any accidents its travellers might have had. No agreement was entered into by the firm to pay Robertson 6 per cent. on any balance of commission due.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: Witness had told his attorneys, both at Port Elizabeth and here, as to the commission in different cases. Witness specifically told Robertson that he would have to pay a penalty the same as other travellers. The amount of the penalty on bad debts in town accounts was 6½ per cent. Witness gave plaintiff particulars of all these bad debts. It was difficult to give amounts of bad debts every month; that was why nothing had been said about the penalty until the present time.

[Hopley, J.: How many times do you charge Mr. Thomas, another of your travellers, with these penalties?]

Once a year, my lord. I sent it to both of them at the same time.

Mr. Buchanan: You said just now that the commission on bad debts was 2 per cent.

No; 6½ per cent. on town bad debts and 2 per cent. on bad debts in the country.

Witness (continuing) said that he did not endorse the specification as to the commission on the agreement, because it was quite an understood thing. Witness had paid Robertson's hotel expenses at Bloemfontein on one particular occasion, as a matter of grace, because the firm knew that Robertson's wife had left Bloemfontein for Port Elizabeth, and that he (Robertson) could not, therefore, have had a private house there.

Ernest Gillespie stated that he was cashier to the defendant company. He had been with the firm for about two years at Port Elizabeth. He knew of no arrangement under which Mr. Robertson was to receive six per cent. on any balance of commission held by the firm. Witness knew that it was the custom of Hoit and Holt to charge their travellers penalties for bad debts, but could not say if Mr. Robertson had been charged penalties.

Mr. Close closed his case.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Hopley, J.: In this case the plaintiff sues the defendant for the sum of £124 17s. 7d. on various items of account, extending over a considerable period, for services entered upon for the defendant firm. This amount must be reduced by £5 7s. 7d. for an item brought to the notice of the plaintiff in the defendants' plea and their letters. That leaves the amount of his claim at £119 12s. The largest item is £96 17s. 6d., for alleged allowance for hotel expenses, or house allowance, for 155 days at Bloemfontein, which had not previously been charged by the plaintiff. The circumstances are that the plaintiff engaged with the defendants to come to this country at a minimum salary of £350 per annum, and such commission as he could earn as a commercial traveller for their firm. Port Elizabeth was to be his base, and he had a right, when away from the base, to have his hotel and travelling expenses paid. In Port Elizabeth he had his wife and family, and while there, he was allowed 45s. per week for what were called incidental expenses, which included the amount of his train fare to Uitenhage, which place he seems to have visited on business once a week. After a little while he was moved to Bloemfontein, and, being then away from his proper base, he was allowed all his hotel expenses, as well as incidental expenses. His actual hotel expenses were 12s. 6d. per diem, we are told, and this appears to be a reasonable figure. He appears to have done fairly well while there, and it seemed to be understood that he was treated as prac-

Libel—Privilege—Legal malice—Damages.

The defendants had, without express malice, falsely stated in a paper privately circulating among some 3,000 subscribers, that a judgment had been obtained against the plaintiff in a certain R.M. Court. They pleaded the absence of malice and privilege.

Held, that as they had been guilty of legal malice and as the statement in their paper was not privileged; the plaintiff was entitled to recover substantial damages, even though he had not proved special damage.

This was an action brought to recover £1,000 damages for defamation of character by reason of a statement made by the defendants in the "South African Mercantile Gazette."

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was a contractor and hotel-keeper of Oudtshoorn, the first-named defendant a duly incorporated company, and the second defendants printers, carrying on business in Cape Town. On the 26th March, 1904, the "South African Mercantile Gazette" wrongfully, falsely, and maliciously caused to be written, and the second defendants wrongfully printed, that a provisional judgment had been obtained against the plaintiff by one F. W. Nuns for £41 17s., whereas the matter was referred to arbitration.

The plea set out that the paper was not sold or available to the public. It was only given to business men on condition that the information would be regarded as private and confidential.

The words were printed by error and published without malice. An apology was published in the next issue. If the plaintiff was pressed for his accounts it was not through the paragraph in question.

Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. Bisset) was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. W. P. Buchanan) was for the defendants.

Wm. Henry Pickard, proprietor of the Imperial Hotel at Oudtshoorn, stated that in March, 1904, he had a contract for the building of the Standard Bank, and since then he had taken contracts. In a paper it appeared that in March, 1904, he was sued for certain money, but that was not so, as the case was referred to arbitration. The other side had to pay costs, witness only paying £32 out of a claim for £41. There was no tender, as witness did not get a specified account. The plaintiff was asked for a specified account, but he did not supply it. He heard first of all from the Standard Bank that there was a provisional judgment against him. The manager of the bank had a letter which came from the general manager's office. At that time witness had an overdraft at the bank. Witness then got a copy of the paper, and he was positive that the statement did him an immense amount of harm, as several people wanted to get paid at once. Witness instanced a couple of firms that changed their style of business. Instead of thirty or sixty days one firm drew at sight, which was not in accordance with the usual custom of dealing. A firm at Mossel Bay absolutely refused to assist him without the cash.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He might have had financial assistance from his son-in-law in May. In one case a firm drew on him because his account was outstanding for some months. He had no particular reason of not mentioning in his affidavit that Parker, Wood and Co. were pressing him. At that time money was very tight, the bank being anxious to get in their money. Only on two occasions, once before and once since this action, had he paid on a legal demand. It was because a young attorney wished to make a mark for himself that he got these letters over small amounts. During the election he asked Mr. Vincent to give him an extension. He could overdraw with the bank to the extent of £13,000. He took the manager of the bank to the attorney and explained the matter.

By the Court: If they had offered him £200 and apologised in the other papers he would have been satisfied.

Douglas Alexander Smith, of the Standard Bank, stated that his attention which, they say, they have a right to charge against the plaintiff. Now, unfortunately, the parties chose to vary the original agreement, instead of adhering to it. At the end of every month the defendants paid the plaintiff commission, or allowed it to him, and, it seems to me, they cannot come here after they have got into a law suit, and say: "We can revise these claims and readjust them," and that, except in the case of fraudulent concealment, they cannot re-open these matters, and reverse the commission. They say that the plaintiff was told it was the practice of the firm, when there were bad debts, to penalise the traveller concerned, and to charge him a penalty of one or two-and-a-half per cent. The question of whether the plaintiff was so informed rests on the evidence of one witness; and the whole thing is absolutely denied by the plaintiff. I am not satisfied that this was told to the plaintiff, or even that it was the practice of the firm at all; but what we do know is, that there never was a penalty charged to the plaintiff, and we only hear of the penalties practically after this case had been started. So, I cannot find that the plaintiff ever agreed to pay such penalties. Therefore, as regards the penalties and commissions, the defendants must fail. As regards the suggestion that certain items should be referred to the investigation of an accountant, I do not think it advisable to allow this case to remain open any longer. It is regrettable that the parties did not adopt that course, before coming into court, or even settle the matter entirely out of court. The result of it all is that there is the sum of £3 10s. 6d. due to the plaintiff. The plaintiff has failed in a large portion of his claim; and the defendants have failed in their claim, although they have succeeded in reducing the plaintiff's claim to a large extent. As regards costs, it seems to me, in the circumstances—though I do not expect it will please either party—that the only thing to say is that there shall be judgment for the plaintiff for the sum of £3 10s. 6d., and no order as to costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

REED V. PORT ELIZABETH TOWN COUNCIL. 1905.
Feb. 27th.
Mar. 6th.

Municipal Regulations — Powers of Council — Demolition of buildings — Measure of damages.

Certain Municipal Regulations provided that "where a building is considered by the Council to be ruinous or so far dilapidated as thereby to have become and to be unfit for use or occupation," the Council may, on failure by the owner to obey an order for its demolition, proceed to demolish the building and claim the cost from the owner.

Held, in an action by the Council for the cost of the demolition of certain cottages of the defendant, that the Council had no power under such regulations to demolish buildings which were structurally fit for use and occupation, although from a sanitary point of view, they were not so fit.

In ordering the demolition, the Council acted bona fide and in the interest of the inhabitants of the town at a time when the plague was raging there, and the defendant was proved to have been generally neglectful of his duties as landlord.

Held, in the defendant's claim in reconvention for damages, that, in the absence of any circumstances of aggravation, the measure of damages which should be applied was the diminution in the selling price of the land by reason of the unlawful act of the Council.

This matter originally came before the Eastern Districts Court in the form of an action brought by the Town Council against Reed for two sums of money, £75 and £37 10s. 3d. The claim for £75 was amicably settled. The claim for £37 10s. 3d. was alleged to be due for work and labour done and expenses incurred by the Council on the defendant's behalf in pulling down certain buildings in Port Elizabeth belonging to Reed, after a notice had been sent to the respondent that the buildings were dilapidated and unfit for use and habitation. There were two sets of buildings, the upper and lower red barracks. The defendant admitted that the lower buildings should be pulled down, and the upper alone remained in dispute. The defendant took up a position that the upper buildings should not be pulled down by the Council according to law, and he claimed £3,000, the value of the buildings, and £1,085 rent at £35 a month from February, 1902.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. P. Jones), was for the appellants, and Mr. Burton (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) was for the respondent Reed, who had lodged a cross-appeal.

[De Villiers, C.J.: On the other side the appeal will be on the question of damages and the consequent order as to costs.]

Mr. Burton: Yes, my lord.

Mr. Searle read Reg. 37, under which the Town Council purported to act, and on the latter part of which, he said, the main argument hinged. It would be no answer for the defendants to say that the buildings were not dangerous and absolutely ruinous. Dilapidated and ruinous did not exactly mean the same thing, and counsel submitted the evidence showed the buildings were dilapidated.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Were the buildings so far dilapidated as to have become unfit for use?]

Mr. Searle: I submit they were so dilapidated. Proceeding, counsel drew attention to the evidence of one of the witnesses for Reed, who calculated that it would be twenty per cent. cheaper to repair the buildings than to have them pulled down. The buildings were like the Irishman's gun—without lock, stock, and barrel. One of the witnesses said he valued the buildings merely from the purchase of the old stuff, but if the buildings were worth anything, surely Reed would have had substantial damages in his claim in re-convention. There was evidence that Reed, drawing large rentals for eight years, had not been near the place, which was inhabited by a low class of people, and as a member of the Council he submitted Reed's conduct was disgraceful. Although the premises were closed on account of the plague, the respondent did not make any efforts to get the keys from the Plague Board in order to put the buildings in repair. He submitted that these buildings were so far dilapidated as to become unfit for use, and that the only defence that Reed could raise was that he was willing to make the repairs and unable to do so.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the Court at present wished to hear counsel for the respondent and cross-appellant on the question of damages.

Mr. Burton said that with due submission to the Court below an inaccurate basis had been taken on the ground of damages, £15 damages was allowed because of the evidence of Winter, about whose valuation it was difficult to see which property he referred to. He said that he thought the ground without the buildings will carry a better price than with the buildings. Because Winter said that the Court had come to the conclusion that no appreciable damage had occurred to the defendant. It was clear that Winter's basis was given on the assumption that the place would be used for store purposes. George Reed himself said that prior to the closing of the buildings he was getting an average rental of £20 a month.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I don't think that is a fair test. The buildings were in a very unsanitary condition. A better test would be what would the property fetch.]

Mr. Burton submitted that a person who committed a wrongful act could not say that by some chance he had improved the property.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is it not a case in which there is no vindictive damages, but rather a case in which we have to deal with the hard facts. The hard facts are these: The ground with the buildings would not be worth more than the ground without the buildings. The difference in value therefore is nil, and therefore no damages are sustained.]

Mr. Burton said he had no doubt the Town Council acted with bona fides in the matter, but still the Court, he thought, would take into consideration the question of the rent. Counsel submitted if the highest sum quoted, £600, was used, the premises could be made fit for the habitation of white people. Counsel quoted a case from "Sedgwick on Damages" to show that a person could not say because he pulled down premises and improved them, that damages could not be claimed. It would be a very dangerous principle to apply the marketable value against the rent, and counsel submitted it should be applied with great strictness and great care. In this case he contended that the basis was not a proper one, and that the defendant was entitled to greater damages.

Mr. Searle said that the Judge-President said he had found that £15 was the invasion of the plaintiff's right, and Justice Sheil said the plaintiff was only entitled to nominal damages. Apparently very little attention was paid to the evidence of the other builders, who no doubt owned rookeries of the same kind. The evidence of the Principal Medical Officer of Health said that in his opinion the premises could not be again used for the same purpose, and counsel thought the plaintiff was extremely fortunate to get £15 damages.

Mr. Burton said if their lordships found that the damages should not be increased it was very questionable whether the defendant should not have been allowed his costs. With regard to the costs of appeal he would say that his client's appeal was in consequence of the action of the other side.

De Villiers, C.J., said that if it should be necessary to hear Mr. Burton on the original appeal, notice would be given to the parties before giving judgment. The Court would wait for the answer from the Registrar as to the correctness of a paragraph on the copy of the record.

Mr. Searle said the defendant had prosecuted the appeal, and was as much an appellant as his clients.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (March 6th).

De Villiers, C.J.: In this case there is an appeal, as well as a cross-appeal, against a judgment of the Eastern Districts Court. The question which arises on the appeal is whether the plaintiffs, the Town Council of Port Elizabeth, were justified in demolishing certain buildings belonging to the defendant, and known as the Upper Red Barracks. The question which arises on the cross-appeal is whether, assuming that the plaintiffs were not justified in pulling down the buildings, the Court below applied the proper measure of damages for the injury in awarding to the defendant only the sum of £15 as damages. The decision of the first question must, to a great extent, depend upon the construction of the 37th to 39th Municipal Regulations of Port Elizabeth. The regulations are as follow: "37. Where a building or structure is considered by the Town Council to be ruinous, or so far dilapidated as thereby to have become, and to be, unfit for use or occupation, or is from neglect or otherwise, in a structural condition prejudicial to the property in, or to the inhabitants of the neighbourhood, the Town Council may issue an order requiring the owner, agent, or occupier of such building or structure referred to as a neglected building, to take down, or repair, or rebuild the neglected structure, or any part thereof, or to fence in the ground on which it stands, or any part thereof, or otherwise to put the said building or structure, or any part thereof, in a state of repair or good condition, to the satisfaction of the Town Council, within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the Town Council. If the order is not obeyed, the Superintendent of Works or other duly-authorized officer may, with all convenient speed, enter upon the neglected structure or such ground as aforesaid, and execute the order. 38. Where the order directs the taking down of a neglected building or structure, or any part thereof, the Town Council may, in the execution of the order, direct the removal of the materials to a convenient place. 39. The Town Council may recover from the owner of such neglected building or structure all costs and expenses in connection therewith in like manner as if the same were a penalty imposed by these regulations." It was under these regulations that the Council ordered the buildings to be demolished, and claimed from the defendant the cost incurred in so doing. Due notice was given to the defendant of every step intended to be taken by the Council, and although he protested against such steps being taken, he never applied to the Courts for an interdict restraining the Council from taking action. It is unnecessary for the purpose of the appeal to recite the different proceedings taken by the Council in the matter. It appears that for the greater part of the time during which the disputes were occurring, there was a kind of dual control in Port Elizabeth in respect of the buildings of the town. The plague having broken out, a Plague Board was established, and on the 16th of September, 1901, the chairman of that Board gave notice to the defendant's agent prohibiting the use or habitation of the dwelling-houses in question. On the occupiers vacating the premises, the secretary of the Board obtained and kept possession of the keys thereof. On the 5th of February, 1902, the Town Council passed a resolution giving the defendant two months to put his premises in a fit state to be inhabited, subject to the approval of the Municipal Health Officer and Town Engineer. In pursuance of this resolution, the defendant obtained specifications from competent contractors for carrying out the required work. On the 17th of February, 1902, the contractors wrote to the secretary of the Plague Board asking for the keys of the buildings, so as to enable the defendant to comply with the decision of the Municipal Council, but the answer was that it would be necessary for the defendant himself to communicate with the Board. This was a most extraordinary answer to give, but the Town Council was not responsible for it. The defendant also demanded the keys from the Council, but, as the keys were not in the possession of the Council, the demand was not complied with. It is clear from the evidence of the secretary of the Plague Board that the Board was determined that the repairs should not be effected to the premises. It is equally clear that the premises were not past repair, and that with the proposed expenditure they might have been placed in a fairly habitable condition.

The repairs were not, however, effected, and on the 31st of March, 1903, a notice was served by the Town Clerk on the defendant calling upon him to demolish the structures, and giving him notice that unless they were removed before the 8th of April the Council would cause their demolition, and hold him responsible for the costs. He protested against such action, but the work of demolition was proceeded with, and the present suit was instituted to recover the cost thereof. The Court below held that the buildings could not fairly and reasonably be said to have been ruinous or so far dilapidated as to bring them within the meaning of section 37 of the Municipal regulations. In this view I entirely concur. The regulation constitutes a most serious infringement of the rights of property, and should not be extended by one jot or tittle beyond its legitimate scope. The buildings were certainly not ruinous, nor were they in a structural condition prejudicial to the property in or the inhabitants of the neighbourhood. They were somewhat dilapidated, but the dilapidation was of such a nature that with the expenditure of about £300—an amount which the defendant was ready and willing to expend if the Plague Board would give him the keys—the buildings would have been rendered perfectly fit for use and occupation from a sanitary point of view. From the purely structural point of view the buildings were not in any way dangerous either to those inhabiting them or to neighbours or passers-by. They were consequently not, in the words of the section, "ruinous or so far dilapidated as thereby to have become, and to be, unfit for use or occupation." The Town Council therefore was not entitled to recover the costs incurred in the demolition. The next question is whether the sum of £15 awarded to the defendant is a sufficient compensation for the injury sustained by him. This is clearly not a case in which anything like exemplary or vindictive damages would have been appropriate. The plague had broken out in the town, and the Council owed a duty to the public to leave no stone unturned to check the ravages of the disease. Its duties under the section were quasi-judicial, and full notice was given to the defendant of every step proposed to be taken in the performance of those duties. The defendant, on the other hand, was an exceedingly neglectful landlord, and admittedly allowed other premises of his to fall into such a dilapidated condition as to be past repair, and for the cost of the demolition of these premises the Council obtained judgment in the Court below for the sum of £10. The premises now in question were certainly in a very unsanitary condition, and if the Council erred in considering that this was a sufficient ground for ordering their demolition it acted in perfect good faith, and with a sole view to the interests of the public of Port Elizabeth. If there had been bad faith on the part of the Council or indignity to the person of the defendant or any invasion of the personal rights, the Court would have been justified, according to the decision in De Villiers v. Van Zyl (Foord's Rep. 77), to take such circumstances into consideration for the purpose of assessing the compensation payable to the defendant. In the absence, however, of any circumstances of aggravation, the criterion should, in my opinion, be the diminution in the value of the land in consequence of the injury complained of. In the case first cited I am reported to have said: "In an action of trespass without any circumstances of aggravation, the plaintiff is no doubt entitled only to recover for his actual injury in respect of the trespass itself. It is clear also from Voet's remarks in the title in the Aquilian law (9, 2, 6) that in assessing the damnum injuria datum it is the actual depreciation in the value of the thing injured, and not the sentimental value attached to it by the owner, which should be primarily considered. The English cases which I have consulted are not quite reconcilable with each other, but according to Mayne on Damages (p. 430), "where the defendant has knocked down the plaintiff's house, built upon his land which is on lease, the proper measure is the amount by which the selling price of the premises would be reduced by the wrongful act." He cites the case of Hoskyns v. Phillips (3 Excheq. 182), where Parke, J., delivering the judgment of the Court of Exchequer, said: "The proper measure is by how much less the premises would sell in consequence of the wrongful act of the defendant." In the present case the defendant claims damages under two heads, namely, loss of past rent and the value of the buildings destroyed. In regard to the loss of rent the evidence shows that even if the buildings had not been demolished, the defendant could not have had any rent from them, as the Plague Board kept the keys, and refused him permission to enter or repair the premises. As to the diminution in the value of the land by reason of the demolition of the buildings thereon, it was stated by the defendant's witness, Winter, in his evidence, that the ground without the buildings would, in his opinion, carry a better price than with the buildings. The Court below attached great weight to the evidence of this witness, who was a builder and contractor, with twenty-two years' experience. If once it is established as a fact that the demolition of the buildings has not diminished the selling value of the land, it becomes impossible to hold that, independently of every other consideration, the defendant is entitled to substantial damages for such demolition. The Court below, in the exercise of the functions of a jury, has found the fact to be established. and I am not prepared to say that the finding is contrary to the weight of the evidence. The result is that the appeal, as well as the cross appeal, must be dismissed, and as it would be impossible to separate the costs of appeal from those of the cross-appeal, each party will be ordered to bear its own costs.

AFRICA V. RHENISH MISSIONARY SOCIETY. (1905. Feb. 27th.)

Mission station — Rules — Ejectment.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Tulbagh, in an action in which the Rhenish Missionary Society sued for the recovery of rent from the defendant and an order of ejectment. The Magistrate decided in favour of the plaintiff, and gave judgment for the rent claimed with a decree of ejectment on the ground that the defendant had infringed certain rules for the better administration of the society by starting a butcher's shop at the station at Saron. The defendant denied that he ever signed the so-called church laws, or that he knew the witness to his signature. It was contended that these church laws were ultra vires, and that no proper notice was given in accordance with the agreement drawn up between the parties. Dr. Greer (for the appellant) contended that the head of the Missionary Society, the trustee, should have given notice according to the law, and he had no power of substitution. Proceeding, counsel said the administration of the laws as at present were distinctly cruel, and there were instances of cruelty against Mr. Kling. The Rhenish Missionary Society really to some extent held in trust for the natives, and the land was bought by the money people who subscribed for the good of the natives and by the natives themselves, of whom the appellant was one. There was evidence that the appellant was able to write his name, and that was a strong presumption that he never put a mark on the paper to his name. The two principal witnesses for the plaintiff were not produced in court, and counsel submitted on the evidence that that contract was not such as would bind the defendant. All that the defendant sought for was a proper administration of the law, and if there was to be an ejectment that it should be according to the law. A tender had been made for the premises from which the defendant was ejected to pay anything up to £25 on arbitration by two independent men, but as the defendant had paid £50 for the raw material the offer was not accepted.

Mr. Burton (for the respondents), on an intimation from the Court, directed his argument towards a refutation of cruelty attributed to Mr. Kling. When the case came before the Court, not a single instance was forthcoming of tyranny. The administration had become more difficult of recent years, owing to the refractory conduct of the natives since the war. The 50s. which had been obtained as damages in the Court below he would not press for, and on the tender, his clients were willing to go as far as £25 for the premises.

Maasdorp, J.: There is the clearest evidence that the notice to quit was given by Mr. Kling, who was regarded by the natives as acting on behalf of the trustees of this property, and if the question of his agency had been raised, the conduct of the parties would have been such as to show that they had treated him throughout as the agent, and at no time had questioned his authority. The plaintiff could have summarily ejected the defendant after giving a month's notice, but he proved by his conduct that he had no wish to act arbitrarily, and only took action after having been persistently defied by the defendant. Some reflections had been made on Mr. Kling's treatment, but he thought a great deal of consideration had been shown to the defendant. There was not a tittle of evidence of any injustice towards the defendant. The appeal will be dismissed, with costs, the claim as to the damages for 50s. will be expunged, and the respondents be ordered to pay £25, the value of the property, upon possession being given, with costs of the appeal.

Hopley, J., concurred.

[Appellant's Attorney: W. G. Coulton; Respondents' Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn.]

DAVIDSON V. WERDMULLER.

Mr. Alexander was for the appellant, and there was no appearance for the respondent. The appeal was from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Colesberg, in which he upheld an exception to the summons that a claim for £7 for board and lodging, without any specified account, was vague and embarrassing in law, after he went into the merits of the case. The respondent admitted his debt, and had since paid the £7, and counsel now appealed on the ground of costs.

Maasdorp, J., said the appeal would be allowed, with costs in both Courts.

Mr. Justice Hopley, J., concurred.

GENERAL MOTION.

Ex parte WASSENBERG.

Mr. Rowson moved as a matter of urgency for an order of Court for the payment of alimony to the applicant, in order that she might prosecute an action against her husband, to whom she was married in community of property, for judicial separation, on the ground of his violent temper and intemperance.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan put in the affidavit of the respondent, which set out that the plaintiff had left him in January last, taking with her jewellery to the value of £100, household goods, valued at £10, and £10 in money. The plaintiff had received a letter of demand to hand over one of his boarding-houses in Bree-street, and the matter could be settled by consent. Affidavits were put in by both sides; on the one hand, there were accusations of cruelty, the defendant, it being alleged, going so far as to threaten the plaintiff, if she did not get out of the house, he would give her one of the best "doings" she ever got in her life, and on the other hand, the allegations were strenuously denied.

Maasdorp, J., said under the circumstances of this case the Court ought to make the usual order. The respondent would be ordered to pay to the applicant's attorneys £30 forthwith towards the suit, and £6 a month as alimony, the first payment to be made on the 7th of next month.

appointed to realise the estate and distribute the proceeds in accordance with the legal order of preference in insolvency. The Court having appointed the applicants as receivers in terms of the consent paper, the receivers proceeded to realise the assets. The respondents, who, as creditors, had signed the consent paper, proved their claim, but refused to place a value on certain securities which they held for their debt in terms of the 30th section of the Insolvent Ordinance.

Held, that the applicants were entitled to insist upon a value being placed on the security.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., on behalf of the Receivers of the Grand Junction Railways, presented the first report for confirmation. Mr. W. P. Buchanan appeared to oppose certain recommendations on behalf of the London and Westminster Bank, and Dr. Rainsford opposed other matters on behalf of creditors in Messrs. Reunert, Von Laer and Co.

Mr. Schreiner, in presenting the report, mentioned in the first instance the recommendation that Mr. Hills, who was appointed receiver of the partnership estate in England, and who bore the brunt of the work in carrying through the actions against the Government, should be paid for his trouble and out-of-pocket expenses £3,200. The report had lain for inspection for the usual period, and the only opposition came from his learned friend's clients. Most of the debentures were held by the two banks—the A.B.C. and the London and Westminster Bank—the latter of which was represented. Both banks lodged appeals against the judgment of the Supreme Court that the debentures in the limited company were not preferent in the estate. The receivers had now drawn up a recommendation to pay the concurrent creditors 5s. in the £.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What will the ultimate result be? Will the company be solvent?]

There is no chance of our paying out 20s. in the £. Proceeding, counsel said that since the order several creditors had come in and accepted the position. Up to the present claims amounting to £475,793 7s. 2d. had been filed. It had in many instances been extremely difficult to reconcile the accounts rendered with the partnership books, and of the total claims the receivers were only able to admit £93,440 14s. There was a sum of £162,551 19s.

A provisional order of sequestration having been made against a partnership, the creditors and partners signed a consent paper that the sequestration should be discharged and that receivers should be

The result is that the appeal, as well as the cross appeal, must be dismissed, and as it would be impossible to separate the costs of appeal from those of the cross-appeal, each party will be ordered to bear its own costs.

AFRICA V. RHENISH MISSIONARY SOCIETY. (1905. Feb. 27th.)

Mission station — Rules — Ejectionment.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Tulbagh, in an action in which the Rhenish Missionary Society sued for the recovery of rent from the defendant and an order of ejectionment. The Magistrate decided in favour of the plaintiff, and gave judgment for the rent claimed with a decree of ejectionment on the ground that the defendant had infringed certain rules for the better administration of the society by starting a butcher's shop at the station at Saron. The defendant denied that he ever signed the so-called church laws, or that he knew the witness to his signature. It was contended that these church laws were ultra vires, and that no proper notice was given in accordance with the agreement drawn up between the parties. Dr. Greer (for the appellant) contended that the head of the Missionary Society, the trustee, should have given notice according to the law, and he had no power of substitution. Proceeding, counsel said the administration of the laws as at present were distinctly cruel, and there were instances of cruelty against Mr. Kling. The Rhenish Missionary Society really to some extent held in trust for the natives, and the land was bought by the money people who subscribed for the good of the natives and by the natives themselves, of whom the appellant was one. There was evidence that the appellant was able to write his name, and that was a strong presumption that he never put a mark on the paper to his name. The two principal witnesses for the plaintiff were not produced in court, and counsel submitted on the evidence that that contract was not such as would bind the defendant. All that the defendant sought for was a proper administration of the law, and if there was to be an ejectionment that it should be according to the law. A tender had been made for the premises from which the defendant was ejected to pay anything up to £25 on arbitration by two independent men, but as the defendant had paid £50 for the raw material the offer was not accepted.

Mr. Burton (for the respondents), on an intimation from the Court, directed his argument towards a refutation of cruelty attributed to Mr. Kling. When the case came before the Court, not a single instance was forthcoming of tyranny. The administration had become more difficult of recent years, owing to the refractory conduct of the natives since the war. The 50s. which had been obtained as damages in the Court below he would not press for, and on the tender, his clients were willing to go as far as £25 for the premises.

Maasdorp, J.: There is the clearest evidence that the notice to quit was given by Mr. Kling, who was regarded by the natives as acting on behalf of the trustees of this property, and if the question of his agency had been raised, the conduct of the parties would have been such as to show that they had treated him throughout as the agent, and at no time had questioned his authority. The plaintiff could have summarily ejected the defendant after giving a month's notice, but he proved by his conduct that he had no wish to act arbitrarily, and only took action after having been persistently defied by the defendant. Some reflections had been made on Mr. Kling's treatment, but he thought a great deal of consideration had been shown to the defendant. There was not a title of evidence of any injustice towards the defendant. The appeal will be dismissed, with costs, the claim as to the damages for 50s. will be expunged, and the respondents be ordered to pay £25, the value of the property, upon possession being given, with costs of the appeal.

Hopley, J., concurred.

DAVIDSON V. WERDMULLER.

Mr. Alexander was for the appellant, and there was no appearance for the respondent. The appeal was from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Colesberg, in which he upheld an exception to the summons that a claim for £7 for board and lodging, without any specified account, was vague and embarrassing in law, after he went into the merits of the case. The respondent admitted his debt, and had since paid the £7, and counsel now appealed on the ground of costs.

Maasdorp, J., said the appeal would be allowed, with costs in both Courts.

Mr. Justice Hopley, J., concurred.

GENERAL MOTION.

Ex parte WASSENBERG.

Mr. Rowson moved as a matter of urgency for an order of Court for the payment of alimony to the applicant, in order that she might prosecute an action against her husband, to whom she was married in community of property, for judicial separation, on the ground of his violent temper and intemperance.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan put in the affidavit of the respondent, which set out that the plaintiff had left him in January last, taking with her jewellery to the value of £100, household goods, valued at £10, and £10 in money. In re GRAND JUNCTION (1905.

Partnership — Receiver — Distribution of assets.

A provisional order of sequestration having been made against a partnership, the creditors and partners signed a consent paper that the sequestration should be discharged and that receivers should be

10d. available for distribution. It was proposed to pay 5s. in the £ to undisputed claimants, and that would absorb £24,763 13s. 4d. and leave £137,788 6s. 6d. in hand, which would be more than sufficient to pay a like dividend upon all claims at present in dispute, including the whole of the limited company's debenture issue, plus interest to the date of the receivers' appointment. If the London and Westminster Bank and the trustees for the debenture-holders proved successful in their appeal against the recent judgment of the Supreme Court, and the debenture-holders or the greater part of them be given a right to rank as preferent creditors on the partnership estate, the receivers would not have sufficient funds available to meet these preferent claims. The appellants had not gone on with the appeal, and counsel thought they should not be allowed to hang up the administration in a permanent way.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Would there be sufficient to pay out a dividend on the debentures?]

Mr. Schreiner: Yes, pursuant to your lordship's order. It was felt that the appellants should be put on terms as to the prosecution of the appeal. They had not yet taken the papers away, while the unhappy creditors were kept out of their dividends. Counsel then proceeded to discuss the possibility of getting security from the creditors in case the appeal was allowed, and in reply to his lordship, said there was no chance of what they had in hand meeting the claims of all of the debenture-holders. The receivers did not think themselves justified in putting aside an amount to meet the claims of the London and Westminster Bank.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The position is most unfortunate. It may take two years before the appeal is heard.]

Mr. Schreiner then went on to mention the different items on which the receivers asked the instructions of the Supreme Court. They were as follows: Witnesses' expenses in the case of Hills v. The Colonial Government, £201 15s. 9d., as preferent; Mr. Hills's expenses, £3,200; Mr. Tonkin's salary, £587 10s. With regard to the disputed claims, counsel asked the Court to fix a time to bring the matters to some finality, and three months was suggested. On the question of interest, it was suggested that the same procedure should be adopted as in insolvency, and as regards Messrs. John Walker and Son's claims and their objections, it was also asked that a period should be fixed by the Court for presentation. Then came the matter upon which his learned friend, Dr. Rainsford, appeared, that of the debentures held as security; and it was proposed by the receivers to follow the usual course in insolvency, and call upon these people who held debentures of the limited company as security for their claims to place a value on their securities. The receivers' fees was another matter upon which the Court was asked for instruction.

Dr. Rainsford put in the affidavit of a partner in the firm of Messrs. Reunert, Von Laer and Co., which set out that the firm were creditors to the extent of £2,654 8s. 4d. and interest, for which they held thirty debentures of £100 each as security. Counsel submitted that the receivers were not entitled as such to call upon debenture holders to place a value upon their security, and he respectfully objected to such power being given to them.

Mr. Schreiner put in an answering affidavit by Mr. E. R. Syfret, one of the official receivers, which set out that Messrs. Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton, on behalf of the creditors they represented, including Messrs. Reunert, Von Laer and Co., signed a consent paper.

Dr. Rainsford having been heard in argument,

Mr. Schreiner having been heard in reply,

De Villiers, C.J.: I consider it a great pity that the Court was ever induced to act upon the consent paper. Most persons interested in this estate were no doubt parties to that consent paper, but the result of these proceedings has been to show that it was a most anolamous proceeding to appoint receivers to an estate which is practically insolvent. I am quite sure that a great deal of trouble and inconvenience would have been avoided if the original sequestration had gone through, and the estate administered as an insolvent estate. The Court, of course, could not know all the facts of the case when everyone apparently interested in the matter came forward with a consent. The Court was induced to act upon the consent, but I am quite satisfied, had everything been known then which has since appeared, the order would not have been made. But the order stands, and the best must now be made of it. The Court must endeavour now as nearly as possible to administer this estate as if the sequestration had actually been carried out, and in that view the preferent claim of £1,871 16s. 6d., which is the first item to be decided, should be allowed. It is clear that nobody could in the result be prejudiced by the admission of that claim which is clearly of a preferent nature for rent and expenses of attachment, etc. The second question to be decided is whether the receivers are to be allowed to pay out a dividend of 5s. in the £1 to the creditors. That is a matter entirely for the receivers to decide upon. If they have the money they will have to pay it out, but the question is, have they money in hand to the extent of available assets for the payment of the dividend. It appears to me that so long as the appeal case of the London and Westminster Bank, is undecided, it is impossible to say that money available is in the hands of the receivers to pay out the creditors. It is admitted, if the London and Westminster Bank should succeed in the appeal, that the amount of the preferent claims would practically exhaust the amount now proposed to be paid to the creditors. I am not prepared to take upon myself the responsibility of authorising the receivers to pay out this money until the appeal has been decided. I am quite prepared to express a strong opinion that it is the duty of the bank to proceed with all convenient speed. It goes without saying that they should do so. I do not know that any order to that effect would have any practical effect in the present case, and, therefore, I content myself at present with the expression of opinion to that effect that it is the duty of the bank to lose no time in prosecuting their appeal for the purpose of meeting this very great inconvenience to which the creditors of this company are subjected. The receivers could, of course, pay out the money upon their own responsibility, but they would have to find security, as required by the 15th section of the Charter of Justice, and then it would be competent for them to pay out the 5s. in the £ to the creditors. If this appeal should be allowed, of course, the persons giving security will then in some way or other have to satisfy the London and Westminster Bank for the amount of their security. More than that I cannot say upon this point. The next question upon which my opinion is asked is the question of the witness's expenses. The information upon that point is not sufficient to justify me in ordering that these witnesses' expenses shall form part of the costs of administration. It may well be at a further stage that it may be shown that the money has been legally and fairly expended by Mr. Hills, and it will then be dealt with in the same way as I propose to deal with the next item; but at present it is not perfectly clear to me that the Court would be justified in ordering the expenses of these witnesses to be treated as part of the costs of administration. With regard to Mr. Hill's expenses, that appears to be a perfectly legitimate claim. The Court is aware of the time and trouble Mr. Hill has expended in safeguarding the interests of this company, and what he has done has been entirely for the benefit of the administration after the matter had been put into the hands of the receivers, and for the trouble which he has taken in the matter, it appears to me he is entitled to payment of moneys expended by him on behalf of the estate. The Court will therefore make an order as prayed for £3,200, subject to the production of vouchers. As to Mr. Tonkin's salary that stands on a similar footing. It was earned by him for the benefit of the administration, and the Court will allow the £587 as part of the costs of administration. The next question is as to the period to be fixed. Well, in my opinion, some period should be fixed, but the time proposed is certainly too short. I think a full twelve months ought to be allowed, and I have less hesitation in allowing that period, seeing that it seems extremely improbable that any portion of the money will be paid out within that period. The Court will therefore fix the period proposed in section 24 of the report, to make the period twelve instead of three months from the 1st January, 1905. The Court will fix a similar period, namely, twelve months, until 31st December, 1905, in respect of the matters in section 26 and 27 of the report. In regard to Mr. Walker's claim, and the objections, of course a decree of silence could have been applied for; but I am not sure if the full period of twelve months would not elapse before the decree would be made. Walker would have to be served by citation, and a very long period would elapse before the decree of perpetual silence would be made. I consider, under all the circumstances, a longer period should be allowed, so as to enable everyone interested to bring his claim. Then as to the interest, the Court will fix the rate of interest in terms of section 25 at 6 per cent. to the 14th November, 1903, and after that period no interest will be allowed. Section 28 deals with the debentures held as securities, and that deals with Dr. Rainsford's objection on behalf of Messrs. Reunert, Von Laer and Co. In my opinion, that objection cannot be sustained. It was clear from the evidence they were parties to the consent paper, on which the order of Court was made, and part of their consent was to this effect: "The receivers to have the power to sell and realise any further assets, including movable and immovable property, and the railway material attached, etc. The said receivers to frame a distribution account of all money, and to distribute the said money in accordance with the legal order of preference in insolvency." In order to do that, it is necessary that every person having a security who claims should put a value on that security. I do not see that it is any hardship on these creditors that they should place a value on these securities, and that part of the receiver's report which relates to the securities should, in my opinion, be acceded to. The Court will therefore make an order in terms of section 28. The Court will also allow the receivers' fees at the rate of 2½ per cent. As to the costs of the application, they will be paid by the Receivers, except the costs of Messrs. Reunert, Von Laer and Co., which will be paid by the latter.

with interest a tempore morae and costs, defendant having been barred from pleading.

Dr. Greer drew his lordship's attention to the fact that an application appeared in the motion list by the defendant, in which he sought to have the bar removed.

Hopley, J., said that he would first hear the motion for removal of bar.

Dr. Greer read an affidavit by defendant's attorney (Mr. A. R. O'Brien), who stated that the plea was actually filed within the period of 24 hours allowed by plaintiffs. He believed that defendant had a good defence to the claim.

Mr. Bisset read an answering affidavit by a clerk in the employ of plaintiffs' attorneys (Messrs. Reid and Nephew), who said that the plea was not filed within the period allowed. A further affidavit by Mr. McDonald, accountant of the plaintiff firm, said that he believed the defendant had not a good defence to the claim, and that he was simply trying to gain time.

Dr. Greer submitted that the notice of bar was improperly set down by plaintiffs' attorneys. Defendant believed that he had a solid ground of defence. He admitted the debt, but said there was an agreement that he should not be called upon to pay until the building had been completed, and a mortgage for £1,000 had been arranged.

He read an affidavit by Mr. A. W. Steer, plaintiff's attorney, who stated that the delay had been caused through negotiations for a settlement. He asked for judgment in terms of prayer (b) for £50, and also for £25, and interest, in terms of note, and costs of suit.

Rule nisi granted, calling upon the respondent and his alleged debtors to show cause, on the 15th April, why the said monies should not be attached, and applied in satisfaction of the judgment obtained by applicant against the respondent, and further why they should not, as the various amounts fall due, be handed to the High Sheriff or his lawful deputy, why the rule should not operate

RSTATE WILLIAMSON V. BERGL.

Mr. Upington moved on behalf of the trustees in the insolvent estate Williamson to have expunged a certain proof of debt for £5,077 8s. 11d., in the record of proceedings, at a meeting of creditors, before the R.M. of East London. Mr. Gardiner was for the respondent. Alexander Bergl.

The affidavit of Andrew Williamson, stated that the account filed by Henry George Drake, or Bergl's attorney, as proof of debt for £5,077 8s. 11d., was incorrect, and that the amounts referred to in annexure (b) were incorrectly debited to him (Williamson). This annexure set forth a liability upon certain promissory notes, and further stated that the respondent had security as follows: 1,000 shares Buffalo Supply and Cold Storage Company, at £1; 2,200 Orange Diamond shares at 15s.; a racehorse called Graspan, valued at £500; and two horses, valued at £50. He said that the Buffalo Company should be debited with £700 of this amount, and denied that his estate was liable for these amounts. Deponent also said that Graspan was sold by him to Bergl for £2,000, but that he agreed to refund £500 to Bergl if the horse did not realise more than £1,500. He submitted that for the horse he should be credited with £1,500, and not £500. He added that the annexure marked "C" was the correct account. That account, after deducting from the proof of debt £700 0s. 5d., that he said was owing by the Buffalo Company, and bringing up the securities at their true value, showed a balance in favour of insolvent's estate. Mr. Upington read a further affidavit by Mr. Shaun of Graham's Town (one of the trustees), who said that on April 18, 1904, the Orange Diamond shares were selling at 22s. each, and he notified to Bergl his election to take assignment of the shares, seeing that Bergl bought them up at 15s. He asked for delivery to Simkins and Adams, brokers, but the said shares had not been delivered. Counsel added that all the indebtedness was in respect of promissory notes to Bergl, except one in favour of one Tickey, which was now held by Bergl, he alleged. The total amount of debts brought up was £14,716 9s. 7d., against which £9,639 0s. 8d. was credited, leaving a balance of £5,077 8s. 11d., which Bergl alleged was partly secured by the shares and racehorse. Mr. Upington added that he thought it would be very difficult for the Court to decide this matter on motion, as affidavits had been filed by the other side, contradicting several of the statements in applicant's affidavits.

Mr. Gardiner said that respondent was very much in the hands of the Court. He would be glad if he could get a decision on motion on account of the expense of a trial.

Hopley J., said he would hear the affidavit of Mr. Bergl.

Mr. Gardiner then read Mr. Bergl's affidavit. Deponent said he filed proof of debt against the insolvent estate in October, 1903, when the Orange shares were selling at or about 15s. Up to the 18th April, 1904, he received no notice from the trustees, asking for the assignment of the shares. On the 18th April the shares were selling at 19s. 6d. In a letter he sent to the trustees on the 19th April he refused to agree to the course the trustees wished him to adopt, and stated that he required a true valuation to be made, and refused to hand over any part of his security. The proof of debt as annexed was, he declared, correct, the Buffalo Company was not liable, but the estate Williamson was liable for the same. He agreed to lend to Williamson £3,000, on condition of security being given in shares in the Buffalo Company. Without his knowledge, the sum of £3,950 was advanced by his manager. He denied that he bought the racehorse Graspan, and said it was taken by his manager as security, and kept at Williamson's expense. It was raced on various occasions, but only once with success, winning about £20. The horse was subsequently sold in Cape Town for £125. As to the Buffalo shares, these were not sold to Williamson, but were deposited by him with the manager as security for moneys advanced by deponent.

Hopley, J., said that with such contradictory statements on the affidavits it was impossible to decide the matter on motion. The parties must proceed by action, costs to abide the result.

Ex parte SMITH.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, on behalf of the petitioner, widow of Johan Carel Smith, for leave to temporarily break lease of occupation of Milton House, Sea Point, and for the executors to continue payment of £22 a month as provided by the will during a period of six months. Mrs. Smith proposed, on account of ill-health, to pay a visit to England.

Mr. Struben, on behalf of the executors, consented to the application.

Order granted as prayed.

SEGAL V. ESTATE FINKELSTEIN BROS. AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for defendants in the action), moved for the removal of trial to the next Circuit Court at George.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers, for respondent (plaintiff in the action), read an affidavit by his attorney, which stated that it would be more advantageous if the case were removed to the Oudtshoorn Circuit Court.

Hopley, J., ordered the cause to be removed for trial at the next Circuit Court, at George, costs to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte TROLLIP.

Mr. Uppington moved for petitioner, an attorney of this Court, for leave to cede certain articles of clerkship to Mr. James B. Cleghorn, an attorney of this Court, during the absence from the Colony of petitioner for a period of six months, such articles to be re-ceded to petitioner on his return.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan, on behalf of the Incorporated Law Society, consented to the application.

Order granted as prayed.

TRILL AND OTHERS V. CLAREMONT MUNICIPALITY.

This was an application upon notice of motion for an interdict to restrain defendants from discharging dirty water, other than stormwater, into the Keurboom River, so as to cause a nuisance. Mr. Schreiner, K.C., was for the applicants; Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the respondent Council.

Mr. Schreiner, in answer to His Lordship, said that the case originally came before Mr. Justice Buchanan in June last.

Hopley, J., said he thought it would be better if the present application came before Mr. Justice Buchanan.

The matter was, by consent, ordered to stand over.

Ex parte THE DIRECTORS CAPE TOWN BUFFALO CLUB.

Mr. Pyemont moved for an order for the winding-up of the Buffalo Club, Cape Town, and the appointment of liquidators. Petitioners said that they held a majority of the shares. The club had proved an unworkable institution, and during the past two years had resulted in a loss of £712 3s. 5d.

Winding-up order granted, Mr. T. H. Hazell to be liquidator, with the usual powers.

Ex parte CAMERON.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to issue certified copy of certain mortgage bond, granted by the churchwardens of St. James's, Umtata, for £480 in favour of the petitioner. All trace of the bond had been lost.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte EXECUTRIX DATIVE ESTATE CAMPBELL.

Mr. Alexander moved for an order authorising the Master to pay out certain money accruing to her from the estate of applicant's late minor child. The Master's report was favourable.

Order granted in terms of Master's report.

MARTIN V. MARTIN.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the removal of trial to the next Circuit Court at Mossel Bay. Respondents' attorneys, it was stated, consented.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte COOK.

Mr. Sutton moved on behalf of petitioner, as trustee under ante-nuptial contract, for leave to raise a loan of £300 on security of surrender value, of certain policy of life insurance. The applicant (one Paradise) was the trustee of Mrs. Cook under a certain ante-nuptial contract.

Hopley, J., said that this seemed to be the only thing that could be done for the unfortunate people, and an order would be granted as prayed.

Ex parte ESTATE HARTEL.

Mr. Van Zyl moved, on behalf of petitioner, the executrix testamentary, for leave to raise a mortgage bond for £700 upon certain ground at Port Elizabeth. The property had borne a bond for £650, but this had now been called up.

Order granted as prayed.

ESTATE CARY V. CARY.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for leave to purge default of plea.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan said that the plaintiffs applied for judgment, under Rule 329d, for several sums of money. They were, however, prepared to consent to respondent being purged from default on condition that he paid the costs up to the present. Cary left the district of Cradock, and they did not know what his movements were to be, but he afterwards returned.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers said the applicant thought that costs should be paid by the plaintiffs.

After hearing the affidavits and counsel in arguments on the facts.

Hopley, J., said he thought the plaintiffs had been too precipitate in barring the defendant, and that they were as much responsible as defendant for any wasted costs. Leave would be granted to purge default, costs to abide the result of the trial.

CLOETE V. DIEPRAEM.

Mr. Burton moved on behalf of Gideon Stephanus Cloete, an attorney, of Lady Grey, in the district of Aliwal North, for an order requiring Mrs. Diepraem, of the Orange River Colony, to deliver up to applicant certain promissory notes, or to make an affidavit if such notes were lost, and to grant applicant an indemnity. Respondent did not appear.

Hopley, J., ordered that respondent return the four promissory notes to the applicant upon payment to her of the balance of £45 12s., still owing, with interest, or in case they have been lost that she shall give to the applicant an indemnity in the form contained in an annexure attached to applicant's affidavit of the 17th November, 1904; that the said sum of £45 12s., with interest, may be retained by applicant, and set off against the costs of this application, and that only the balance thereof, if any, need be tendered to respondent.

He added that he thought there was a disgraceful mass of papers filed in this case, and he hoped the Taxing Master would keep this in mind when the question of costs came before him. There seemed to be an altogether unnecessary accumulation of papers.

Ex parte WILSON.

Mr. Gutsche moved on behalf of petitioner, as executrix testamentary, in the estate of her husband, for leave to raise £1,000 upon certain landed property.

Order granted, subject to an account being filed with the Master on maturity of the promissory note in the estate for £1,300, the mortgage bond to be paid off as soon as possible after the amount of the promissory note has been paid off.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

ARGUMENT ON EXCEPTIONS.

HEYDENRYCH V. FRAME. { 1905.
Mar. 1st.

Plea—Vague and embarrassing—
Exception.

It is a good exception to the form of a plea, that it does not confess or avoid material facts alleged in the declaration, and is otherwise vague and embarrassing.

This was an argument, upon exceptions taken by the plaintiff, Benjamin G. Heydenrych, financier, Observatory-road, to the plea of the defendant, Alexander Kay Frame, of Wynberg.

The declaration set out that, on the 16th February, 1896, the parties entered into a deed of lease, whereby the plaintiff rented to the defendant certain furniture for three months, at a rental of £3 3s. a month. Under the said lease, the defendant was also to have an option, at the expiration of the lease, of purchasing the said furniture for £65 5s. The defendant had possession of the furniture, and had paid to the plaintiff £6 6s. as and for two months' rental thereof. At the expiration of the lease the defendant did not exercise his option of purchase, but requested the plaintiff to allow him to retain the use of the said furniture, upon the terms set out in the lease. This the plaintiff agreed to. The defendant had retained possession, and had since had use of the furniture. Plaintiff claimed £3 3s., being one month's rent of the furniture under the lease, and £295, being rent that subsequently accrued.

The defendant filed a plea, which was excepted to by the plaintiff.

Mr. Burton was for the plaintiff and excipient; Mr. McGregor was for the defendant and respondent.

Mr. Burton: The plea is vague and ambiguous. It affords no indication as to what the line of defence will be.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It seems to me that the defence is, that this money was a loan, and that you can only claim the interest on the rent.]

[Mr. McGregor: Our other defence is, that there was a settlement, save as to some £50.]

There was no tender of the £50. Then as to paragraph 6, defendant admits that he has made monthly payments, but puts us to the proof that he has not paid more than £6. He also asks us to prove that he has not exercised the option of purchase. If he did exercise this option, his subsequent defence that the goods were only lent to him is wholly inconsistent.

Mr. McGregor: There is a very important allegation in paragraph 2 of the plea. That gives a new complexion to the case. Respondent's contention is that this money was a loan and that the furniture was pledged without delivery. But in all such transactions the Court will look rather to the essence of the transaction than to the actual language employed by the parties Lippert v. Aries (1 Juta, 187). We contend that the transaction was a loan. Moreover sections 7 and 8 of the plea clearly set up a good defence. In section 8 we plead that in March, 1896, there was a full settlement.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But you do not tender anything. What do you say to section 6?]

Section 6 alleges that only £6 was paid.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You ask the exceptor to prove a negative?]

Some latitude must be allowed where a plaintiff lies by till a few days before the period of prescription. We might also have pleaded insolvency. Section 9 more particularly denies any agreement as to lease, and avers that there was simply a loan. The plaintiff claims on a lease. We deny the lease, but we admit a loan. But on this loan only £50 could be claimed; since the interest may not exceed the principal. As to our not having made a tender—that can affect only the question of costs. Here the question is not: "Are the pleadings artistically drawn, but do they disclose the real points at issue?" The defence is necessarily of an unusual character, because the whole proceeding is unusual. The exceptor does not say which paragraphs of the plea should be struck out.

Mr. Burton was not called upon in reply.

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an action for certain furniture alleged to have been let by the plaintiff to the defendant. The declaration makes two important affirmations, viz., that the defendant duly received possession of the said furniture, in terms of the said lease, and had paid to the plaintiff £6 6s. as and for two months' rent. At the expiration of the said lease, the defendant did not exercise his option of purchasing the said furniture, but requested the plaintiff to allow him to retain the use of the said furniture upon the said terms, as in the said lease contained, to which the plaintiff agreed, and the defendant has retained possession, and has had the use thereof, and is in possession thereof at present. It is an important rule of pleading which is laid down in the Rules of Court (330c) that the defendant in his plea shall admit, deny, or confess, and avoid all the material facts alleged in the declaration of the plaintiff, and shall clearly and concisely state the material facts upon which the defendant relies. Instead of doing that, the defendant, by his plea, first of all, says he admits that he has made monthly payments, but he puts the plaintiff to proof of the allegations that since then no more was paid, and also that he has never exercised any such option of purchase as is alleged. I have never heard of such a plea. The plaintiff makes certain allegations that payments have not been made, and that an option has not been exercised. If the payments have been made and the option exercised these would be facts peculiarly within the defendant's knowledge which he would have to prove, and yet he puts the plaintiff to the proof of the negative. I could have understood such a plea of putting to the proof where the defendant has no personal knowledge of the matter, and is not prepared to admit or deny, but where the defendant is in a position to "admit or deny or confess and avoid," under the Rules of Court he is bound to do so. It is said that the Court has never required any great nicety of pleading. That is, no doubt, true. Still, the Court has required intelligible pleas, pleas which comply with the Rules of Court and pleas from which the parties may know what the defence is. It is impossible to say that this plea does that. The defences are all mixed up in such a manner that it is difficult to know which defence the defendant really relies upon. If there are separate defences each of which goes to the root of the action, then they should be pleaded as separate pleas. One defence is that the defendant has surrendered his estate, and that the furniture has been returned to the defendant's wife. If that is the plea relied upon, it should be relied upon as a separate plea, and not mixed up with the other defences in the way in which it has been. Then there is the defence of a settlement come to in March, 1896, but then, immediately afterwards, notwithstanding that settlement, it is alleged that it was really no rent at all, that there was a sale of furniture, and that that sale was not really a bona fide sale, but intended as a pledge; that it was not really rent that was payable, but interest, and the plaintiff was not entitled to more than mere interest. That is a substantial defence, and, if it were proved, I am inclined to believe that it would be a very good defence. The parties may call the transaction a lease, but if the Court, after going into the whole matter, finds that it was never intended as a lease, but it was really intended as a pledge, the Court would treat it as a pledge. But the misfortune is that this part of the defence is not in any way made perfectly fixed and certain by reason of any tender. If it be true that it was a mere loan, that it should be regarded as interest, and that that is part of the defence, there should be tender of the money. The plea is hopelessly obscure, and I do not know that it could be amended just now, or I would have suggested to the parties to make amendments at once, so as to make it a good plea. But I am bound to allow the exception, with costs, with leave to the defendant to amend his plea, so as not to have the expense of filing a fresh plea.

ESTATE LEWIS V. ESTATE { 1905.
JACKSON. } Mar. 1st.

Will—Construction—Children—
Child in ventre matris.

The testator bequeathed property to some of his children and to his "grandchildren, issue of his daughter by L., her husband."

Held, that the plaintiff, who was a child of the testator's daughter by L., but was born five months and three days after the testator's death, was entitled to share in the bequest.

This was a special case submitted for the decision of the Court by the parties thereto. The parties were: Arthur Fincham Chaplain, in his capacity as curator ad litem of Kathleen Winifred Lewis, a minor; and Richard Court Dent, Alexander David Jackson, and William Francis Marshall, in their capacity as executors testamentary of the estate of the late William Christie Jackson.

The case was stated in the following terms:

1. The plaintiff was on the 24th January, 1905, appointed by this Honourable Court as curator ad litem of Kathleen Winifred Lewis, minor daughter of Frederick William Lewis (who died on or about 17th February, 1904) and of Elizabeth Margaret Lewis (born Jackson), who survives, and is the daughter of the late William Christie Jackson, hereinafter called the testator, who in his lifetime resided at East London, Cape Colony.

2. The defendants are sued as the duly appointed executors testamentary of the estate of the testator, who died on the 18th April, 1900, leaving of full force and effect a will dated 16th January, 1900, with a codicil thereto dated 12th March, 1900. A copy of the said will and codicil is hereto annexed, marked A, and the parties crave leave to have it regarded as inserted herein. They wish to refer particularly to that part of the will relating to the bequest of the landed property.

3. At the time of the execution of the will and of the codicil, and at the death of testator, there were surviving five out of eight children issue of the marriage of Elizabeth Margaret Jackson with her said husband Frederick William Lewis, to wit:—William John Lewis, born 6th June, 1883; Alfred Jackson Lewis, born 21st December, 1884; Alexander Robert Lewis, born 14th January, 1890; Doris Alice Lewis, born 28th March, 1894, who died on 24th July, 1902; Myrtle May Lewis, born 4th May, 1897. While Kathleen Winifred Lewis was born to them on the 21st September, 1900, or five months and three days after the death of testator, and is their youngest child.

4. The defendants have already duly filed three liquidation and distribution accounts in testator's estate with the Master of this Honourable Court, wherein they have included the said Kathleen Winifred Lewis as participating equally with the five abovementioned grandchildren of testator in the bequest of a fifth share of the landed property under the aforesaid will, and, the said accounts having been duly confirmed, have paid her share under such distribution, amounting to £139 14s. 9d. into the Guardian's Fund on her behalf.

The defendants are now ready to file another liquidation and distribution account and to make a further distribution, but doubts having arisen as to whether the said Kathleen Winifred Lewis is by law entitled to receive a share under the bequest relating to the landed property contained in the aforesaid will, it is desirable that such doubts may be resolved.

5. The plaintiff contends: (a) That Kathleen Winifred Lewis is under the will of testator entitled to receive an equal share with the other five grandchildren of testator above-mentioned, in the bequest, contained in the will aforesaid, relating to the fifth share of the landed property; (b) that the liquidation and distribution accounts already filed and confirmed and the distribution and payments made thereunder to the said minor shall be ordered to be finally confirmed or alternatively that no order shall be given to amend or disturb same.

6. The defendants contend: (c) That Kathleen Winifred Lewis is not entitled under the will of the testator to share in the bequest made to the grandchildren the issue of the marriage of Elizabeth Margaret Jackson with Frederick William Lewis; (d) that they are entitled to a declaration that the liquidation and distribution accounts filed be amended by the exclusion therefrom of all references to Kathleen Winifred Lewis, and that the Master of this Honourable Court be ordered to repay to them the aforesaid sum of £139 14s. 9d. with interest accrued, now standing wrongly to the credit of the aforesaid minor in the Guardian's Fund.

Wherefore the parties hereto severally pray for judgment in terms of their respective contentions, and that the cost of this suit may be paid out of the estate of testator.

"A."

This is the last will and testament of me the undersigned William Christie Jackson, of East London, Master Mariner, who being in ill-health of body, but sound of mind, memory and understanding.

It is however my special and distinct desire that my hereinafter appointed executors shall have a free hand to deal with the same as they or the majority of them from time to time may deem fit, and to sell all such landed properties or to retain the same or portions thereof as to them or the majority of them may appear most advisable and to act generally concerning such landed properties as in their opinion or the majority of them may appear necessary and expedient.

And as to the rest, residue and remainder of my estate and effects whether in possession, reversion expectancy or contingency I give and bequeath the same in equal portions share and share alike unto my children Agnes married to Richard Court Dent, Robert Boon Jackson, Alexander David Jackson and Alice married to Clifford George Miller.

And as I desire that no misunderstanding shall arise hereafter I hereby distinctly state that all furniture, crockery, cutlery, personal effects, jewellery, horses, traps and other effects in my residence over and above the various articles given unto my wife at the time of our marriage and in the antenuptial contract specially described are and shall be considered as part and parcel of the rest, residue and remainder of my estate and be inherited.

as in the preceding clause mentioned.

And I specially desire that in the event of the death of any of my said children or grandchildren then the shares coming to them or any of them shall revert to their children respectively per stirpes.

And I will that all money legacies shall be paid within six months of my death and free from all succession duties.

I appoint the said Richard Court Dent, Alexander David Jackson and William Francis Marshall to be the executors of this my will and the administrators of my estate hereby giving unto them all such powers as are required by law especially those of assumption and substitution.

I reserve to myself the power at any time to alter or amend this will as I shall think fit.

I declare this to be my last will and testament desiring that it may have effect as such or as a codicil or otherwise according to law.

Thus done and signed at East London this 16th day of January, 1900, in the presence of the subscribing persons as witnesses all being present at the same time.

(Sgd.) W. C. JACKSON.

As Witnesses:

(Sgd.) G. W. Bird.

By virtue of the codiciliary clause in my last will contained and bearing date 16th January last I hereby give and bequeath unto my son Alexander David Jackson all plant at present belonging to me and all my interest in connection with the firm of Jackson and Neale and on the following conditions, viz.:

1. He to have same as his free and absolute property on termination of existing partnership of Jackson and Neale.

2. That my said son Alexander David Jackson shall support my sister Jane Jackson to the best of his ability, either by having her to live with him or paying unto her so much as reasonable could be expected from him either monthly, quarterly, half-yearly or yearly. My said sister having the right to elect to live with my said son or to draw the allowance as the case may be.

3. That all accounts of the said firm of Jackson and Neale shall be made upon the termination of the said partnership and the balance other than the said plant arrived at shall appertain to my general estate.

And I confirm my said will in all other respects.

Dated at East London, this 12th day of March, 1900.

Mr. Gardiner for plaintiff.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan for defendant.

Counsel having been heard in argument:—

De Villiers, C.J.: According to the case stated for the opinion of the Court, the plaintiff, Kathleen Lewis, was born five months and three days after the death of the testator. In the ordinary course of Nature, she must, therefore, have been in ventre matris at the time of the testator's death. By his will he had bequeathed his landed properties to certain of his children, and his "grandchildren the issue of his daughter Elizabeth with Frederick Lewis." The plaintiff is the youngest daughter of Elizabeth by Frederick Lewis. Without entering into the question whether she would have been entitled to share in the bequest in case she had been born more than ten months after the date of the testator's death, I am clearly of opinion that, under the circumstances disclosed in the special case, the testator may fairly be presumed to have intended to include her among the issue of his daughter Elizabeth, whom he wished to share in the bequest. If the decision in Bresler v. Kotze's Executors (2 Menz. 444) is to be followed, it should not be extended to cases like the present, where circumstances exist which support the presumption mentioned by Voet (28, 5. 12) in favour of including children born after the testator's death among the objects of his bounty. The judgment of the Court must be in terms of the plaintiff's contention.

AUSTIN V. MORRALL AND (1905.
OTHERS.) Mar. 1st.

Illegal contract — Prize fight — Boxing prize payable to winner.

A prize fight is illegal, and consequently the winner would not be entitled to claim the prize from the person who offered it.

A friendly contest in boxing, not calculated to produce injury to either party, would not be illegal. A prize having been offered by the defendants to the winner in such a friendly contest, the two competitors agreed before the contest to divide the prize between them, whichever side should win. This agreement was communicated to the defendants, and they acquiesced. After the contest the defeated competitor instituted an action against the defendants for half the amount of the prize.

Held, that as the defendants' offer was to pay the winner, and as their acquiescence in the agreement between the competitors did not amount to a promise to pay the loser anything, the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed.

This was an action to recover certain moneys said to be due to the plaintiff as remuneration for entering into a certain sparring contest.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff resides at Cape Town, and was until defeated, as hereinafter set forth, the recognised professional featherweight champion of South Africa in the legitimate sport or pastime of glove boxing.

2. The first defendant is the proprietor or lessee and the second defendant is the manager of certain licensed premises or house of entertainment known as the Grand Pavilion at Camp's Bay, Cape Division, where they reside, and cater for the entertainment of the public in various ways, including that of promoting and organising competitions for the exercise of skill in glove boxing or glove contests.

3. The third defendant is a company registered under the Company's Act, 1892, having its head office for the Colony in Cape Town. It is the proprietor of a certain daily newspaper called the "Cape Argus," printed and published in Cape Town. In connection with the said newspaper, and for the furtherance of its objects, the third defendant carries on a sports department, which is under the management of the fourth defendant as sports editor.

4. In or about the month of July, 1904, the first two defendants were desirous of promoting and organising a glove contest or competition in boxing between the plaintiff and one Thomas Palmer, otherwise known as Pedlar Palmer, at the aforesaid Grand Pavilion and negotiations took place between the said persons for that purpose.

5. Thereafter, on or about the 18th of July, 1904, an agreement was concluded between the aforesaid parties, whereby the plaintiff and Palmer undertook to contest for the featherweight boxing championship of South Africa for a purse or prize of £500 given by the said first two defendants, which the latter agreed to deposit with the sports' editor, "Cape Argus," Cape Town. A copy of the contract is hereto annexed, marked "A," and plaintiff craves leave to have it regarded as inserted herein.

6. The aforesaid contract was executed and signed in the office of the fourth defendant, viz., the sports editor's office, "Cape Argus," with the knowledge and consent of the third and fourth defendants.

7. The fourth defendant in the scope of his duty, and with the authorisation and consent of the third defendant, assented to the terms of the aforesaid contract as far as it concerned them, and consented to hold the said sum of £500 as stakeholder in his said capacity and to pay the same over to the plaintiff and Palmer at the conclusion of the contest. The plaintiff signed and executed the contract relying on this undertaking.

8. On the said 18th July, 1904, the plaintiff and Palmer also entered into the agreement, a copy of which is hereto annexed marked "B," and which plaintiff craves leave to have regarded as inserted herein. They gave notice of this to the first, second, and fourth defendants personally, and to the third defendant through and by means of the fourth defendant, all of whom acquiesced in the said arrangement and raised no objection thereto.

9. The plaintiff thereupon relying upon the due fulfilment of the above contracts and undertaking, went into training for the contest and has incurred expense and trouble in connection therewith.

10. Thereafter by mutual consent the date specified for the competition was antedated to the 8th August, and prior thereto the said sum of £500 was paid into the hands of the fourth defendant in his capacity as sports editor aforesaid with the knowledge and consent of the third defendant in terms of agreement "A."

CONTRACT.

Further we agree to place ourselves under the management of Mr. F. Haisman, who is to act, as he may deem fit, in the best interests of both parties, and adhere strictly to the following arrangement:

(1) To enter into strict training from this date;

(2) Commit no act, either directly or indirectly, that will imperil the best interests of the donors of the purse; and

11. The contest or competition took place on the said day, all arrangements in regard thereto, and specially in regard to the appointment of referee, timekeepers, etc., being made by or with the sanction of defendants, and it resulted in a decision in favour of Palmer upon points.

12. Thereafter, the plaintiff and Palmer having duly carried out and fulfilled the terms and conditions of their contract, it became and was the duty of the third and fourth defendants, or one or other of them to pay, and of the first and second defendants to pay or cause the other defendants, or one or other of them to pay to plaintiff the sum of £250, being his half share of the above-mentioned purse or prize, but neglecting their duty as aforesaid, the defendants have wrongfully refused to pay, or cause to be paid, as before stated, the said sum or any part thereof, and the first and second defendants have wrongfully interdicted the other defendants from so paying, notwithstanding that plaintiff has made demand therefore as he is legally entitled to do.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims:

1. As against the third and fourth defendants, or one or other of them, the one paying the other to be absolved: (a) An order directing them, or one or other of them, to pay to plaintiff the sum of £250 due as aforesaid; (b) interest thereon a tempore mora.

2. As against the first and second defendants: (c) An order compelling them to cause or direct the above defendants, or one or other of them to pay, the said sum to plaintiff; (d) or alternatively, and failing payment by the third and fourth defendants, or one or other of them, that they be ordered to pay to plaintiff the said sum, together with interest thereon a tempore mora.

3. As against all defendants: (e) Alternative relief; (f) costs of suit.

To this declaration the first two defendants excepted and pleaded over as follows:

EXCEPTION.

The defendants, Leonard Morrall and Frederick Haisman, except to the declaration as disclosing no cause of action inasmuch as the contracts sued upon are ipso jure illegal contracts and are contrary to public morals and policy, and therefore void.

PLEA OVER.

And for a plea over in case the said exceptions should be overruled, but not otherwise, the said defendants say as follows:

1. They admit that the plaintiff resides at Cape Town, but they do not admit the other allegations in paragraph 1.

2. They admit that the first defendant is the lessee and the second defendant is the manager of the said Grand Pavilion, and that they cater for the entertainment of the public, but they deny the other allegations in paragraph 2.

3. As to paragraph 3, the defendants admit the allegations therein contained.

4. The contracts annexed to the declaration and marked "A" were executed and signed at Camp's Bay and not in the office of the fourth defendant as alleged in paragraph 6, and the defendants crave leave to refer to the terms thereof for the true meaning and intent of the parties thereto.

5. By the terms of the said contracts the plaintiff and the said Palmer agreed, inter alia, to adhere to the following arrangement: (1) To enter into strict training from the date of the said contracts. (2) To commit no act either directly or indirectly, that would im-of the said contracts, and thereupon it the purse (to wit, the first and second defendants).

6. The said arrangement was a condition precedent, and the defendants only undertook to put up the said purse of £500 if the said arrangement were faithfully carried out by the plaintiff and the said Palmer.

7. The plaintiff and the said Palmer did not faithfully carry out the said arrangement, but forthwith, to wit, on the said 18th day of July, fraudulently and collusively and without the knowledge or consent of the first and second defendants, executed the written agreement annexed to the declaration and marked "B," and thus committed an act which imperilled, as hereinafter set forth in paragraphs 9 and 10, the best interests of the donors of the said purse.

8. The plaintiff further in breach of the said arrangement did not enter into strict training from the date of the said contracts marked "A."

9. The first and second defendants signed and executed their said contract with the intention and for the purpose which were on the said date well known to the plaintiff and the said Palmer of charging persons for admission to view the said contest, and thus making profits for themselves, and popularising the said house of entertainment.

10. The first and second defendants were put to great expense in and about the organisation and management of the said contest, and in consequence of the terms of the said fraudulent and collusive agreement becoming known to certain persons, large numbers of people who would otherwise have paid for admission were induced not to do so. and the said defendants in consequence have suffered loss, and have sustained damage in their character of public entertainers and in their said business.

11. The defendants admit that the plaintiff and the said Palmer at the time and place appointed boxed twenty rounds of two minutes' duration each, and that the said Palmer was declared the winner on points, but they deny that any contest took place in accordance with the terms of the said contracts marked "A."

12. The defendants say further that under the provisions of the contracts annexed to the declaration and marked "A," the fourth defendant in his capacity as sports editor, "Cape Argus," Cape Town, was constituted stakeholder of the said purse of £500, which was duly deposited with him in terms of the said contracts, and thereupon it was his duty as such stakeholder only to pay over the amount of the said purse to the winner of the said contest upon proof to his satisfaction that the terms and conditions of the said contracts had been faithfully carried out by the said Palmer and the plaintiff, and not otherwise. Neither the plaintiff, nor the said Palmer, nor any other person produced any such proof, and the fourth defendant acting lawfully and bona fide, and under the provisions of the said contracts, refused to pay over the amount of the said purse or any portion thereof to the plaintiff or the said Palmer.

13. Save as above, and save that they admit that they refuse to pay to plaintiff the said sum of £250, or any portion thereof, the defendants deny the allegations in paragraphs 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12.

Wherefore the defendants pray that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

The fourth defendant's exception and plea was as follows:

The fourth defendant excepts to the plaintiff's declaration, in that it discloses no cause of action against the said defendant, and prays that the said declaration may be set aside with costs.

And for a plea to the said declaration, in case the above exception should be overruled, the fourth defendant says:

1. He admits that the plaintiff and the first and second defendants reside in Cape Town, but has no knowledge of the other allegations in paragraphs 1 and 2.

2. He admits paragraph 3, save that he says that in the months of July and August, 1904, he was acting temporarily as Sports Editor, during the absence of the Sports Editor from this Colony, and that he is no longer in the employ of the third defendant.

3. He admits paragraphs 4 and 5, save that he says that the date when the said agreement was concluded was the 16th July, 1904.

4. As to paragraph 6, he admits that he knew of the execution of the said contract, and consented thereto, so far as he was concerned, but otherwise he denies the allegations in paragraph 6.

5. As to paragraph 7, he admits that he agreed to hold the sum of £500, if paid to him by the first and second defendants, as stakeholder, and to pay the same, in the event of the plaintiff and Palmer duly carrying out their agreement with the first and second defendants, to the winner of the said contest. He denies that in so agreeing he acted within the scope of his duty or with the knowledge or consent of the third defendant, though he admits that he purported to act in his capacity as Sports Editor. Save as above, he denies the allegations in paragraph 7.

6. As to paragraph 8, he admits that the plaintiff and Palmer entered into the agreement, copy whereof is marked A, but he says that he received no notice of such agreement until after the contest had taken place. He denies that he acquiesced in the said arrangement.

7. He says, further, that the said agreement B was entered into in violation of the rules and customs affecting the sport known as boxing, and in breach of the agreement between the plaintiff and Palmer and the first and second defendants, and more particularly of clause (2) thereof.

8. He has no knowledge of the allegations in paragraph 9.

9. As to paragraph 10, he admits that the date of the contest was altered to August 8. He admits that prior to the contest, the first and second defendants handed him a cheque for £500, but says that he has not cashed the said cheque or demanded payment thereof. He denies that the third defendant knew or consented to his receiving the said cheque.

10. As to paragraph 11, he admits that the contest took place on the said day, and that the decision was in favour of Palmer on points, but denies that the arrangements were made by or with the sanction of the third and fourth defendants.

11. As to paragraph 12, he admits that he has refused to pay the plaintiff the sum of £250, or any part thereof, and says by reason of matters hereinafter set forth, he was and is justified in so refusing. He admits that the first and second defendants have interdicted him from so paying, and says further, that they have stopped payment of the said cheque at the bank. Save as above, he denies the allegations in paragraph 12, so far as they refer to him.

12. He says further, that it was his duty as stakeholder to hand over the stakes only to the winner of the said contest, if such winner had duly observed the rules and customs of boxing, and fulfilled his agreement with the first and second defendants, and in the event of any dispute arising between the parties to the agreement "A," to retain the stakes in his possession, and to refuse to hand them over until such dispute had been duly decided.

13. The plaintiff was not the winner of the said contest, and had not duly observed the rules and customs of boxing or fulfilled his agreement with the first and second defendants, as hereinbefore set forth in paragraph 7, and prior to the plaintiff demanding from the fourth defendant the sum of £250, the first and second defendants had ordered the fourth defendant not to pay over the said sum or any part thereof, and had given him notice of a dispute between themselves and the plaintiff as to the due fulfilment by the plaintiff of his contract with them.

14. The fourth defendant still retains possession of the said cheque and is ready and willing to deliver the same to whomsoever this Honourable Court may direct.

Wherefore the fourth defendant prays that the plaintiff's claim against him may be dismissed with costs.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It is admitted that the plaintiff lost the contest; how then could he claim the money?]

Mr. Burton: They agreed that the prize should be divided.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That agreement was between Austin and Palmer only.]

Notice of it was given to the stakeholder. The division of the prize removes every element of gambling, and is so far a benefit to the community. These men were paid simply for an exhibition of their skill.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But the contract says that the prize was to be given to the winner.]

The people who gave the prize acquiesced in the division of the prize, and by their acquiescence varied the original contract.

[De Villiers, C.J.: This arrangement as to the division of the prize was only between Austin and Palmer. How can a prize be given to an unsuccessful contestant?]

They were both paid for assisting in a public performance.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is the exception?]

Mr. Gardiner: We say that this was an illegal contract. English authorities go to show that all prize-fights are illegal.

[De Villiers, C.J.: On what grounds?]

(1) They are a breach of the peace.
(2) They expose the combatants to unnecessary danger. (3) They are demo-

RASSON V. BECK.

Mr. P. Jones moved to make absolute a rule nisi, allowing Mrs. Beck to sue in forma pauperis for a certain sum of money on an insurance policy.

Rule made absolute, Mr. Gardiner to act as counsel, and Messrs. Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller as attorneys.

Ex parte TRIEGARDT.

Mr. P. Jones moved for leave to pass a mortgage bond in lieu of another bond which had been prematurely paid on the anticipation of a sale of the property, which, however, did not go through, as the farm could not be sold until the death of the survivor. £1,000 was borrowed to pay off the first mortgage bond, and it was sought now to redeem this by the passing of another bond.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte LLOYD.

Mr. Pyemont moved, on behalf of the petitioner, a minor son of the late Mortimer Lloyd, of Kynsna, for an order authorising the Master to pay out £216 and £44 in the estate of his late father. Counsel stated that the applicant would not be of age until June, 1905, and he was anxious to earn his own living as a transport rider in the Knysna district.

Hopley, J., said, in this particular case, it was to the benefit of the minor, although he was not in favour of such a practice.

Ex parte MARTIN.

Mr. Struben moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer of certain property which the petitioner had settled on his wife by ante-nuptial contract, with certain conditions, inter alia, if there were any children, that it was to divert to them. Lately, there had been an exceptionally good offer for the property, and counsel said that it would be to the benefit of the wife and children to allow transfer.

Order granted, on condition the purchase price apply to the reduction of the payment of a certain bond, and the balance to be handed over to the Master of this Court, or some trustee to be approved of and appointed by him, to be invested by him on first mortgage for the benefit of the petitioner, Winifred Martin, during her lifetime, and of the issue of marriage after her death.

CAIENCROSS V. LIZAMORE.

Dr. Rainsford moved for leave to attach certain property at Oudtshoorn, in order to found jurisdiction, and for leave to sue by edictal citation for payment of a certain bond. The defendant now could not be found and was last heard of in Krugersdorp.

Order of attachment granted, with leave to sue edictally, citation and all notices be served together, personal service, if possible, failing which, one publication in the "Oudtshoorn Courant" and one in a Krugersdorp paper, return day, 15th April.

Ex parte ESTATE BADENHORST.

Mr. P. Jones moved, on behalf of the petitioners, who are executors dative in the estate of their late father, and executors testamentary in the estate of their late mother, for leave to pass transfer of certain property at Hope Town, which one of them bought out of the estate.

The matter was ordered to stand over for the production of affidavits as to the price the property had realised, and what publicity was given to the sale.

Ex parte ESTATE SNYMAN.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan applied for leave to pass transfer of certain property. Petitioner was executor dative in his granddaughter's estate, and he had put up a piece of land in the estate for public auction. The sale was well attended, and the petitioner's bid of £175 was the highest.

Granted.

Ex parte ESTATE ERASMUS.

Mr. Struben applied for leave to sell certain property at Somerset East. The property was in a dilapidated condition, and unprofitable.

Granted, the shares of the minors to be paid to the Master.

Ex parte SOUTH AFRICAN BRICK AND LIME CO., LTD.

Mr. P. Jones moved for leave to pass transfer of certain landed property at Observatory-road. The applicant was the only surviving trustee of the company.

An order was granted that the liquidators be authorised to transfer the land in question.

Ex parte ESTATE PEACOCK.

Mr. P. Jones moved, on behalf of the executor testamentary of the estate of the late John Peacock, for leave to purchase certain property at Queen's Town. He had obtained consent of all the heirs to take it over on the valuation of a sworn appraiser.

Granted.

Ex parte ESTATE DALY.

Mr. P. Jones moved, on behalf of one of the executors dative in the estate, for leave to pass transfer of certain property which was purchased at public auction.

TRIAL CAUSE.

DOMINGO V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. { 1905.
Mar. 2nd.
„ 3rd.

Damnum injuriae — Artificial change of course of river.

This was an action brought by Gabriel Domingo, of the Paarl, against the Colonial Government to recover a sum of £50 for damage to his property caused by the alleged negligent construction of a bridge over the Berg River.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was the owner of certain land situated in the township of the Paarl, and bounded on the east side by the Berg River. The defendant was the Hon. T. W. Smaritt, Commissioner of Works. In or about the year 1900 the Government constructed a certain bridge across the said river near to and above the plaintiff's land. Thereafter in or about January, 1901, the river became flooded, and owing to the obstruction caused by the bridge, which was made negligently and without protection against floods, the waters overflowed the bank of the said river, in consequence whereof the Government constructed certain protective works in order to prevent a like occurrence in the future. In September, 1904, the said river again became flooded, and in consequence of the protective works being negligently constructed, the flood waters, contrary to their natural course, flowed round and into the said protective works and upon the plaintiff's land, washing away portion of his soil and garden and a number of the poplar trees. He claimed (1) £50 as and for damages; (2) alternative relief; and (3) costs of suit.

Defendants, in their plea, said that the bridge was constructed under lawful authority, and was properly constructed, and all reasonable precautions were taken against ordinary and usual floods in the river. In January, 1901, an extraordinary and violent flood occurred, which swept away the said bridge. They admitted that the banks were eroded. Thereafter, protective works were built. The defendants denied negligence, and prayed that the claim might be dismissed with costs.

The replication was general.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the plaintiff; Mr. Howell Jones (with him Mr. Nightingale) was for the defendants.

Mr. De Villiers applied for leave to amend the replication by inserting the following words: As to paragraph 3 of the defendants' plea the plaintiff admits that the said bridge was washed away in January, 1901, but he says that the materials and debris therein remained lying, and are still lying in the said river, above the plaintiff's land, obstructing the natural flow of the said river, and diverting the said river on to the plaintiff's land.

Mr. Jones said that the defendants denied the allegations embodied in the proposed amendment, and he was placed in rather an awkward position if his learned friend were allowed to put fresh matter on the pleadings which the Government had no opportunity of denying. Furthermore, he would point out that the declaration did not allege any damage as having been caused to the plaintiff through the alleged negligent construction of this bridge.

Mr. De Villiers said that the Government had had notice of the proposed amendment.

Maasdorp, J., said he thought they should have the whole of the case before the Court. He consented to the proposal of the plaintiff to embody the proposed amendment as a paragraph of his declaration, and gave leave to the defendants to amend their plea so far as this addition was concerned.

Gabriel Domingo (the plaintiff), a Malay, said he was the owner of certain property on the banks of the Berg River. He was born at the Paarl. The stream adjacent to his property was broad prior to the temporary bridge erected by the Government. Mr. Loubser's property was situate between the bridge and witness's property.

Maasdorp, J., asked whether this was the old Lady Grey Bridge?

Mr. Jones said that in 1900 the old Lady Grey Bridge got into a defective state, and the Government then erected the temporary bridge, while they repaired, or really reconstructed, the old bridge. The old Lady Grey Bridge was situate below the plaintiff's property, while the temporary bridge was above his property.

Witness (continuing his evidence) said that in January, 1901, the temporary bridge, which had been made of stones from the bed, railway sleepers and iron, was washed away after the flood. The sand silted up, and the usual flow of the river had been changed. In summer the water only went through a little channel instead of over the whole bed. After the disturbance the Government collected the materials, and heaped one portion of the debris on the side of Mr. Loubser's property and put the other on the sand bank on the eastern side. The sand bank had enlarged in the meantime. Mr. Loubser's land, which had been partially washed away, was filled up again by the Government, and protective barmens were put up. Witness's property was not protected; at that time, as a matter of fact, it was not necessary. During a flood, in 1902, part of the soil deposited on Mr. Loubser's ground was again washed away; the same thing took place in 1903. In September, 1904, the water again burst over Loubser's property, and took away some of his ground. A portion of witness's ground was also carried away. The increase in the size of the sand bank had caused the water to rush with greater force towards the side of Loubser's property. From witness's property the bank sloped down about 10 or 12 feet to the river bed. The embankment was now about 12 yards nearer to his house than it was before the last flood, and was only about 5 yards distant. Some 20 or 30 poplar trees had been washed away. Instead of having good soil, he had now soft sand. It would take about a thousand cartloads of soil to fill the gap which had been caused, and it would also be necessary to make up the street again. He thought there was danger to his house. He would be content if the Government filled up the hole, and planted trees, and protected him against a further flood. He should also want to be paid for the trees he had lost. He thought the washaway had seriously affected the value of his property on account of the danger of another similar occurrence.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: When he bought his property the first flood had occurred, and steps had been taken to protect Loubser's property. He then knew that the bridge had diverted the flow. He did not think at that time that the diversion of the stream would damage his property. He attributed the damage done to his property to the sand bank, and part of the temporary bridge that was still lying in the river. He did not consider that the barmens put up against the property of Loubser were sufficient to hold against floods. He estimated that the trees were worth £5 each.

John W. Price Logan, Government land surveyor, who had prepared the plan put in, said that the debris of the temporary bridge was about 25 ft. square and 5 or 6 ft. high.

Pieter Johannes Loubser, of the Paarl, said that his land adjoined the plaintiff's property. Before the Government erected the temporary bridge, the bed of the river was level, and the water flowed uniformly along the course. He was away at the time the bridge was erected, but on his return he found that the current of the stream had been diverted to his side of the river, and had done mischief to part of his property. The Government filled in the gap on his land caused by the flood. In 1903 the river was again in flood, and the water went over, and into the protective works. He claimed damages from the Government. In reply, he was referred by the Railway Department to the Municipality. He afterwards sued the Government for damages in the sum of £100. The Government did not file a plea to his declaration, but made him an offer of £25, with taxed attorney and client costs, such costs not to exceed £15. Witness accepted £25. He believed his attorneys agreed to a condition in the terms of settlement that the Government should not be held liable for any further damage due to the same cause. His property still suffered from the flow of the river. He saw the damage done to the plaintiff's property. He should think a portion of about 10 or 15 yards in breadth was carried away. He considered that the plaintiff's house stood in great danger. He considered that the eating away of the land on his own and plaintiff's property was due to the bridge having been erected by the Government. Even people who lived in some of witness's houses had given him notice, because they were afraid of the winter rains.

Cross-examined: He did not tell the Government that he was satisfied with the protective works that they put up. He admitted his attorney wrote informing the Government that he was satisfied.

Re-examined: He considered that the plaintiff's property was worth £150 less since the river had begun to overflow on to it.

Izaak Jacob de Villiers, of Lady Grey Bridge, said that after the flood of January, 1901, in which the temporary bridge was capsized, the river course was altered, and the water had since flowed in quite a different channel from formerly.

Johannes Everardus Louw, of the Paarl, said he calculated that about 1,000 yards of earth had been washed away from plaintiff's ground by the river. He valued the soil at 1s. a load.

Samuel Japtha, of the Paarl, also spoke to the diversion of the river course after the flood of January, 1901.

Mr. De Villiers closed his case.

John S. Basson, photographer, the Paarl, spoke as to several photographs which he had taken of the locality, where the damage was alleged to have been done.

W. Westhoven, member of the Institute of Civil Engineers, and an official of the Public Works Department, said that the Department, when the repairs were going at the Old Lady Grey Bridge, wanted a drift for temporary purposes, but the Municipality insisted upon a temporary bridge. The temporary bridge erected was, he thought, sufficient to stand all ordinary summer floods. They were expecting to get the permanent bridge finished before any large floods came down the river in winter. A flood of 4 feet had come down the river. The bridge ended on a sand bank. On the 15th January, 1901, a very high flood occurred. According to the department's record, it was an exceptionally high flood, higher than the ordinary winter floods. The Mayor of the Paarl wrote saying that there had not been a higher flood for thirty years. The bridge was constructed of "sleeper cradles." The "cradles" were founded upon sand, and were underwashed. The whole bridge was against the current. After the collapse, the bridge was taken to pieces, part of the material was placed on the east bank and part on the west bank, because they expected to have to rebuild the bridge. They, however, received no instructions from the Railway Department. The materials would in no way cause a diversion of the stream; it was absurd to say that they could. As to the protective works, he considered that these were sufficient for the purpose of replacing Loubser's land in its former condition. It was not uncommon for not only the Berg River but every river in South Africa to change its course. There had been no complaints about debris having been left on the banks of the river.

In cross-examination, witness said that the damages paid by the Government to Loubser, whose land had been eroded, referred to the trees which had been washed away. He did not consider that Domingo was entitled to any damages; he did not attach any value to the trees. He did not think that fifty cart-loads of earth had been washed away from plaintiff's property. The protective works were never considered to be a permanent feature; they were simply put there to replace the bank opposite Loubser's property in its former condition.

James Chadwick said that in 1900 and 1901 he was a clerk of works in the Public Works Department, and that he supervised the erection of the temporary bridge. He considered that it was well constructed. The bridge was tested by a 4 feet flood. A furious flood of about 10 or 12 feet of water, travelling at 8 to 10 miles an hour, swept away the bridge in January, 1901.

Thomas Weston Perry, civil engineer, of the Public Works Department, also gave evidence.

Mr. Jones closed his case.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J., in giving judgment, said that, in his opinion, the washaway of the bank on plaintiff's property could be attributed to nothing else than the manner in which the sheeting was put up on Loubser's land. It was put up by the Government. It did not seem to him that the material placed in the river bed materially affected the flow of the river. He found that plaintiff had lost some poplar trees and a little soil, and that he was entitled to small damages. The sum claimed, it seemed to him, would more or less cover all the damage to plaintiff's property. He thought the parties might intimate to him if they were prepared to consent to prospective damages to close the matter entirely. If he gave small damages, plaintiff might be able to recover continuing damages.

Mr. De Villiers said his client preferred actual damages.

Judgment was thereupon given for the plaintiff for £10, with costs, including plaintiff's expenses as a witness and actual cost of making the plan.

BOSMAN, POWIS AND CO. v. { 1905.
NORDEN. } Mar. 3rd.

Lease of licensed premises —
Licence—Removal of business—Transfer of licence.

The plaintiff, the holder of licences for two hotels, and owner of the land with the hotels thereon, sold the lease, licences, goodwill, furniture, and all contents thereof, and executed a lease of the hotels for five years, with a right of renewal for another five years in favour of the defendants, who obtained from the Licensing Court a transfer of the licence to themselves.

Held, affirming the judgment of a Divisional Court, that the defendants had no right, during the currency of the lease, to remove the business and the licence connected therewith to other premises.

This was an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Hopley, sitting as a division of the Supreme Court, in an action brought against the present appellants, Bosman, Powis and Co., wine merchants, by the respondent Norden, for a declaration of rights under a certain agreement.

From the record it appeared that a certain agreement was contained in a broker's note, and a lease made subsequently to the broker's note. The plaintiff alleged that this agreement thus contained, so far as it had reference to certain licences of hotels that were leased, had only the effect of transferring the licences to the defendants pending the period during which the lease ran. The plaintiff said, further, that when the documents were drawn up, he raised the question specifically with regard to the protection and return of the licences to him upon the termination of the lease, and that thereupon Mr. Bosman, who was a member of the defendant firm to negotiate the matter with him, said that they could enter into the lease, and that the question of the protection of the licences and their return to plaintiff could be arranged subsequently. The plaintiff also laid some stress on certain representations made by Mr. Joseph, the broker whom he employed, and who was present at the negotiations.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Roux) was for the appellants; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner), was for the respondent.

De Villiers, C.J., said he supposed that the decision of the appeal would have to depend entirely upon the broker's note.

Mr. Burton said he took it that that was so. He had mentioned the matter of the representations, which were pleaded very fully and very strongly in the declaration, because it would appear to the Court, he thought, that the case was very largely based upon these alleged representations. Now, these representations had been found by the learned judge in the Court below not proved, and the plaintiff must take his stand, his lordship admitted, upon the legal effect of the document. The question then was what, in view of the circumstances of this contract, must be taken to be the legal effect of the document. The broker's note was in the following terms: "Bought from Joseph B. Norden and sold to Bosman, Powis and Co., the lease, licences, goodwills, furniture, and all contents, and the whole as a going concern, of and in the Old Standard Hotel and the Nil Desperandum Hotel, Kuil's River, with the exception of the stock of liquors, etc., for the sum of £1,000, upon the following terms—that a lease is to be granted by the seller to the purchaser of the aforesaid premises for five years, at a monthly rental of £35, purchaser to have the option at the end of the period of five years of taking the lease on for another five years, at a rental of £50." Clause 5 said that the premises to be included in the broker's note were the Old Standard Hotel, together with out-buildings, and half-portion of the Nil Desperandum Hotel. Counsel submitted that upon the face of the documents the plaintiff's rights must stand or fall. The effect of the documents was to transfer to the purchasers the licences in question, as well as the other matters contained. The note was a "bought and sold" note. It was clear that the lease was bought. The appellants maintained that the £1,000 was paid for the right to obtain the lease. There was no doubt the lease was bought, the furniture was bought, and the other things stipulated were bought. The appellants did not for a moment suggest that they bought the property, but they claimed that they had bought the lease. Looking at the intention of the parties, he submitted that it was a fair argument that the things on the broker's note were bought. He contended that the question of goodwill could not be confined to the licences. As to the licences, the question was, were the appellants holders of the licences as owners of the licences or as holders of the licences during the continuance of the lease? The learned judge in the Court below seemed to have thought these licences were old licences of very great value. He (counsel) did not consider that they were of very great value, and he pointed out that the Colonial Orphan Chamber, as a matter of fact, had been very reluctant to advance any more money to Norden. Again, Norden was hard pressed for money, and it was quite conceivable that he agreed to accept £1,000 for the licences.

De Villiers, C.J., put it to Mr. Burton whether it was correct to speak of "selling" licences?

Mr. Burton said that he thought it was clearly correct. Licences were regularly sold. A licence was a personal right in respect of certain premises.

De Villiers, C.J., said that if premises were sold, then it would be for the new owner to apply for a transfer.

Mr. Burton contended that under this document Bosman, Powis bought whatever right Norden had.

De Villiers, C.J., asked whether the licence and goodwill were not matters applicable to certain premises?

Mr. Burton admitted that goodwill was peculiar and applicable to certain premises. He contended, however, that the licence was on a different footing. Counsel went on to comment upon the risk of the renewal being refused, and submitted that the argument of improbability that Norden would enter into a contract of this sort was not very strong. He contended that Norden, under these documents, divested himself of all rights that he had. Counsel quoted the cases of Ohlsson's Cape Breweries v. Power (10 C.T.R., 747), and Ohlsson's v. Kuhr's Trustee (11 C.T.R., 165), and Ohlsson's v. Parson (11 C.T.R., 165), and of S. A. Moss. On these cases, he urged that the licence was a personal right of which the holder could divest himself. He also quoted the English case of Maver v. Hindmarsh (Law Times Reports, vol. 28, p. 644), in regard to the question of forfeiture of licences.

Sir H. Juta drew their lordships' attention to section 8, Act 44, 1885, which, he said, was for the protection of owners and lessors where the licence was in danger either of going away, or being forfeited. Under that section, the landlord, in the case in England which had been quoted, could have got his transfer. It seemed to him (Sir Henry) that the trouble arose because of the confusion that appeared, according to Mr. Bosman's evidence, to exist in the licensed victuallers' trade in Cape Town. They seemed to think that they could sell a licence. They need only refer to one section to see that they could not sell a licence. Section 51 said that any person who, during the currency of his licence, sold or disposed of his business may make application to the R.M. It was only in respect of these licensed premises that there could be a temporary transfer. Counsel went on to submit that it was never for one moment supposed that they could separate the licence from the premises. He rested his case on the contention that a licence was not a merchantable article, which could be handed about from one person to another, as was perfectly clear from section 56 of the Act.

Mr. Burton having been heard in reply.

De Villiers, C.J.: I quite agree with Mr. Burton that the decision of this question depends upon the construction of the agreement of lease executed between the parties and that the construction of that agreement depends upon the terms of the broker's note, which has been incorporated with the agreement. The broker's note, no doubt, uses the words, "bought from Joseph Norden and sold to Bosman, Powis and Co., the lease, licences, goodwill, furniture, and all contents, and so forth," for a certain price, but it is clear that it is not the premises that were sold, but the right to have a lease of the premises executed in terms of the subsequent part of the broker's note. If this had been an out-and-out sale, there would have been no difficulty whatever, because there can be no doubt that the goodwill would have gone with the sale, that the sale would have carried the goodwill. The question was considered by the Court of Appeal in England in the case of ex parte Punnett. In that case the Master of the Rolls said: "It is quite plain that the goodwill of a public-house passes with the public-house. In such a case the goodwill is the mere habit of the customers resorting to the house. It is not what is called a personal goodwill." In the present case, however, there is no sale of the premises, but there was a lease of the premises for five years, with a right of renewal for another five years. Now what was leased? Not merely the premises, but "the whole as a going concern, of and in the Old Standard Hotel and the Nil Desperandum Hotel, Kuil's River." Two hotels were included in the lease. What was let was two certain hotels, qua hotels. The question arises whether the lessee during the currency of this lease was entitled to take active steps, by means of which these premises will cease to be hotels, and will cease to enjoy the benefit of the lease. In my opinion, it is clear from the contract that he should not be allowed to do so. It would be quite inconsistent with the terms of this contract that he should be allowed to do that during the currency of the lease. It is another question whether he should be allowed to be perfectly passive, and do nothing and thus risk the loss of the licence on that account. That question does not arise for adjudication. But, I am clearly of opinion that active steps he should not be allowed to take, because it would be quite contrary to the implied terms of this contract. Great stress has been laid on the fact that the words "bought and sold" are used, but it is clear that the licence which is there said to be sold could not be sold qua licence, and that the goodwill which was sold was the goodwill of the leased premises. In the same way as the goodwill of the public-house, according to the Master of the Rolls in the case quoted, so the goodwill would go with the lease. It would not extend beyond the term of the lease, and in my opinion it will be inconsistent with the contract for the lessees to deal with the goodwill, and the licence in such a manner as to deprive the owner of the premises, at the expiration of the lease, of his rights. If, at the expiration of the lease, there is a licence still in existence, the lessor, in my opinion, will be entitled to that licence, and the lessee could not be allowed during the currency of that lease to do anything actively by means of which the licence or goodwill is transferred to any other place. The Court is aware of the great difficulty which the Legislature has thrown in the way of acquiring fresh licences. There are a great many requirements before fresh licences can be issued, there may be a majority of the ratepayers that must consent, and the Court may certainly take judicial cognisance of the fact that there does exist the greatest difficulty in obtaining fresh licences. If, therefore, the defendants were now to be allowed to transfer what is described as the Old Standard Hotel, and the Nil Desperandum Hotel to two other premises, and thus deprive these particular premises of the real value which they possess, I think it would be clearly contrary to the contract entered into. For these simple reasons, I am of opinion that the judgment was right, and that the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

GENERAL MOTION.

Ex parte HUBBERSLEY AND WIFE.

Mr. M. Bisset again mentioned this matter, which was a petition for leave to register a certain ante-nuptial contract. The matter had been standing over for production of the contract, which counsel now put in.

Leave was granted to register the ante-nuptial contract, saving the rights of creditors who have become such before registration.

TRIAL CAUSES.

MCKILLIP V. MCKILLIP. { 1905.
Mar. 3rd.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved, on behalf of the wife, for a decree of judicial separation from her husband on the ground of his incurable drunkenness. The parties were married in community of property at Cape Town in 1883. There was one male child of nine years of age of the marriage. The applicant brought certain landed property at Green Point and Port Alfred into the estate. Respondent never contributed anything, but had mortgaged the property and squandered the money. The amount of the estate was now very small.

The respondent, J. McKillip, appeared, and handed in a paper giving a statement of his property, and denied the allegations of intemperance, stating that he was willing to take his wife back and forget and forgive.

[Hopley, J.: What are you going to forget and forgive? Or is it your wife who is to forget and forgive?]

The respondent said he desired to forgive his wife for leaving him without any notice by which action of hers his health had suffered.

Mr. De Villiers said that three doctors had certified that the respondent was absolutely incurable, and that his mind was affected.

Hopley, J., said that the respondent appeared to him to have given up his past bad habits. If the wife was a good wife she would be willing to give her husband another chance. After cautioning the respondent against a relapse, His Lordship said he would make no order at present. The matter would be postponed sine die, but there would be leave to the applicant to apply should her husband again relapse or be cruel to her.

RESSAY V. HOLLAND.

Mr. Uppington moved for the release of Holland, who was at present suffering civil imprisonment, and counsel put in certain affidavits.

Mr. Van Zyl, for the plaintiff, asked that the case might stand over as they had only just received the affidavits, and had not had time to file replies. Having got an order restraining the respondents from parting with certain property, they felt now that they could not refuse the application for release, but wanted the costs.

Order of release granted, the question of costs to stand over.

SEALE V. DOOVEY.

This was an action to recover balance of money due for work and labour done.

The plaintiff was a builder and contractor, residing at Rondebosch, and the defendant resided at Salt River. On December 31, 1903, plaintiff contracted to build two houses for the defendant at Salt River. Plaintiff agreed to erect the two houses for £1,650. The houses were erected, and plaintiff had paid £1,500, but refused to pay the balance of £150, or £638 for certain extra work.

The defendant, in his plea, said that the plaintiff undertook to execute the work in a good and workmanlike manner, and according to the building regulations of the Municipality of Woodstock. He denied that the plaintiff erected the houses in a satisfactory manner. Defendant alleged that he had paid £1,619. Plaintiff had failed to execute certain work amounting in all to £78 0s. 6d. There was also certain work not done to the satisfaction of the Municipal Engineer, and another contractor had to do the work at a Counsel went on to comment upon the risk of the renewal being refused, and submitted that the argument of improbability that Norden would enter into a contract of this sort was not very strong. Mr. Upington moved for the release of Holland, who was at present suffering civil imprisonment, and counsel put in certain affidavits.

Having got an order restraining the respondents from parting with certain property, they felt now that they could not refuse the application for release, but wanted the costs.

Order of release granted, the question of costs to stand over.

SEALE V. DOOVEY.

This was an action to recover balance of money due for work and labour done.

The plaintiff was a builder and contractor, residing at Rondebosch, and the defendant resided at Salt River. On December 31, 1903, plaintiff contracted to build two houses for the defendant at Salt River. Plaintiff agreed to erect the two houses for £1,650. The houses were erected, and plaintiff had paid £1,500, but refused to pay the balance of £150, or £638 for certain extra work.

The defendant, in his plea, said that the plaintiff undertook to execute the work in a good and workmanlike manner, and according to the building regulations of the Municipality of Woodstock. He denied that the plaintiff erected the houses in a satisfactory manner. Defendant alleged that he had paid £1,619. Plaintiff had failed to execute certain work amounting in all to £78 0s. 6d. There was also certain work not done to the satisfaction of the Municipal Engineer, and another contractor had to do the work at a cost of £44, which defendant claimed he had a right to recover.

Mr. Upington was for the plaintiff and Mr. W. P. Buchanan (with him Mr. Roux) appeared for the defendant.

Thomas Seale, plaintiff, stated that on December 31, 1903, he contracted with defendant to build two houses for him at Salt River. The work was to be done to the satisfaction of the Municipal officials at Woodstock. He did not include in his tender for the price of a balcony. He was to put in 18-inch foundations. When he commenced to excavate it was found that the whole of the site was refuse stuff, and it was impossible to build houses on the stuff, as they would not stand. Consequently, he had to make considerable excavations, in some places to the extent of 17 feet. This entailed a lot of extra work, for which he claimed £638. Defendant agreed to the extra work. Owing to an objection by the Municipal authorities, he could not put in a fire-proof partition, and plaintiff put in glass doors instead of wooden ones. He had received his final certificate after the building had passed the Municipal Regulations.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He fixed his price on the 18-inch foundation, but he did not see the 18-inch struck out on the plan. His attention was not specially drawn to the foundation. The defendant and witness had a lot of conversation about the carrying out of the contracts. In this case he did not examine the site very well. He did not see in the specification when he looked through it that the depth of the foundations had been altered from eighteen inches, and had to be in cement concrete, and be brought from a depth to be satisfactory to the Town Engineer. The carting away of the stuff from the excavation cost £15. The amount of the claim was only for excavating and filling, and the cartage to the Woodstock dumping ground. After the completion of the contract there was an account due to Ahlboom Gullander and Co., and witness asked Doovey to sign a document to the effect that he acknowledged receipt of £182 5s. 8d., against an amount of £638 15s. 8d. outstanding at that time. Witness never got £50 in hard cash from Doovey. He was doubtful of the genuineness of some of the receipts now produced to him.

Re-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness filled in the excavation from time to time, and it was passed by the Municipality. The contract was to be carried out according to plans and specifications, and to the satisfaction of the Municipality.

William Harrison Grey, engineer and architect, stated that he had particulars of the depth of the excavation, but he had seen the excavating when it was on. The excavations then were about 14 feet deep. The place was an old brickfield that had been filled up. Witness worked out the quantities carefully from a plan of the various depths supplied by Seale.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: Without anything being specified to the contrary stock doors and windows were put in. He remembered seeing a hole about fifteen feet deep at the back of the premises. From the plan he could give a good guess of the charge to erect a balcony.

Thomas Cairncross, civil engineer, stated he had been to the site in question, and made an independent calculation. He valued the extra work of excavating, etc., at £427 15s., and he made the price of the verandah £47.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Thomas Tonkin, who had the plans and specifications drawn up, stated that he saw Seale, who was anxious to get the contract. Seale seemed to know all about the site. The Municipal Engineer said that the foundation would have to go down 13 feet. Seale's attention was called to the fact that he would find the foundation the most important item, as he would have to go down 13 feet, or perhaps more, to get at the solid.

At this stage counsel were heard on the question of whether the contract was entered into under the specification, or the schedule, and his lordship held that the parties must be bound by the agreement, as it stood, and on the adjournment suggested that the parties should consider their position and endeavour to arrive at a compromise without incurring further expenses.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

TRIAL CAUSE.

INSOLVENT ESTATE ISRAEL-SON V. HARRIS AND BLACK AND OTHERS. { 1905.
Mar. 6th.
" 11th.

Builder's hypothec—Actual possession.

This was an action brought by the trustees in the insolvent estate of David Israelson against seven defendants mainly in the building trade, for a declaration that they have no lien or legal possession or occupation of a certain building belonging to the estate or any portion

Witness, in further evidence, said that Kinnes stopped working as soon as witness told him he had no money. Lewis worked for about a week after the meeting of creditors at Mr. Close's office. Bloom left shortly after the meeting. Each workman supplied his own tools. When the lift was brought by Messrs. Govey and Co., Mr. Shaw, their representative, called, and saw him, and he referred him to Mr. Close. Mr. Shaw came back, and the lift was placed by Mr. Shaw in the passage. Mr. Shaw got into the premises by taking out the hoarding. Witness had a man named Monty on the building acting as caretaker. Monty had now left the Colony, and witness did not know his address.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He had no clerk of works of his own on the premises. He had four or five men sleeping there, whose duty it was to look after the premises. He believed Bloom also had a man there. He did not call for tenders for the work. He took the men to the place and showed them what there was to be done.

De Villiers, C.J., intimated that he wished the parties would confine themselves to the simple issue whether defendants had possession of the building at any time, and if so, whether they subsequently lost it.

Witness, re-examined, said that Monty continued on the premises up to the date of witness's insolvency. Bloom had a man there.

By the Court: Bloom took on as a contractor for £4,500 all the carpenters' work, and undertook to look after all the works. Witness supplied all the timber. He actually paid to Bloom £3,850 or £3,865. Bloom had to look after the work generally. Bloom was not "over" Black's, but if there was anything that was wrong, Bloom had to report to witness. He did not know whether he should call Bloom a clerk of works. Bloom was the head man of all the works, to protect witness's interests.

Charles Frederick Shaw, of Messrs. Govey and Co., gave evidence with regard to a visit he paid to the premises on the 14th or 15th October to deposit a lift. He found no one in charge of the premises. There was no work going on. He only found builders' refuse about the place.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

James Black, of Harris and Black, said he had never known that Bloom was supervising their work. He was not aware that Bloom had anything to do with their work. On the 2nd September, Israelson owed his firm £1,066. Witness had a Kafir on the premises until the 22nd September. Scaffolding was taken away that had been done with, but they left sufficient to complete the job. Witness went in and out of the premises after the 2nd September as he pleased. He had left cement and lime there. Witness also spoke of the measures taken to close the premises. As to the man Monty, he knew that Monty had been a labourer on the building, and that he was afterwards employed in the bar.

Abraham Bloom, another of the defendants, said that he was the contractor for carpentry. He had nothing in writing relating to the contract. He was to superintend all the work up to the first floor. Monty was not the caretaker of the building. Monty was there just at the beginning, and asked witness if he could finish a room so that he could live there. Witness had told Mr. Close that he would wait until the work had been finished, but that was subject to other money being raised that had been mentioned by Israelson. Witness had a man staying on the premises until they were locked up.

Cross-examined: It was part of his duty to see that all the work went on right. That was a friendly arrangement, and not something for which he was specially paid. Witness kept no books at all. He had not claimed against the estate, because he thought there would be nothing for the concurrent creditors. He had eight rooms locked up, of which he held the keys. Black and Lewis had locked up other rooms.

Further evidence was given by

Geo. Kinnes, the plumbing and drainage contractor, who claimed £196 against the insolvent estate; Thomas Smith, book-keeper of the last witness; Joel Lewis, painter, who had a claim for £50; Morris Tamse, who supplied labour for the brickwork, and who claimed £275; Henry Frank Wm. Rohr, manager for Jenkins and Co., asphalaters, who claimed £80.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Postea (March 11th).

The Court intimated that they would first hear counsel for the defendants.

Mr. Schreiner admitted that the title to the property which was in the defendants' possession was in the trustee, but he submitted that no provision of the Insolvent Ordinance in any way allowed the trustee to have a better right than the owner of the property could have had. The trustee in this matter was but the successor of the owner of the property, who was Israelson. The action was one for ejectment, based upon the seventh paragraph of the declaration, which set out that certain acts had been done by the defendants in locking and boarding up the property. The essence of the case for plaintiffs was that these acts constituted wrongful and unlawful trespass on the part of the defendants. One important point was that the insolvent (in reply to a question put by the Court) said that he told the defendants, when they said they would lock up the place, that they could do as they liked. Possession was, on the insolvent's own admission, taken by his consent by Black and Blum on behalf of all the defendants. Counsel went on to contend that the defendants, in doing the work that they did, were not looking merely to the credit of Israelson; they were looking to their lien on the buildings. They did, he submitted, all that a group of persons could have done to secure real possession of the building. They locked up the premises, nailed up certain parts, took certain rooms, and had people sleeping there. Counsel did not claim that there was exclusive possession of the building by the defendants; he contended, however, that even a single contractor could not have exclusive possession. As far as Jenkins's claim was concerned, it was hard on him, but he had given up his claim. With the other defendants, however, it was not so. Counsel adduced a number of authorities in support of his contentions. He quoted Voet (20-2-28) Maasdorp, Nathan, and Van Leeuwen, and cited Brown's Assignees v. Pole (4 E.D.C., 50) and Stern v. Morom (13 C.T.R., 802). He proceeded to state the position of the different defendants. Harris and Black had a large contract, but there was still an amount owing to them of £1,066. Their materials were there, as well as certain of their tools, their signboard was in one of the windows, and they had locked one of the rooms. Turnbull and Bigott had withdrawn from the action. As to Jenkins and Co., they had been paid half of their charges, and had been promised the other half in three months. Jenkins had thereupon gone away from the premises. Counsel admitted that he could not press Jenkins's claim to have had possession of the building. Kinness was still on the premises, and had been ready to continue the work. Kinness had been associated with Harris and Black in what was done after the insolvency of Israelson. He had a claim of £196. Counsel also contended that Tamsey, Lewis and Blum clearly had possession, along with the other defendants, of the building. He submitted that it had not been shown that the man "Monte," whom Israelson described as his caretaker, had any possession of the Flat Iron on behalf of the insolvent.

Without calling on Mr. Searle.

De Villiers, C. J.: The Legislature did not intend by the proviso to extend the rights of retention beyond the law that existed at the time the law was passed. The question was what was the law at the time the Act was passed? I think the proviso itself in a few words says that the law authorised the right of retention where there is actual possession. In the present case, therefore, I am clearly of opinion that the plaintiff had no such actual possession of the buildings as to entitle them to the right of retention. In the first place, all those who have been concerned, and were concerned, in the building of this property, are not before the Court. The foundations were laid by Israelson. Several workmen were engaged upon different parts of the work. But all the plaintiffs before the Court do not constitute all the parties who would have been entitled jointly to claim the possession of the whole of the property. I am therefore clearly of opinion that the actual possession required by law is actual possession of the whole property sought to be retained. None of these people had possession of the whole of this property, nor had they jointly possession of the whole of the property. It is true that some of them had rooms in which they kept their tools, but that was the sole purpose for which they took possession. As to Bloom, he had possession of more than one room, and he had keys of several rooms, but the relations between Bloom and Israelson were such that it was to be expected he would have some degree of control and authority over the buildings. He was not in the position of clerk of the works, but still he was in this position that if anything went wrong he would report to Israelson, and that such a man occupied certain rooms is just what one would expect. I am satisfied that Bloom never occupied or kept the keys of these rooms for the purpose of asserting a right of possession on behalf of all the persons who had been engaged upon the building of this house. When they saw that the man was unable to pay, they did not think it worth their while remaining on the buildings. It is true some odd tools were left about, but that does not make a person an occupier of the premises. Then, subsequently, when these people began to hear that they would lose their money, there was a conversation with Israelson, who said they could go on the premises if they liked. Then I think they not only had the keys of the rooms, but they put on a lock on one of the doors, and in that way obtained admission to the whole of the premises. But during the same period Israelson had possession, and Israelson had a person sleeping on the premises. Although he was a man in an inferior position, yet, still he was there asserting the right of the owner to some extent to the occupation to the whole of the premises. What was done afterwards does not amount to such a possession of the whole of the building, as to justify the Court in saying that the terms of this proviso had been complied with. There was no such actual possession of the whole of the property, in respect of which this retention is claimed, as to justify the Court in giving judgment for the defendants. The rooms were simply locked for the purpose of keeping their tools, and the occupation is not of such a nature as to give them a right of retention.

Witness, in further evidence, said that Kinnes stopped working as soon as witness told him he had no money. Lewis worked for about a week after the meeting of creditors at Mr. Close's office. Bloom left shortly after the meeting. Each workman supplied his own tools. When the lift was brought by Messrs. Govey and Co., Mr. Shaw, their representative, called, and saw him, and he referred him to Mr. Close. Mr. Shaw came back, and the lift was placed by Mr. Shaw in the passage. Mr. Shaw got into the premises by taking out the hoarding. Witness had a man named Monty on the building acting as caretaker. Monty had now left the Colony, and witness did not know his address.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He had no clerk of works of his own on the premises. He had four or five men sleeping there, whose duty it was to look after the premises. He believed Bloom also had a man there. He did not call for tenders for the work. He took the men to the place and showed them what there was to be done.

De Villiers, C.J., intimated that he wished the parties would confine themselves to the simple issue whether defendants had possession of the building at any time, and if so, whether they subsequently lost it.

Witness, re-examined, said that Monty continued on the premises up to the date of witness's insolvency. Bloom had a man there.

By the Court: Bloom took on as a contractor for £4,500 all the carpenters' work, and undertook to look after all the works. Witness supplied all the timber. He actually paid to Bloom £3,250 or £3,865. Bloom had to look after the work generally. Bloom was not "over" Black's, but if there was anything that was wrong, Bloom had to report to witness. He did not know whether he should call Bloom a clerk of works. Bloom was the head man of all the works, to protect witness's interests.

Charles Frederick Shaw, of Messrs. Govey and Co., gave evidence with regard to a visit he paid to the premises on the 14th or 15th October to deposit a lift. He found no one in charge of the premises. There was no work going on. He only found builders' refuse about the place.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

James Black, of Harris and Black, said he had never known that Bloom was supervising their work. He was not aware that Bloom had anything to do with their work. On the 2nd September, Israelson owed his firm £1,066. Witness had a Kafir on the premises until the 22nd September. Scaffolding was taken away that had been done with, but they left sufficient to complete the job. Witness went in and out of the premises after the 2nd September as he pleased. He had left cement and lime there. Witness also spoke of the measures taken to close the premises. As to the man Monty, he knew that Monty had been a labourer on the building, and that he was afterwards employed in the bar.

Abraham Bloom, another of the defendants, said that he was the contractor for carpentry. He had nothing in writing relating to the contract. He was to superintend all the work up to the first floor. Monty was not the caretaker of the building. Monty was there just at the beginning, and asked witness if he could finish a room so that he could live there. Witness had told Mr. Close that he would wait until the work had been finished, but that was subject to other money being raised that had been mentioned by Israelson. Witness had a man staying on the premises until they were locked up.

Cross-examined: It was part of his duty to see that all the work went on right. That was a friendly arrangement, and not something for which he was specially paid. Witness kept no books at all. He had not claimed against the estate, because he thought there would be nothing for the concurrent creditors. He had eight rooms locked up, of which he held the keys. Black and Lewis had locked up other rooms.

Further evidence was given by

Geo. Kinnes, the plumbing and drainage contractor, who claimed £196 against the insolvent estate; Thomas Smith, book-keeper of the last witness; Joel Lewis, painter, who had a claim for £50; Morris Tamse, who supplied labour for the brickwork, and who claimed £275; Henry Frank Wm. Rohr, manager for Jenkins and Co., asphalters, who claimed £80.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Postea (March 11th).

The Court intimated that they would first hear counsel for the defendants.

Mr. Schreiner admitted that the title to the property which was in the defendants' possession was in the trustee, but he submitted that no provision of the Insolvent Ordinance in any way allowed the trustee to have a better right than the owner of the property could have had. The trustee in this matter was but the successor of the owner of the property, who was Israelson. The action was one for ejectment, based upon the seventh paragraph of the declaration, which set out that certain acts had been done by the defendants in locking and boarding up the property. The essence of the case for plaintiffs was that these acts constituted wrongful and unlawful trespass on the part of the defendants. One important point was that the insolvent (in reply to a question put by the Court) said that he told the defendants, when they said they would lock up the place, that they could do as they liked. Possession was, on the insolvent's own when the original debt was incurred, any complication that might arise in the case would be owing to the assignment proceedings as to whether there was any purchase made then or afterwards, between the plaintiff and Venter, and if it affected Venter individually or not.

Daniel Kruger, the plaintiff, stated that the defendant Venter was also living on the farm. Venter and Naude were in partnership at that time. The farm was used for the stock belonging to the partnership. The defendant Venter himself made out an account dated February 3, 1904, but it was not actually written until a later date. At the meeting of creditors in the estate of Venter and Naude, and before that meeting Venter wrote him an account, and later on he wrote out the account erroneously dated February 3. In March, 1903, he supplied this partnership with certain sheep and goats. The sheep, which were actually sold to Venter, were sent to Johannesburg to be sold. The goats remained, and were disposed of by the assignee. Witness looked upon Venter as the owner of the farm. Witness's horses were sent to Willowbank, which belonged to the partnership, and where Naude lived. It was intended that the horses were to be sent to Bechuanaland, but they were never despatched. He never was paid any money over these transactions. After the assignment he got a horse, cow, and calf from Venter, which he set off against the account. He went as a creditor to the meeting on the occasion of the assignment, and voted, but he was never asked to sign the deed of assignment. When he asked for his dividend, he was informed that his name was not on the list of creditors. Afterwards Venter and he made an arrangement by which if witness lent him £100 he was to get 7s. 6d. in the £, and in addition the defendant's household furniture. The assignee wrote saying that his name was not on the list of creditors, as Venter had paid him. When he found he could not get his dividend he cancelled the arrangement he had made with him. Witness bought the horse from Venter, and credited the partnership for the amount. Naude had never made any claim for the horse.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: He had no other transactions with the partnership, which was really a partnership in the speculation of cattle. He worked as a labourer for Venter and Naude. While witness was on commando the military did not take the sheep. Witness went on commando in December, 1902.

[Hopley, J.: There wasn't so much danger then? You are talking about after peace.]

The witness explained that he joined the forces about six months after the outbreak of war. Continuing, under cross-examination, he said the sheep remained with his father during the war. He paid his father with the £60 received from Venter. He had a pocket-book containing a record of the proceedings, but it was not with him. He never had any dealings with Naude. The first time he spoke to Naude about the debt was when he put the matter in his attorney's hands. Naude came to witness, and wanted to give him four erven of land. At the examination he voted for 7s. 6d. in the £, but he was not prepared to accept it now. A messenger of the Court came to the farm to attach Venter's furniture, but did not do so when witness assured him that it did not belong to Venter. Witness thought Naude was present when the agreement was signed.

Re-examined by Mr. Burton: Naude wanted to settle with him by giving him some erven; that offer was made before Venter.

Johan Adriaan Venter, owner of the farm Braakfontein, stated that he sold part of the farm to Venter and Naude. He never got paid. The assignee offered him the farm back for the purchase price, plus £300 for improvements. The defendants held everything in partnership. The plaintiff had stock of his own.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: He bought wool twice from the plaintiff, who had a couple of hundred sheep, which he heard he bought from his father. Witness paid the plaintiff about £50 for doing wire fencing work. It was only after the assignment that they began to have private estates.

Johannes Louw, farmer, stated that he was up at Philip's Town in 1903, and saw the plaintiff, who worked under witness for a time. Venter told witness that he would pay the plaintiff himself. The plaintiff at that time had sheep which ran separately.

Carl Nicholaas Kruger, farmer, of Fauresmith, O.R.C., stated that Naude and Venter were in partnership on a speculation in stock. Shortly before the winter of 1903, the plaintiff had sheep to witness's knowledge. While he was on the farm he saw the sale between Venter and the plaintiff. Witness assisted in sending the sheep to Johannesburg.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: When he heard the sale take place, although he was anxious to pay sixpence more for the sheep, he did not make any offer.

Petrus Jacobus Venter, one of the defendants in the case, stated that he made out the account headed "Philip's Town, 3rd February." The account was really made out in March. He made out the second account to replace an insufficient one that had been made out before the assignment. The difference was an item for £55 for a cow calf and two horses. The plaintiff cancelled the agreement as to the furniture. He bought the 198 sheep for the firm of Venter and Naude. The partnership got the benefit of the sheep transaction, and his bankbook would show it. Kruger bought the horses, and sold them to the firm. Venter sent them to Kimberley. With regard to the £15, the partnership got the benefit, because witness used it on the business of the firm in going to Johannesburg.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: When the estate was assigned, Mr. Coetzee made out a schedule of the debts. Witness and Naude were there, and swore to the schedule. On February 5, 1904, Mr. Coetzee made a list of witness's debts, and witness signed it. Witness did not mention Kruger's debt as it did not occur to him. He did not know what was in the list.

[Hopley, J.: Is it your habit to swear to the accuracy of things you know nothing about?]

I trusted to Mr. Coetzee.

Cross-examination continued: Kruger mentioned the debt to Naude before witness. The list was drawn out so that Kruger could get the money, and then witness could get his children from Holland. Witness often told Naude of the debt, and Naude said it was a lawful debt. Witness was at present a convict, sentenced to two years and a half for having stolen cattle in his possession.

Mr. Jones: Who were some of the owners?

[Hopley, J.: What is the object of the question; he is not being tried for that.]

No, my lord; but we want to find out the ins and outs of it.

[Hopley, J.: I don't see the relevancy of the question. Are you suggesting that the partnership account should benefit by this transaction in stolen cattle?]

Witness further stated that if everything had gone on all right, he would have paid for the fencing and the repairs to the house himself.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Isaac Naude stated he was in partnership with Venter as a live-stock buyer from 1899 to February, 1904, when he found at the meeting of creditors that he could not meet his claims. Witness made the money, and Venter lost it. Kruger was present at the meeting, and witness knew of no claim on his behalf. After Venter was arrested, witness heard for the first time of the plaintiff's claim. Venter had bought a lot of other stuff for the firm without witness's knowledge. On his claim in reconvention, witness could not personally claim £25 for the horse, but the assigned estate should be credited with that amount.

The defendant Naude (under cross-examination) stated that before the war Braakfontein was not used largely for grazing the partnership sheep. The £300 for improvements went to the benefit of the assignment. Witness carried on operations at Willowbank, three miles away. After the war, witness concluded that the business was no good, but he did not take the trouble to dissolve the partnership. In ten months Venter lost £17,000, and during that time he overwhelmed witness with lies. After having ceased operations with Venter, several accounts came into witness on behalf of the partnership. The plaintiff did not present a claim at the assignment; all the others did. The plaintiff was clearly a creditor on the promissory note, but the note was not presented. After the meeting, the plaintiff told witness that Venter owed him money. He was not aware of any offer to settle plaintiff's account by giving him some ostriches. Witness might have offered the plaintiff the erven at Petrusville. All he had left was a few erven and furniture. Lately he had been sued by Mr. Steytler, and there was a return of nulla bona, because his family was away.

Re-examined by Mr. Jones: The horse that was claimed in reconvention was sold at the sale of the assets to J. A. Venter for £25, but the horse was not delivered; Kruger had now possession of it.

Further cross-examined: Witness knew that the plaintiff had the horse, although the assignee claimed it from several other people.

L. J. Koetze, attorney-at-law, Philip's Town, stated that in January last year witness took steps to call a meeting of creditors. There were a few creditors who would not accept 7s. 6d. in the £, and the defendant, Naude, settled with them. The plaintiff was present at the meeting, and never said a word. He did not produce any papers, nor did he put in the promissory note. In June the plaintiff called on witness and asked for 7s. 6d. in the £, but witness refused to give him this. Naude said it was a bogus claim, and Venter said the plaintiff was "kek." Naude was not mentioned in the sale of Braakfontein from J. A. Venter to P. J. Venter. At the sale of the assets witness sold a cream-coloured horse for £25. P. J. Venter was to deliver the horse to J. A. Venter, but he failed to do so, and witness subsequently saw the horse in possession of the plaintiff.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He was perfectly certain that J. A. Venter was at the sale. Naude was wrong when he said the cart was sold to the same man. In his own account he only mentioned the sale of one horse to a P. J. Venter, but there was no mention of another horse. It was not a fact that he sold the horse to P. J. Venter, the defendant, and could not get the money out of him. It must have been a clerical error. Witness was convinced absolutely that the plaintiff's was a bogus claim.

Mr. Jones closed his case.

Hopley, J.: The defendant Naude said he was anxious to get out of the partnership, but he did not take any active steps to bring about a dissolution. The only point in the case is to whether the plaintiff had a genuine claim against this partnership. In the peculiar and somewhat suspicious circumstances, the explanation given by the plaintiff is the only one possible he could have given, and it is difficult to believe that the independent witnesses for the plaintiff would come to the Court to commit deliberate perjury. Disallowing some of the smaller items, there will be judgment for the plaintiff for £116 15s., the defendants jointly and severally to pay the costs, the plaintiff declared a necessary witness.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

TRIAL CAUSES.

CLAREMONT MUNICIPALITY (1905.
V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. (Mar. 7th.

Rating of Crown property—Railway buildings—Occupation by individuals.

The Railway Department having to enlarge the Railway station at C., bought a cottage about 400 yards from the station, not on Railway property, for the stationmaster, who proceeded to occupy it as his private residence.

Held, that the cottage and grounds so occupied were liable to be rated under Acts 36 of 1891 and 19 of 1892.

At the time when the Government took over the Railway there was a cottage at a crossing in N. on Railway property immediately adjoining the land, which was then occupied and continued afterwards to be occupied by a gatekeeper, whose duty it was to open and close the gates for persons wishing by night or by day to cross the Railway line.

Held, that the gatekeeper's cottage was not liable to be rated under the above Acts.

This was an action brought by the Claremont Municipal Council against the Colonial Government to recover the sum of £18 4s. 7d., alleged to be due upon rates for 1904 from defendants as owners of certain property occupied by officials or employees of the Railway Department.

The declaration set out that certain immovable property, belonging to the Colonial Government, was within the Claremont Municipality, and under the control and administration of the Commissioner of Works. It consisted of (1) land and dwelling-house in Bath-road, occupied as a private residence by the stationmaster, and valued for rating purposes at £700; (2) land and dwelling-house in Mill-street, occupied as a private house by a platelayer, and valued for rating at £450; (3) land and two dwelling-houses situated off Camp Ground-road, occupied and valued at £200 and £400 respectively. Save the stationmaster, all the occupiers paid rent, and it had been deemed necessary by the department that they should occupy those houses to expedite their attendance on their duties as railway officials. The Municipality had levied owners' rates on the said properties for 1904, and there was now overdue a sum of £18 4s. 7d. In accordance with the provisions of Act 36, 1891, and Act 19, 1902, the properties were beneficially occupied by individuals in their private capacity, and were not railway buildings. The Government refused to pay the sum of £18 4s. 7d., or any part thereof. This amount was now claimed.

Defendants, in their plea, admitted the formal paragraphs 1, 2, 3, and 4. They also admitted paragraph 5, and said, further, that it was necessary that for the proper performance of their duties the said officials should occupy the said houses. Defendants also stated that the said houses were railway buildings in terms of the statutes referred to, and that the Colonial Government was entitled to exemption from paying owners' rates thereon.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Bisset) for plaintiffs. Mr. H. Jones (with him Mr. Nightingale) for defendant.

Mr. Schreiner stated that the plaintiffs had received a letter from the Government attorneys, dated the 15th February, stating that they found that the premises mentioned in paragraph 4 of section (c) of the declaration were occupied by a gatekeeper and checker, and not by two gatekeepers as stated therein. They admitted liability in regard to the house occupied by the checker. They (the attorneys) found that they were in error in stating that the stationmaster was the only official who did not pay rent, and that they found that the gatekeeper did not pay rent. Mr. Schreiner went on to say that there were now therefore three properties in relation to which the claim of the Municipality was made. The correspondence that would be put in would show that there had been ten properties rated on which the Government at first refused to pay, except one in Palm Boom-road, which was admitted. Afterwards the Government admitted five others, and then four remained upon which the declaration was filed, and which had now been reduced to three.

Mr. Howel Jones put in a draft of an amendment of the plea, in accordance with the letter of the defendants' attorneys.

Mr. Schreiner said that he should not object to the amendment of the plea. He thought perhaps his learned friend on behalf of the Government would admit that the rate had been duly levied, and assessed, leaving open only the question as to whether the property named was exempt.

Mr. Jones acquiesced.

Mr. Schreiner said that the issue would now be narrowed down to the construction of the Acts 36 of 1891 and 19 of 1892. Section 4 of the former Act provided that no rates should be levied by or be payable to a municipality upon any line of railways and buildings situated in any part of the Colony belonging to the Colonial Government. In the following session of Parliament a further Act was passed which expunged section 4 of the Act of 1891, the object, said Mr. Schreiner, being to make the law general in relation to this matter. A proviso, however, appeared in the Act of 1892, as follows: "Provided that the term 'railway buildings' shall not apply to such buildings as are beneficially occupied by individuals in their private capacity."

John Samuel Merrington, valuator of the Claremont Municipality, said that the stationmaster's residence was not situate within the expropriated property of the Railway Department, and it was immediately adjoined by four cottages, on which the Government paid rates, the whole being comprised in one estate purchased by the Government. There was a dwelling-house in Mill-street beyond the expropriated property of the Government. This was occupied by a platelayer. Then there was a dwelling-house situate close to the line occupied by a checker. There was another property near Newlands Station occupied by the gatekeeper at the crossing to Camp Ground-road. Witness did not know how that property came into the hands of the Government, whether it was in the original expropriation, or it had been a piece of Crown land.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: He had formerly been secretary of the Council up to 1898, and during his term of office rates were not levied on platelayers' and gatekeepers' houses, because they were Government property. He then thought that they were barred by the Act of 1882.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

Alfred James Parsons, district engineer, proved a plan of the stationmaster's residence, and adjoining property. The ganger's house at Newlands was, he said, practically within the station yard, and about 100 feet from the line. The stationmaster's residence was about 1,200 feet from the station. He believed that the triangular piece of ground, on which the gatekeeper's cottage stood, belonged to the original expropriation.

Gowan Cresswell Clarke, chief traffic manager of the C.G.R., said that the land on which the stationmaster's house stood was bought to free the railway building at Claremont, and give greater accommodation for the travelling public. Up to that time the stationmaster had occupied part of the station building. It was desirable that the stationmaster should live as near the station as possible, because he was supposed to be always available, night or day, in case of fogs, accidents, or other emergencies. The principal purpose of the purchase was to get a site for the stationmaster's residence. Only one of the four houses adjoining was occupied, viz., by a porter of the Claremont Station. The porter was not bound to occupy that house. The particular platelayer occupying one of the houses named was a foreman, and should reside close at hand. As to the gatekeepers, it was most necessary that they should live as near as possible to the line. Witness had been in the Government service since 1878. The gatekeeper's cottage near Newlands Station seemed to him to be one of the old properties taken over when the line was expropriated.

Cross-examined: The Newlands stationmaster lived on the Hardwick Estate, a full ten minutes' walk from the station, but that was only a temporary expedient. They had plans made and ground laid out for a stationmaster's house quite close to the Newlands Station. The Claremont stationmaster did not pay rent; he had a salary and house allowed.

Harry Elliott, resident engineer of the Western System, C.G.R., said it was necessary that the platelayer near Newlands Station should live in close proximity to the line. If he refused to live in that house they would have to get another man who would. The gatekeepers should live close to the line, because they were really on duty the whole of the 24 hours.

Cross-examined: He should not say that the stationmaster at Claremont had not "beneficial occupation"; he should call it "enforced occupation."

[Do Villiers, C.J.: It may be both "beneficial" and "enforced."]

Alfred Wm. Bowers, stationmaster at Claremont, and Francis Kemp, gatekeeper, Newlands, also gave evidence.

Mr. Jones closed his case, and counsel were heard in argument.

Do Villiers, C.J.: A great deal of evidence has been given in this case, but the decision of the Court will depend mainly upon the construction of the Acts of Parliament relating to the rating of Government property. By the Act 45 of 1882 it was enacted that all land within any municipality shall be ratable property within the meaning of this Act, except as hereinafter stated." The exceptions, amongst others, were the property of Her Majesty or of the Colonial Government, which is unoccupied or used for public purposes, land in the occupation of the Government, or of any person or public body, and used for public purposes. Then, by the Act of 1891, there was a complete change of the policy of the Legislature in regard to the exemption of Crown property. The second section of Act 36 of 1891 enacted, "that from and after the taking effect of this Act any immovable property which is situated within the limits of any municipality or corporate town, and which is vested in Her Majesty the Queen, in her Colonial Government, or occupied by the Colonial Government for public purposes, shall, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, be liable to be rated for Municipal purposes by the Council of such Municipality or town, to the same extent and in the same manner as if the said property had been owned or occupied, as the case may be, by a private person." There were certain exceptions introduced by the 4th section, in which it was provided that rates should be levied by and payable to the Municipality "except any line of railway and railway buildings situate in any part of the Colony." Now, the first question is, independently of the Act of 1892, to which I shall presently refer, would any of the buildings in question fairly come within the designation of a line of railway or railway buildings? Clearly, they do not form part of the railway. Do they form part of the railway buildings? As to the stationmaster's residence, it clearly was not a railway building. It was not included within the original expropriation; it did not form part of the station; it was purchased by the Railway Department because the stationmaster's quarters, forming part of the station, were required for the purpose of enlarging the station, and it was some 1,200 feet, I understand, distant from the station. But, in no sense of the word, did that building ever constitute a railway building. Then, in regard to the ganger's cottage, that also is wholly separated. It is also called a platelayer's cottage. That is wholly separate property, acquired by the department after the original construction of the railway, and that also, in my opinion, cannot in any sense be considered a railway building. But the cottage occupied by the gatekeeper appears to me to fairly come within the designation of a railway building. It is essential to have a cottage at that particular place, so that there should be a person in the immediate vicinity at the beck and call of those who wish to cross the rails, and it is admitted also that this cottage formed part of the land taken over by the Government. I take it that it was really expropriated for the purpose of placing this gatekeeper's cottage upon it, and that this cottage was so essential a part of the working of the railway, so indispensable to the working of the railway, that it may fairly be considered as one of the railway buildings taken over by the Cape Government. Now, the next question is whether the Act of 1892 in any way affects the decision of the present case. The 3rd section of Act 19 of 1892 contains this proviso: "That the term 'railway buildings' shall not apply to such buildings as are beneficially occupied by individuals in their private capacity." I am clearly of opinion that the intention of this proviso was not in any way to add to the exemptions, but to define them. In the Act of 1891 there was a general proviso, which I have already read, that the property of the Crown and the property of the Colonial Government shall be liable to be rated for municipal purposes, in the same manner as if the property was owned or occupied, as the case may be, by a private person. Then there was the exception, and, in my opinion, the proviso to the third section of Act 19 of 1892 was intended to make it clear that the exception of "railway buildings" shall not be construed so widely as to include "such buildings as are occupied by individuals in their private capacity." Now, take the stationmaster's residence. In my opinion, it is "beneficially occupied" by an individual, viz., the stationmaster, and it is occupied by him in his private capacity. There is nothing official in connection with the occupation of that building. It is not a "railway building," and does not require any special care on his part. He occupies it as a private individual, and although it is a matter of convenience for him as stationmaster that he should be near the station, yet he still occupies that property in his private capacity. In my opinion, therefore, the stationmaster's house, which is entirely outside the station buildings, is liable to be rated. The same remark applied to the platelayer's cottage. Then, in regard to the gatekeeper's cottage, it is just a doubtful point with me whether this proviso was not intended to render such a building liable to be rated, but, upon the whole, I have come to the conclusion that, seeing that it came fairly within the designation of "railway buildings" before the Act of 1892 was passed, and seeing also that the gatekeeper is there at the call night and day of persons wishing to cross over the railway, it may be held that his occupation is not in his private capacity, but in a public capacity. I consider, therefore, that the action should fail in regard to the claim for a rate upon the gatekeeper's cottage. The result, therefore, of the case will be that judgment will be entered for the plaintiffs for £14 ls. 3d., with costs.

VILANDER CONCESSIONS V. (1905.
COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. (Mar. 7th.

Concession—Judgment of Concession Court—Declaration of rights.

The chief of a native territory made a concession to C. of the right to prospect, dig for and convert to his own use all precious stones and minerals found within the limits of the concession. C. ceded his rights to the plaintiffs. The British Government annexed the territory and appointed a Court, under a Proclamation, giving such Court full judicial powers to decide upon the validity of all concessions with an appeal to the Privy Council. The Court allowed the claim to the concession in question, but "subject to all laws and regulations of British Bechuanaland relating to mines and minerals, and otherwise in force in the said territory." There was no appeal against this judgment.

Held, in an action for a declaration of rights, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any declaration inconsistent with the laws and regulations in force in the territory at the time when the judgment of the Commission was given.

This was a special case stated by the Vilander Concessions Syndicate and the Colonial Government for the opinion of the Court.

The special case was stated in the following terms:

1. The plaintiffs in this suit are Harry Mosenthal, George Joseph Samuel Mosenthal, and William Mosenthal, carrying on business at Port Elizabeth in this colony under the style or firm of Adolph Mosenthal and Company; Wilhelm Heinrich Liebermann, Charlotte Paulina Bellstedt, in her capacity as executrix testamentary in the estate of the late Johann Christoph Bellstedt and Dirk Elise Vreede, carrying on business at Port Elizabeth aforesaid as Liebermann, Bellstedt and Company; Oscar Arnold Arndt and Carl Johannes Cohn, carrying on business at Hamburg in Germany under the style of Arndt and Cohn; and the Consolidated Rand Rhodesia Trust and General Exploration Company, Limited, a company duly registered in London with limited liability, the successors in title, in respect of the matters herein in suit of one Emil Castens; the said parties being associated together in respect of the concessions, rights, claims, interest, property, and title hereinafter referred to and herein in suit, under the style or firm of the Vilander Concessions Syndicate, hereinafter termed the "Syndicate," and being as such syndicate the successors in title in respect of the matters herein in suit of one Adolph Heinrich Carstensen hereinafter referred to.

2. The defendant is the Honourable Arthur John Fuller, in his capacity as the Secretary for Agriculture, and as such representing the Government of this colony.

3. Before, during, and after the period commencing with the month of November, 1889, and terminating in April, 1890, one David Vilander (hereinafter termed the "Chief") was the Chief of the Meir and Kalahari (hereinafter termed the "tribe"), a native tribe occupying and lawfully and peaceably possessing a certain extent of territory (hereinafter termed the "territory") in the country or land known as Bechuanaland and the Kalahari.

4. Over the said country a protectorate had been established by Her late Majesty Queen Victoria in her Imperial Government; and therein, and subject to such protectorate, the territory was an independent protected State, and the said Vilander was the true and rightful chief thereof, duly possessed of and exercising rights of sovereignty in respect of the territory of the tribe, and, clothed as such chief, exercising such sovereign rights with the concurrence of his Raad with all right, authority, and power to grant land and to make concessions in regard to mineral rights, and in respect of the country or territory occupied by him and the people or tribe under him.

5. On or about the 22nd November, 1889, an agreement in writing was duly entered into between one Adolph Heinrich Carstensen, then of Vryburg, in British Bechuanaland, and the chief, whereby, on the conditions and for the consideration set forth in the said agreement, certain mineral concession and prospecting rights were granted to the said Carstensen. A copy of the said agreement is hereto annexed marked "A." The said agreement is hereinafter termed "the concession."

6. Thereafter, on or about the 10th April, 1890, the concession being then still of full force and effect, a further agreement in writing was duly entered into between the same parties for the like purposes and under the like conditions and provisions as those obtaining in the concession, but for an increased consideration and in respect of and throughout a more extended area. A copy of the said further agreement is hereto annexed marked "B," the said further agreement being hereinafter termed "the further concession."

7. On the 21st January, 1890, the said Carstensen, for value absolutely sold, ceded, assigned, transferred, conveyed, and set over to a certain syndicate, termed the Vilander Concession Syndicate, or its trustees for the time being, all his right, title, estate, interest, profit, property, claim or demand whatsoever in and to the concession, and in and to all rights and privileges conferred upon him thereunder, together with any documents of title or otherwise in anywise relating or having reference thereto. The said syndicate is that mentioned in the first paragraph hereof, and the plaintiffs constitute the said syndicate.

8. Thereafter in or about the month of August, 1890, the said Carstensen, for value ceded, assigned, transferred, and set over to the said syndicate all his right, title, estate, interest, profit, property, claim or demand whatsoever in and to the further concession in and to all rights and privileges granted to him thereunder, and thereafter on the 4th April, 1893, formally ratified such cession and assignment, and thereby again ceded, assigned, transferred and set over to the syndicate or its trustees for the time being all his right, title, interest, estate, profit, property, claim or demand in and to the further concession, and in and to all rights and privileges granted to him thereunder.

9. By virtue of the above concessions and cessions the syndicate became and was and is now entitled to claim, have, exercise and enjoy all the right, title, estate, interest, profit, property, privileges, claim, or demand of what kind soever which, or the right to claim, was vested in or passed by the said Carstensen.

10. The sum of £500 agreed to be paid annually by the concessionaire as the consideration for the concessions was paid to the Chief Vilander up to the 5th May, 1891, being the date of the annexation of his country to British Bechuanaland, and was thereafter from time to time paid to the said Vilander up to the time of his death, and thereafter to his executors, but the Government does not recognise the validity of any payment made after the 5th May, 1891, aforesaid. No amounts under the concessions and no fees or licence moneys have been paid either to the Government of the former Crown Colony of British Bechuanaland since 5th May, 1891, or to the Cape Government since the annexation of the said territory to this colony in 1895.

11. By Proclamation No. 106, B.B., 1891, Her Majesty's Sovereignty was proclaimed over the territory to the west of British Bechuanaland, known as Bechuanaland and the Kalahari, in which the territory referred to in this case was included, and by Proclamation No. 120, B.B., 1891, provision was made for the law to be administered therein.

12. In terms of Proclamation No. 159, B.B., 1893, a Court styled "The British Bechuanaland Concession Court" was constituted and established in order to inquire into and decide upon the validity of and scope of claims founded upon grants of land or mineral or other concessions in the territory referred to in paragraph 11.

13. Thereafter, on the 1st September, 1893, and subsequent days, the said Court duly sat to inquire into and decide on the claims advanced before it by the trustees for the syndicate in respect of the concession and further concession, and to hear evidence adduced in support thereof or otherwise, the Crown Prosecutor appearing on behalf of the Government of British Bechuanaland.

14. Thereafter, on the 7th December, 1893, the said claim was duly granted and allowed, as will appear from a copy of the judgment hereto annexed and marked "E."

15. Under the provisions of the "British Bechuanaland Annexation Act, 1895," British Bechuanaland became annexed to this colony, and section 30 of the Act maintained the provisions of Proclamation No. 169, B.B., 1893, and preserved the jurisdiction of the British Bechuanaland Concession Court.

16. By section 21 of the said Act it was provided that all liabilities of the Governor of the annexed territory at the time of the said annexation should be deemed to be liabilities of the Governor of this colony.

17. On divers occasions, both before and after the said annexation, grants were issued in respect of land in the territory prior to the annexation by the Governor of British Bechuanaland and thereafter by the Governor of this colony, and therein the right to minerals or precious stones was reserved to the Government, as will appear on reference to the terms of the "conditions" inserted in the said grants and hereto annexed, marked respectively "F" and "G."

18. The syndicate has duly sought to obtain from the Government recognition of its rights, and has maintained that such reservations are unlawful, but the Government has refused to recognise the rights of the syndicate in respect of the concession or further concession and maintains that it is entitled to make such reservations for its own benefit.

19. The plaintiffs contend that the concession and further concession are and have been of full force and effect and binding upon the Government, and that they are entitled to have their rights in, arising out of, and under the said concession and further concession, declared accordingly by this Honourable Court, and to obtain an order declaring that as to all grants already issued with such reservations the Colonial Government is bound to recognise the said reservations as made for and on behalf of the plaintiffs, and directing the Government as to any further grants of land in the said territory to include a condition subjecting such grants to the rights of the plaintiffs and their successors or assignees under the aforesaid concessions.

20. The defendant contends that the plaintiffs are not entitled in the premises to the relief claimed. The parties pray for judgment in accordance with their respective contentions with costs.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. McGregor) for plaintiffs; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Nightingale) for the defendant.

Mr. Schreiner said that Carstensen conceded all his rights to the syndicate whom the plaintiffs represented. He conceded his rights under the first concession of the 21st January, 1890, and subsequently, in August, 1890, he made a second concession to the syndicate. He confirmed that second concession by a document dated the 2nd April, 1893. By Proclamation No. 106 of 1891 the territory of David Vilander was annexed to and formed, after that time, part of Her Majesty's dominions. Proclamations 120 and 123 made provision for the law to be in force in and for the civil administration of the territory. The concessions thus granted and ceded were dealt with afterwards by a Court, which was established under Proclamation No. 169, referred to in paragraph 12 of the special case, called the British Bechuanaland Concessions Court. That Court sat in September, 1893, and decided on the claims advanced before it by the trustees of the syndicate, in respect of those concessions of Carstensen, and it heard evidence. The Crown Prosecutor appeared on behalf of the Government of British Bechuanaland.

The judgment of the Concessions Court, dated December 1, 1893, was in the following terms: "Claim No. 6.—A. H. Carstensen, mineral rights over the whole of Vilander's country. The entire claim as proved granted, subject to all laws and regulations of British Bechuanaland relating to mines and the minerals and otherwise in force in the said territory."

De Villiers, C.J., asked Mr. Schreiner if he accepted the judgment given by the Bechuanaland Concessions Court.

Mr. Schreiner said that he did.

[De Villiers, C.J.: "Subject to the regulations, etc.," as stated in the judgment?]

Mr. Schreiner said that, of course, they could not be given judgment with one hand and have it taken away with the other. They were before the Court that day because the Government refused to recognise their rights, and because the Government said they reserved the minerals for their own benefit. He submitted that it was for his lordship to say that the Government was entirely wrong in its attitude towards the plaintiff syndicate. Here the Government, without going to Parliament, without a new Act, proceeded to use certain forms of language, dealing with the land as though it were Crown land, open to be dealt with as they pleased. It never could be denied that the title to that land was, after annexation, in the Crown, but it was not waste Crown land, Crown land of the ordinary character; it was Crown land, subject to certain rights, and to rights confirmed by a competent court in 1893.

Sir H. Juta said that the sovereign rights of the chief and his heirs and successors were retained under the cession. The cession to Carstensen was an imperium in imperio of the widest character, and hence it was of the greatest public importance that there should be a decision as to the validity of this concession. The agreements provided that, in addition to the sum of £500 paid annually, there should be paid a sum of 5s. per month. The agreement specially was that if the payments were not paid for a period of three months, this device came to an end. The contention of the defendants was that by the annexation His Majesty, in the Colonial Government, had stepped into the shoes of Vilander. The payments had not put into possession, the defendants have retained possession of the site and building, and still retain, and they have never at any time given up, nor has any one of them ever given up possession.

5. They deny that they or any of them at any time trespassed upon the said premises, but they admit that on or about the 5th November the first and seventh defendants, acting for themselves and for the remaining defendants, closed the front door opening on to Riebeek-street, and nailed up the access to other unfinished portions of the building, and continued to retain possession of the building, and they say that, by reason of the matters herein-after referred to, they were in law justified in their said actions. Save as above, they deny the allegations in paragraph 7.

6. They admit paragraphs 8, 9, 10, and 11, save that as to paragraph 9, they deny that they or any of them dealt with the premises wrongfully or unlawfully.

7. As to paragraph 12, they deny that the plaintiffs have sustained any damages for which the defendants are liable.

Wherefore they pray that the plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed, with costs.

The plaintiffs' replication was general.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner) for the plaintiffs. Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington) for the defendants.

Mr. Searle said that he found there were certain little inaccuracies in the declaration. One of the defendants, Jenkins, had not, as a matter of fact, proved preferently against the estate. The seventh defendant had not proved at all, and the third had now filed a concurrent claim. Turnbull and Bygolt now said that they wished to withdraw from the action, and that they had been joined as defendants under a misapprehension as to their position.

John Edwin Paul Close gave particulars as to the surrender of the estate, and the meetings of creditors and election of trustees. He said that he found there were bonds against the property to the amount of £38,000 odd. There was other immovable property in the estate, but it was all bonded, and he did not think that there would be anything to be distributed to concurrent creditors out of this. There were no movables to speak of in the estate. Witness spoke of the meeting of Israelson's creditors held early in September at his (witness's) office, when Israelson had got into arrear with his payments. At that time Israelson hoped to be able to raise money from Mr. Gourlay, but Mr. Gourlay did not advance any more money. Before witness was called in, Mr. Gourlay had advanced £3,000. There were other people besides the defendants working on the premises at the time the building operations came to an end. Outside the claims made by the defendants, there were claims amounting to £5,000, largely for materials supplied for the building. The architect, for instance, had a claim for £1,500. The plaintiffs claimed damages, because they had been prevented from selling the buildings at an early date. The interest on the bonds had been running, and the sale had had to stand over, to the detriment of some of the other creditors. He computed that they had lost at least a month in selling the property, in consequence of the position assumed by the defendants. The interest on the bonds amounted to £2,463 a year. There was also insurance running, at the rate of £30 a month.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How is it that you did not apply to the Court for an interdict against the defendants?]

I had no locus standi at the time.

[De Villiers, C.J.: When were you appointed trustee?]

On the 25th November.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Well after that? You claim damages by reason of the acts of the defendants. Why did you not take steps to interdict the defendants?]

Mr. Searle: I am instructed that there was a suggestion made to the defendants that we should bring the matter on motion, but they did not agree to that.

Witness: They understood all along, my lord, that we were fighting the case.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Do you press the claim for damages, Mr. Searle?]

Mr. Searle said he understood that the plaintiffs thought the estate should be awarded damages.

Witness: I am not anxious to press the claim for damages. We feel sympathetic towards these creditors, but we don't see why they should be creditors, to the exclusion of the others.

David Israelson, the insolvent, gave evidence as to the erection of the Flat Iron, and his difficulties in financing the work.

By the Court: He understood that Mr. Black's men stopped work because he could not pay them. During a period of six weeks they did no work whatever. They left their material on the premises.

Witness (continuing his evidence) said that a day or two after he had given notice of his intention to surrender, Black and Bloom came to the premises and said that they were closing up the premises. They proceeded to close the premises. Jenkins and Co. finished all their work about three months, perhaps more, before he gave notice to surrender.

Mr. Schreiner said he admitted that Jenkins and Co. were out of possession.

Witness, in further evidence, said that Kinnes stopped working as soon as witness told him he had no money. Lewis worked for about a week after the meeting of creditors at Mr. Close's office. Bloom left shortly after the meeting. Each workman supplied his own tools. When the lift was brought by Messrs. Govey and Co., Mr. Shaw, their representative, called, and saw him, and he referred him to Mr. Close. Mr. Shaw came back, and the lift was placed by Mr. Shaw in the passage. Mr. Shaw got into the premises by taking out the hoarding. Witness had a man named Monty on the building acting as caretaker. Monty had now left the Colony, and witness did not know his address.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He had no clerk of works of his own on the premises. He had four or five men sleeping there, whose duty it was to look after the premises. He believed Bloom also had a man there. He did not call for tenders for the work. He took the men to the place and showed them what there was to be done.

De Villiers, C.J., intimated that he wished the parties would confine themselves to the simple issue whether defendants had possession of the building at any time, and if so, whether they subsequently lost it.

Witness, re-examined, said that Monty continued on the premises up to the date of witness's insolvency. Bloom had a man there.

By the Court: Bloom took on as a contractor for £4,500 all the carpenters' work, and undertook to look after all the works. Witness supplied all the timber. He actually paid to Bloom £3,850 or £3,865. Bloom had to look after the work generally. Bloom was not "over" Black's, but if there was anything that was wrong, Bloom had to report to witness. He did not know whether he should call Bloom a clerk of works. Bloom was the head man of all the works, to protect witness's interests.

Charles Frederick Shaw, of Messrs. Govey and Co., gave evidence with regard to a visit he paid to the premises on the 14th or 15th October to deposit a lift. He found no one in charge of the premises. There was no work going on. He only found builders' refuse about the place.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

James Black, of Harris and Black, said he had never known that Bloom was supervising their work. He was not aware that Bloom had anything to do with their work. On the 2nd September, Israelson owed his firm £1,066. Witness had a Kafir on the premises until the 22nd September. Scaffolding was taken away that had been done with, but they left sufficient to complete the job. Witness went in and out of the premises after the 2nd September as he pleased. He had left cement and lime there. Witness also spoke of the measures taken to close the premises. As to the man Monty, he knew that Monty had been a labourer on the building, and that he was afterwards employed in the bar.

Abraham Bloom, another of the defendants, said that he was the contractor for carpentry. He had nothing in writing relating to the contract. He was to superintend all the work up to the first floor. Monty was not the caretaker of the building. Monty was there just at the beginning, and asked witness if he could finish a room so that he could live there. Witness had told Mr. Close that he would wait until the work had been finished, but that was subject to other money being raised that had been mentioned by Israelson. Witness had a man staying on the premises until they were locked up.

Cross-examined: It was part of his duty to see that all the work went on right. That was a friendly arrangement, and not something for which he was specially paid. Witness kept no books at all. He had not claimed against the estate, because he thought there would be nothing for the concurrent creditors. He had eight rooms locked up, of which he held the keys. Black and Lewis had locked up other rooms.

Further evidence was given by

Geo. Kinnes, the plumbing and drainage contractor, who claimed £196 against the insolvent estate; Thomas Smith, book-keeper of the last witness; Joel Lewis, painter, who had a claim for £50; Morris Tamse, who supplied labour for the brickwork, and who claimed £275; Henry Frank Wm. Rohr, manager for Jenkins and Co., asphalters, who claimed £80.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Postea (March 11th).

The Court intimated that they would first hear counsel for the defendants.

Mr. Schreiner admitted that the title to the property which was in the defendants' possession was in the trustee, but he submitted that no provision of the Insolvent Ordinance in any way allowed the trustee to have a better right than the owner of the property could have had. The trustee in this matter was but the successor of the owner of the property, who was Israelson. The action was one for ejectment, based upon the seventh paragraph of the declaration, which set out that certain acts had been done by the defendants in locking and boarding up the property. The essence of the case for plaintiffs was that these acts constituted wrongful and unlawful trespass on the part of the defendants. One important point was that the insolvent (in reply to a question put by the Court) said that he told the defendants, when they said they would lock up the place, that they could do as they liked. Possession was, on the insolvent's own admission, taken by his consent by Black and Blum on behalf of all the defendants. Counsel went on to contend that the defendants, in doing the work that they did, were not looking merely to the credit of Israelson; they were looking to their lien on the buildings. They did, he submitted, all that a group of persons could have done to secure real possession of the building. They locked up the premises, nailed up certain parts, took certain rooms, and had people sleeping there. Counsel did not claim that there was exclusive possession of the building by the defendants; he contended, however, that even a single contractor could not have exclusive possession. As far as Jenkins's claim was concerned, it was hard on him, but he had given up his claim. With the other defendants, however, it was not so. Counsel adduced a number of authorities in support of his contentions. He quoted Voet (20-2-28) Maasdorp, Nathan, and Van Leeuwen, and cited Brown's Assignees v. Pote (4 E.D.C., 50) and Stern v. Morom (13 C.T.R., 802). He proceeded to state the position of the different defendants. Harris and Black had a large contract, but there was still an amount owing to them of £1,066. Their materials were there, as well as certain of their tools, their signboard was in one of the windows, and they had locked one of the rooms. Turnbull and Bigott had withdrawn from the action. As to Jenkins and Co., they had been paid half of their charges, and had been promised the other half in three months. Jenkins had thereupon gone away from the premises. Counsel admitted that he could not press Jenkins's claim to have had possession of the building. Kinness was still on the premises, and had been ready to continue the work. Kinness had been associated with Harris and Black in what was done after the insolvency of Israelson. He had a claim of £196. Counsel also contended that Tamsey, Lewis and Blum clearly had possession, along with the other defendants, of the building. He submitted that it had not been shown that the man "Monte," whom Israelson described as his caretaker, had any possession of the Flat Iron on behalf of the insolvent.

Without calling on Mr. Searle,

De Villiers, C. J.: The Legislature did not intend by the proviso to extend the rights of retention beyond the law that existed at the time the law was passed. The question was what was the law at the time the Act was passed? I think the proviso itself in a few words says that the law authorised the right of retention where there is actual possession. In the present case, therefore, I am clearly of opinion that the plaintiff had no such actual possession of the buildings as to entitle them to the right of retention. In the first place, all those who have been concerned, and were concerned, in the building of this property, are not before the Court. The foundations were laid by Israelson. Several workmen were engaged upon different parts of the work. But all the plaintiffs before the Court do not constitute all the parties who would have been entitled jointly to claim the possession of the whole of the property. I am therefore clearly of opinion that the actual possession required by law is actual possession of the whole property sought to be retained. None of these people had possession of the whole of this property, nor had they jointly possession of the whole of the property. It is true that some of them had rooms in which they kept their tools, but that was the sole purpose for which they took possession. As to Bloom, he had possession of more than one room, and he had keys of several rooms, but the relations between Bloom and Israelson were such that it was to be expected he would have some degree of control and authority over the buildings. He was not in the position of clerk of the works, but still he was in this position that if anything went wrong he would report to Israelson, and that such a man occupied certain rooms is just what one would expect. I am satisfied that Bloom never occupied or kept the keys of these rooms for the purpose of asserting a right of possession on behalf of all the persons who had been engaged upon the building of this house. When they saw that the man was unable to pay, they did not think it worth their while remaining on the buildings. It is true some odd tools were left about, but that does not make a person an occupier of the premises. Then, subsequently, when these people began to hear that they would lose their money, there was a conversation with Israelson, who said they could go on the premises if they liked. Then I think they not only had the keys of the rooms, but they put on a lock on one of the doors, and in that way obtained admission to the whole of the premises. But during the same period Israelson had possession, and Israelson had a person sleeping on the premises. Although he was a man in an inferior position, yet, still he was there asserting the right of the owner to some extent to the occupation to the whole of the premises. What was done afterwards does not amount to such a possession of the whole of the building, as to justify the Court in saying that the terms of this proviso had been complied with. There was no such actual possession of the whole of the property, in respect of which this retention is claimed, as to justify the Court in giving judgment for the defendants. The rooms were simply locked for the purpose of keeping their tools, and the occupation is not of such a nature as to give them a right of retention.

Their claim of retention extends over the whole of the unoccupied portion of these buildings, and that claim, in my opinion, fails altogether, and for these reasons judgment of the Court will be in terms of the prayers "A" and "C" of the declaration. As to the claim for damages, Mr. Close has stated that he does not press it, nor do I think even if pressed, the Court would be likely to award damages in the present case, seeing that no steps were taken by the trustee to assert the right of the estate against these people. The defendants are in an untenable position, and I think they must pay the costs.

GENERAL MOTION.

Ex parte ESTATE DE { 1905.
VILLIERS. { Mar. 6th.

Mr. Alexander moved, as a matter of urgency, for the appointment of a trustee in the insolvent estate of De Villiers and Co., of Stellenbosch. The trustee appointed at the first meeting had since died, and now the three creditors who proved at the second meeting were desirous that J. Smuts, who was a partner with the late trustee, should be appointed.

[Hopley, J.: Is this a competent way? Has it been done before? I think the proper way would be to hold a meeting and appoint a trustee.]

Mr. Alexander said it was done in this way to save expense.

Hopley, J., said if all the creditors had not consented he would not have felt entitled to make an order; but, as a matter of fact, everybody that could be affected by this order concurred in this application. He could see it would save expense. The person wished for by the creditors to replace the late trustee was practically the same person, as he was in business with him, and would be really the best man to realise the estate. He did not say this would be binding upon the Court in any future action in the Court. In this particular matter he felt it would be doing the best for all the parties to accede to the application. Order accordingly. Costs to come out of the estate.

At a later stage his Lordship said he had his doubts about granting such an order, and in granting it he took it that Mr. Alexander had looked into the law to see that there was nothing against it.

His attention had been called to the 52nd section of the Ordinance, and by that it was only competent for the Court to make an order for the preservation of the estate until a new trustee was appointed. The matter came suddenly before him, and Mr. Alexander ought to have called his attention to the section, but in all probability it escaped his attention. He was doubtful whether he could make such an order, and he would therefore now vary it by ordering that Mr. Smuts be appointed as trustee, with full powers, in the place of Mr. Bosman. (deceased), and proceedings to be forthwith taken to have a new trustee elected. This might land the parties in more costs than the proceedings this morning, but it is the law. The costs would come out of the estate.

TRIAL CAUSE.

KRUGER V. VENTER AND { 1905.
NAUDE. { Mar. 6th.
" 7th.

Partnership—Joint and several liability of partners.

This was an action to recover £182 5s., balance of account, for sheep and goats sold and delivered, money lent, and work done; also £24 on a promissory note. Provisional sentence and judgment had been obtained, and the promissory note paid.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was a farmer, residing in Philipstown, and the defendants were speculators, trading under the style of Venter and Naude. In 1903 and 1904 witness sold the partnership sheep, goats, and horses. A detailed account was submitted, showing a balance of £182 5s. The total amount of the account was £297 5s. Against that, amounts of £60 and £55 were credited.

The plea on the part of Naude set out that the transaction had nothing to do with the partnership. In February, 1904, the partnership estate was assigned. The plaintiff was fully aware of the proceedings, and put forward no claim. Naude claimed in reconvention £25 for a horse sold to plaintiff.

The replication set out that the plaintiff attended a meeting of creditors, but never signed any assignment deed. As to the horse, plaintiff said he bought the horse from Venter, not Naude. It was not the property of Naude, and he had nothing to do with the sale.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Van Zyl) was for the plaintiff, and Mr. P. Jones for the defendant Naude. The defendant Venter was not represented.

Mr. Burton explained that while there was abundant evidence to show Hopley, J.: The defendant Naude said he was anxious to get out of the partnership, but he did not take any active steps to bring about a dissolution. The only point in the case is to whether the plaintiff had a genuine claim against this partnership. In the peculiar and somewhat suspicious circumstances, the explanation given by the plaintiff is the only one possible he could have given, and it is difficult to believe that the independent witnesses for the plaintiff would come to the Court to commit deliberate perjury. Disallowing some of the smaller items, there will be judgment for the plaintiff for £116 15s., the defendants jointly and severally to pay the costs, the plaintiff declared a necessary witness.

TRIAL CAUSES.

CLAREMONT MUNICIPALITY (1905.
V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.) Mar. 7th.

Rating of Crown property—Railway buildings—Occupation by individuals.

The Railway Department having to enlarge the Railway station at C., bought a cottage about 400 yards from the station, not on Railway property, for the stationmaster, who proceeded to occupy it as his private residence.

Held, that the cottage and grounds so occupied were liable to be rated under Acts 36 of 1891 and 19 of 1892.

At the time when the Government took over the Railway there was a cottage at a crossing in N. on Railway property immediately adjoining the land, which was then occupied and continued afterwards to be occupied by a gatekeeper, whose duty it was to open and close the gates for persons wishing by night or by day to cross the Railway line.

Held, that the gatekeeper's cottage was not liable to be rated under the above Acts.

This was an action brought by the Claremont Municipal Council against the Colonial Government to recover the sum of £18 4s. 7d., alleged to be due upon rates for 1904 from defendants as owners of certain property occupied by officials or employees of the Railway Department.

The declaration set out that certain immovable property, belonging to the Colonial Government, was within the Claremont Municipality, and under the control and administration of the Commissioner of Works. It consisted of (1) land and dwelling-house in Bath-road, occupied as a private residence by the stationmaster, and valued for rating purposes at £700; (2) land and dwelling-house in Mill-street, occupied as a private house by a platelayer, and valued for rating at £450; (3) land and two dwelling-houses situated off Camp Ground-road, occupied and valued at £200 and £400 respectively. Save the stationmaster, all the occupiers paid rent, and it had been deemed necessary by the department that they should occupy those houses to expedite their attendance on their duties as railway officials. The Municipality had levied owners' rates on the said properties for 1904, and there was now overdue a sum of £18 4s. 7d. In accordance with the provisions of Act 36, 1891, and Act 19, 1902, the properties were beneficially occupied by individuals in their private capacity, and were not railway buildings. The Government refused to pay the sum of £18 4s. 7d., or any part thereof. This amount was now claimed.

Defendants, in their plea, admitted the formal paragraphs 1, 2, 3, and 4. They also admitted paragraph 5, and said, further, that it was necessary that for the proper performance of their duties the said officials should occupy the said houses. Defendants also stated that the said houses were railway buildings in terms of the statutes referred to, and that the Colonial Government was entitled to exemption from paying owners' rates thereon.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Bisset) for plaintiffs. Mr. H. Jones (with him Mr. Nightingale) for defendant.

Mr. Schreiner stated that the plaintiffs had received a letter from the Government attorneys, dated the 15th February, stating that they found that the premises mentioned in paragraph 4 of section (c) of the declaration were occupied by a gatekeeper and checker, and not by two gatekeepers as stated therein. They admitted liability in regard to the house occupied by the checker. They (the attorneys) found that they were in error in stating that the stationmaster was the only official who did not pay rent, and that they found that the gatekeeper did not pay rent. Mr. Schreiner went on to say that there were now therefore three properties in relation to which the claim of the Municipality was made. The correspondence that would be put in would show that there had been ten properties rated on which the Government at first refused to pay, except one in Palm Boom-road, which was admitted. Afterwards the Government admitted five others, and then four remained upon which the declaration was filed, and which had now been reduced to three.

Mr. Howel Jones put in a draft of an amendment of the plea, in accordance with the letter of the defendants' attorneys.

Mr. Schreiner said that he should not object to the amendment of the plea. He thought perhaps his learned friend on behalf of the Government would admit that the rate had been duly levied, and assessed, leaving open only the question as to whether the property named was exempt.

Mr. Jones acquiesced.

Mr. Schreiner said that the issue would now be narrowed down to the construction of the Acts 36 of 1891 and 19 of 1892. Section 4 of the former Act provided that no rates should be levied by or be payable to a municipality upon any line of railways and buildings situated in any part of the Colony belonging to the Colonial Government. In the following session of Parliament a further Act was passed which expunged section 4 of the Act of 1891, the object, said Mr. Schreiner, being to make the law general in relation to this matter. A proviso, however, appeared in the Act of 1892, as follows: "Provided that the term 'railway buildings' shall not apply to such buildings as are beneficially occupied by individuals in their private capacity."

John Samuel Merrington, valuator of the Claremont Municipality, said that the stationmaster's residence was not situate within the expropriated property of the Railway Department, and it was immediately adjoined by four cottages, on which the Government paid rates, the whole being comprised in one estate purchased by the Government. There was a dwelling-house in Mill-street beyond the expropriated property of the Government. This was occupied by a platelayer. Then there was a dwelling-house situate close to the line occupied by a checker. There was another property near Newlands Station occupied by the gatekeeper at the crossing to Camp Ground-road. Witness did not know how that property came into the hands of the Government, whether it was in the original expropriation, or it had been a piece of Crown land.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: He had formerly been secretary of the Council up to 1898, and during his term of office rates were not levied on platelayers' and gatekeepers' houses, because they were Government property. He then thought that they were barred by the Act of 1882.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

Alfred James Parsons, district engineer, proved a plan of the stationmaster's residence, and adjoining property. The ganger's house at Newlands was, he said, practically within the station yard, and about 100 feet from the line. The stationmaster's residence was about 1,200 feet from the station. He believed that the triangular piece of ground, on which the gatekeeper's cottage stood, belonged to the original expropriation.

Gowan Cresswell Clarke, chief traffic manager of the C.G.R., said that the land on which the stationmaster's house stood was bought to free the railway building at Claremont, and give greater accommodation for the travelling public. Up to that time the stationmaster had occupied part of the station building. It was desirable that the stationmaster should live as near the station as possible, because he was supposed to be always available, night or day, in case of fogs, accidents, or other emergencies. The principal purpose of the purchase was to get a site for the stationmaster's residence. Only one of the four houses adjoining was occupied, viz., by a porter of the Claremont Station. The porter was not bound to occupy that house. The particular platelayer occupying one of the houses named was a foreman, and should reside close at hand. As to the gatekeepers, it was most necessary that they should live as near as possible to the line. Witness had been in the Government service since 1878. The gatekeeper's cottage near Newlands Station seemed to him to be one of the old properties taken over when the line was expropriated.

Cross-examined: The Newlands stationmaster lived on the Hardwick Estate, a full ten minutes' walk from the station, but that was only a temporary expedient. They had plans made and ground laid out for a stationmaster's house quite close to the Newlands Station. The Claremont stationmaster did not pay rent; he had a salary and house allowed.

Harry Elliott, resident engineer of the Western System, C.G.R., said it was necessary that the platelayer near Newlands Station should live in close proximity to the line. If he refused to live in clothed as such chief, exercising such sovereign rights with the concurrence of his Raad with all right, authority, and power to grant land and to make concessions in regard to mineral rights, and in respect of the country or territory occupied by him and the people or tribe under him.

5. On or about the 22nd November, 1889, an agreement in writing was duly entered into between one Adolph Heinrich Carstensen, then of Vryburg, in British Bechuanaland, and the chief, whereby, on the conditions and for the consideration set forth in the said agreement, certain mineral concession and prospecting rights were granted to the said Carstensen. A copy of the said agreement is hereunto annexed marked "A." The said agreement is hereinafter termed "the concession."

6. Thereafter, on or about the 10th April, 1890, the concession being then still of full force and effect, a further agreement in writing was duly entered into between the same parties for the like purposes and under the like conditions and provisions as those obtaining in the concession, but for an increased consideration and in respect of and throughout a more extended area. A copy of the said further agreement is hereto annexed marked "B," the said further agreement being hereinafter termed "the further concession."

7. On the 21st January, 1890, the said Carstensen, for value absolutely sold, ceded, assigned, transferred, conveyed, and set over to a certain syndicate, termed the Vilander Concession Syndicate, or its trustees for the time being, all his right, title, estate, interest, profit, property, claim or demand whatsoever in and to the concession, and in and to all rights and privileges conferred upon him thereunder, together with any documents of title or otherwise in anywise relating or having reference thereto. The said syndicate is that mentioned in the first paragraph hereof, and the plaintiffs constitute the said syndicate.

8. Thereafter in or about the month of August, 1890, the said Carstensen, for value ceded, assigned, transferred, and set over to the said syndicate all his right, title, estate, interest, profit, property, claim or demand whatsoever in and to the further concession in and to all rights and privileges granted to him thereunder, and thereafter on the 4th April, 1893, formally ratified such cession and assignment, and thereby again ceded, assigned, transferred and set over to the syndicate or its trustees for the time being all his right, title, interest, estate, profit, property, claim or demand in and to the further concession, and in and to all rights and privileges granted to him thereunder.

9. By virtue of the above concessions and cessions the syndicate became and was and is now entitled to claim, have, exercise and enjoy all the right, title, estate, interest, profit, property, privileges, claim, or demand of what kind soever which, or the right to claim, was vested in or passed by the said Carstensen.

10. The sum of £500 agreed to be paid annually by the concessionaire as the consideration for the concessions was paid to the Chief Vilander up to the 5th May, 1891, being the date of the annexation of his country to British Bechuanaland, and was thereafter from time to time paid to the said Vilander up to the time of his death, and thereafter to his executors, but the Government does not recognise the validity of any payment made after the 5th May, 1891, aforesaid. No amounts under the concessions and no fees or licence moneys have been paid either to the Government of the former Crown Colony of British Bechuanaland since 5th May, 1891, or to the Cape Government since the annexation of the said territory to this colony in 1895.

11. By Proclamation No. 106, B.B., 1891, Her Majesty's Sovereignty was proclaimed over the territory to the west of British Bechuanaland, known as Bechuanaland and the Kalahari, in which the territory referred to in this case was included, and by Proclamation No. 120, B.B., 1891, provision was made for the law to be administered therein.

12. In terms of Proclamation No. 159, B.B., 1893, a Court styled "The British Bechuanaland Concession Court" was constituted and established in order to inquire into and decide upon the validity of and scope of claims founded upon grants of land or mineral or other concessions in the territory referred to in paragraph 11.

13. Thereafter, on the 1st September, 1893, and subsequent days, the said Court duly sat to inquire into and decide on the claims advanced before it by the trustees for the syndicate in respect of the concession and further concession, and to hear evidence adduced in support thereof or otherwise, the Crown Prosecutor appearing on behalf of the Government of British Bechuanaland.

14. Thereafter, on the 7th December, 1893, the said claim was duly granted and allowed, as will appear from a copy of the judgment hereto annexed and marked "E."

15. Under the provisions of the "British Bechuanaland Annexation Act, 1895," British Bechuanaland became annexed to this colony, and section 30 of the Act maintained the provisions of Proclamation No. 169, B.B., 1893, and preserved the jurisdiction of the British Bechuanaland Concession Court.

16. By section 21 of the said Act it was provided that all liabilities of the Governor of the annexed territory at the time of the said annexation should be deemed to be liabilities of the Governor of this colony.

17. On divers occasions, both before and after the said annexation, grants were issued in respect of land in the territory prior to the annexation by the Governor of British Bechuanaland and thereafter by the Governor of this colony, and therein the right to minerals or precious stones was reserved to the Government, as will appear on reference to the terms of the "conditions" inserted in the said grants and hereto annexed, marked respectively "F" and "G."

18. The syndicate has duly sought to obtain from the Government recognition of its rights, and has maintained that such reservations are unlawful, but the Government has refused to recognise the rights of the syndicate in respect of the concession or further concession and maintains that it is entitled to make such reservations for its own benefit.

19. The plaintiffs contend that the concession and further concession are and have been of full force and effect and binding upon the Government, and that they are entitled to have their rights in, arising out of, and under the said concession and further concession, declared accordingly by this Honourable Court, and to obtain an order declaring that as to all grants already issued with such reservations the Colonial Government is bound to recognise the said reservations as made for and on behalf of the plaintiffs, and directing the Government as to any further grants of land in the said territory to include a condition subjecting such grants to the rights of the plaintiffs and their successors or assignees under the aforesaid concessions.

20. The defendant contends that the plaintiffs are not entitled in the premises to the relief claimed. The parties pray for judgment in accordance with their respective contentions with costs.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. McGregor) for plaintiffs; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Nightingale) for the defendant.

Mr. Schreiner said that Carstensen conceded all his rights to the syndicate whom the plaintiffs represented. He conceded his rights under the first concession of the 21st January, 1890, and subsequently, in August, 1890, he made a second concession to the syndicate. He confirmed that second concession by a document dated the 2nd April, 1893. By Proclamation No. 106 of 1891 the territory of David Vilander was annexed to and formed, after that time, part of Her Majesty's dominions. Proclamations 120 and 123 made provision for the law to be in force in and for the civil administration of the territory. The concessions thus granted and ceded were dealt with afterwards by a Court, which was established under Proclamation No. 169, referred to in paragraph 12 of the special case, called the British Bechuanaland Concessions Court. That Court sat in September, 1893, and decided on the claims advanced before it by the trustees of the syndicate, in respect of those concessions of Carstensen, and it heard evidence. The Crown Prosecutor appeared on behalf of the Government of British Bechuanaland.

The judgment of the Concessions Court, dated December 1, 1893, was in the following terms: "Claim No. 6.—A. H. Carstensen, mineral rights over the whole of Vilander's country. The entire claim as proved granted, subject to all laws and regulations of British Bechuanaland relating to mines and the minerals and otherwise in force in the said territory."

De Villiers, C.J., asked Mr. Schreiner if he accepted the judgment given by the Bechuanaland Concessions Court.

Mr. Schreiner said that he did.

[De Villiers, C.J.: "Subject to the regulations, etc.," as stated in the judgment?]

Mr. Schreiner said that, of course, they could not be given judgment with one hand and have it taken away with the other. They were before the Court that day because the Government refused to recognise their rights, and because the Government said they reserved the minerals for their own benefit. He submitted that it was for his lordship to say that the Government was entirely wrong in its attitude towards the plaintiff syndicate. Here the Government, without going to Parliament, without a new Act, proceeded to use certain forms of language, dealing with the land as though it were Crown land, open to be dealt with as they pleased. It never could be denied that the title to that land was, after annexation, in the Crown, but it was not waste Crown land, Crown land of the ordinary character; it was Crown land, subject to certain rights, and to rights confirmed by a competent court in 1893.

Sir H. Juta said that the sovereign rights of the chief and his heirs and successors were retained under the cession. The cession to Carstensen was an imperium in imperio of the widest character, and hence it was of the greatest public importance that there should be a decision as to the validity of this concession. The agreements provided that, in addition to the sum of £500 paid annually, there should be paid a sum of 5s. per month. The agreement specially was that if the payments were not paid for a period of three months, this device came to an end. The contention of the defendants was that by the annexation His Majesty, in the Colonial Government, had stepped into the shoes of Vilander. The payments had not been made, and the position taken up was that these agreements had become absolutely void. As to the judgment of the Concessions Court, he submitted that that Court did not go into the question of whether the concession was valid, regardless of whether payments had or had not been made. No payments had been made to the Colonial Government. Counsel proceeded to discuss the Proclamation No. 163, and said that, under that Proclamation, monopolies were prohibited. He contended that it was absolutely clear that this concession, if permitted, would create a monopoly; hence sole and exclusive rights did not attach to the concession. It was true that the plaintiffs had under the concession a right to win minerals, a right to take gold and precious stones; but it did not prevent other people from doing the same, it did not give a sole and exclusive right to the plaintiffs. The judgment of the Concessions Court, he submitted, gave the plaintiffs no rights beyond the rights of a prospector or claim holder. It was subject to the laws in force in Bechuanaland at the time, and at the time there were only two laws in operation dealing with gold, precious stones, silver, or platinum. The Government holding sovereign rights were entitled to the reservation as to the mines and minerals; the plaintiffs might prove the right to go and win minerals. He contended that they had no right to go and have what was really a personal servitude registered.

Mr. Schreiner, in his reply, argued that the rights given by Vilanders were sole and exclusive, and that that was the fair interpretation of the judgment pronounced by the Concessions Court.

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an action arising out of a certain concession of mining rights granted by the Chief Vilander to one Carstensen in November, 1899, and afterwards extended in April, 1890. Since the date of the concession the territory of the Chief has been annexed to this Colony, and Carstensen has ceded his rights to the plaintiffs who, by this action, ask for a declaration of their rights as against the Colonial Government. There are no facts in dispute, for the parties have agreed upon a special case in which the facts are fully set forth, and the respective contentions of the parties clearly stated.

After Her Majesty's sovereignty had been proclaimed over the territory in question, a Concession Court with the very widest powers was established by the proper authority to inquire into and decide upon the validity and scope of claims founded upon grants of land or mineral or other concessions in the territory. The claim submitted by Carstensen was duly adjudicated upon by the Concession Court on the 7th of December, 1893, in the following terms: "The entire claim as proved granted, subject to all laws and regulations of British Bechuanaland relating to mines and minerals and otherwise in force in the said territory." That judgment has never been appealed against, and it remains binding on the plaintiffs as cessionaries from Carstensen as well as upon the Government. In 1895, British Bechuanaland, including the territory in question, was annexed to this Colony, and by the 30th section of the Annexation Act the provisions of the Proclamation establishing the Concession Court were maintained in force. It appears that the sum of £500 agreed to be paid annually by Carstensen for his right to the minerals within the area of his concession was paid to the Chief up to the time of his death, and thereafter to his executors, and that no payment or tender of payment has ever been made either to the Government of the former Crown Colony of British Bechuanaland or to the Cape Government since the annexation of 1895. On several occasions before and after annexation grants have been issued by the Government containing the following conditions: "That the rights of the proprietor shall not extend to any deposits of minerals or precious stones which may at any time be or be discovered on the land hereby granted, and the right of mining for minerals or precious stones is reserved by the Government under such regulations as were established by law at the date of annexation of British Bechuanaland, and subject to the conditions mentioned in the judgment of the Concession Court, dated 7th December, 1893." The contention of the plaintiffs now is that the concession is binding upon the Government and that they are entitled to obtain an order declaring that as to all grants already issued with reservations the Colonial Government is bound to recognise the said reservations as made on behalf of the plaintiffs and directing the Government as to any further grants of land in the said territory to include a condition subjecting such grants to the rights of the plaintiffs and their successors or assignees. The defendant's contention is that the plaintiffs are not entitled in the premises to the relief claimed. The simple question, therefore, to be decided is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to a declaration and direction in manner and form claimed by them.

A preliminary objection was raised by the defendant's counsel that whatever right the plaintiffs might have under the concession they have forfeited by reason of their not having paid the annual rents to the Government either of the former Crown Colony or of this Colony. This point, however, has not been clearly raised in the case stated for the opinion of the Court, and it is quite possible that, if the point had been raised, the plaintiffs might have had an effectual reply to the defence. I am bound to add that I cannot agree with the plaintiffs counsel that payments to Vilander's executors were valid payments under the concession. It is true that under the 7th clause of the first agreement the rents were made payable to the Chief, "his heirs, successors, or assignees," but it is clear from other parts of the agreement that the executors administering the private estate of Vilander cannot be regarded as "heirs, successors or assignees" referred to in the agreement. The 4th clause, for instance, provides that "the grantee shall be bound to obey and faithfully carry out all laws, rules and regulations which are now or hereafter shall be enacted or made by the Chief, "his heirs, successors or assignees." It is obvious that the Chief did not intend his executors to be included among his heirs, successors or assignees who were to enact the laws of his land. As events turned out the legal successor of the Chief is the Cape Government.

The Government, however, does not rely for its defence upon this clause of the agreement, but upon the judgment of the Concession Court read by the light of those laws and regulations of British Bechuanaland relating to mines and minerals which were in force in the said territory before the establishment of that Court. It would serve no useful purpose to refer in detail to the several Proclamations which embody those laws and regulations, and it is sufficient to say that they are wholly inconsistent with the declaration and direction which this Court is now asked to make. There can be no possibility of a doubt as to whether the Concession Court intended by its judgment to subject Carstensen's rights under the concession to all laws and regulations relating to mines and minerals enacted by the competent Legislature for British Bechuanaland. If those laws and regulations are somewhat inconsistent with a recognition of the concession I can only say that this Court has no power or jurisdiction to correct any mistake that may have been made by the Concession Court. It is by no means clear, however, that a mistake was made. The Concession Court possessed very wide power to impose conditions upon the exercise of any grant or concession, and the rights conferred on Carstensen by the agreement were exceedingly vague, and were not exclusive of the exercise of similar rights by others. The Chief was induced to make the concession, and the concessionaire hoped to make a good thing out of it, but the precise rights of the latter were not very clearly defined. Then, when the Concession Court came to consider his claim, the grant was confirmed subject to a condition which may possibly deprive the grant of all its real value, but the judgment stands unreversed and not even appealed against. It is not, therefore, competent for this Court to make any declaration or give any direction which is inconsistent with that judgment.

In this view of the case it becomes unnecessary to consider the further objection raised on behalf of the defendant that, as the obligation to pay the rents was of a purely personal nature and might not always hereafter be fulfilled by the plaintiffs, their alleged right to the minerals cannot be registered as a real and perpetual servitude against the land. For the reasons already stated I am clearly of opinion that the defendant's contention is correct "that the plaintiffs are not entitled in the premises to the relief claimed.

I wish, however, to make it perfectly clear that, in my opinion, the decision in support of the defendant's contention should not have the effect of a final judgment in his favour, but should be in the nature of an absolution from the instance. It is quite possible that the plaintiffs may be able hereafter to adduce further evidence in support of their claim, or to devise some other form of claim which it is in the power of the Court to grant. If a fresh action should be brought, the defendant will be able to raise the defence of forfeiture of the plaintiffs' rights by reason of non-payment of rent to the Government, but as the case stands, the absence of any payment, or even tender of payment, to the Government, affords a reason for absolving the defendant from the instance and not for giving judgment in his favour.

The opinion of the Court is, that the defendant's contention is correct, but this finding is to have the effect of absolution from the instance, and the plaintiff will have to pay the costs of this action.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

DICKERSON V. GACULI. { 1903.
Mar. 7th.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers, for the respondent, moved for discharge of a notice of appeal on the ground that the appellant had not prosecuted it within a reasonable time. Notice of appeal was given on the 13th July last, and nothing had been heard of it since.

Appeal discharged with costs.

Ex parte KRUGER.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers said the petitioner was married to his wife, who died in February, 1903, in community of property. There were four minor children. The movables were worth £350, and the farm £800. In order to liquidate the estate the petitioner had to raise two loans for £1300. During martial law he was ordered to keep 500 sheep to supply the block line. After the war a great drought caused nearly all the sheep to die, and petitioner was now in possession of only a cart and two horses. He was unable to pay the interest on the bonds. Counsel asked for an order authorising the petitioner to sell the farm to pay off the bonds, pay the minor shares into the Guardian Fund, and use the balance for farming purposes.

Order as prayed.

MARSHALL AND OTHERS V. WARD AND CO.

This was an application for an order calling on the respondent to perform a certain contract by transferring certain shares, or, in the alternative, an order liquidating the estate.

Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the applicants, and Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Jones) was for the respondents.

Mr. Burton said he consented on behalf of the respondents to the alternative order.

Mr. Searle said the only question remained was for the appointment of a liquidator, and Mr. Burton pointed out that the applicants wanted practically to appoint themselves, and he was in favour of appointing two independent men in Mr. Close and Mr. Hazel.

Maasdorp J., said it was essential that some outside person should be appointed, and the name of the liquidator could be agreed upon and mentioned again.

The order of liquidation granted, the costs to be paid in the liquidation of the company.

Subsequently, counsel announced that it was agreed that Mr. Close should act as liquidator, and give security for £1,000 to the satisfaction of the Registrar.

Order accordingly.

HADLEY V. SCOTT.

This was an application for the discharge of an order restraining the applicant from removing certain furniture from Montrose Villa. The affidavit of Hadley set out he hired Montrose Villa from one Wood for three months, and had paid the rent. He purchased the furniture, and paid £50 for it. A piano and certain other furniture were hired, and he contended that those articles could not be sold, alienated, or liable to attachment, owing to the debts of one Wood.

Mr. Burton was for the applicant and Mr. P. Jones for the respondent.

Mr. P. Jones put in a replying affidavit.

The order was discharged, with costs.

URMANN V. URMANN.

Interdict Property in Bank.

At the instance of a wife who contemplated suing her husband for divorce and division of the common property, the Court interdicted a Bank from parting with any of such property in its custody.

This was an application for an interdict. The parties were married in community of property on January 20, 1903. Respondent was a manufacturing jeweller, in the employ of Myers' Bros. There was one child of the marriage, fourteen months old. For some time past serious differences had occurred between them, and respondent left his wife on Sunday, January 29, and said he was not returning, but came back on the following Monday week, and said he would not live with her, but would allow her £17 a month. Respondent had boasted on several occasions that if once he left, he would never return. She knew that he had scrip and a considerable amount of money in the Standard Bank, Adderley-street. Applicant was going to bring an action for divorce or judicial separation and division of the estate, but feared, in pursuance of his threats, the respondent would remove his securities and cash as soon as she took action, and leave the country. Applicant asked for an order interdicting the bank from parting with the securities and money, and also for an order as to alimony.

Answering affidavits were put in by Joseph Urmann, denying generally the allegations, and offering to live with his wife. He had no intention of leaving the country.

Mr. Burton was for the petitioner, and Mr. W. P. Buchanan was for the respondent.

Maasdorp J., said that something serious must have taken place was clear from the fact that the respondent actually left the house and remained away for a considerable time, and on his return he did not associate with the applicant as a husband should. He was also heard to say he did not intend to live with his wife, and was quite prepared to make her an allowance of £17 a month. As the parties were married in community of property, the wife must be protected, and an order will be granted attaching the property in the South African Association, pending an action to be brought forthwith by the applicant; the respondent ordered to make an allowance of £10 a month, and to pay the applicant's attorneys £30 towards the costs of the suit. Costs of this application to be costs in the cause.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY V.
DONNER AND CO.

Agent—Holding out as attorney —Contempt of Court.

This was an application for an order committing the respondents for contempt of Court, by reason of their having issued an order of demand purporting to be signed and sealed by an attorney-at-law. The document, which bore the Imperial Arms, was signed "J. H. Macnamara, solicitor," and it was purchased from a representative of Messrs. Richards, the late Government printers, by an assistant in the respondent firm. The assistant informed the secretary of the Law Society that the letters were sent out in order to frighten people whose accounts were overdue.

The answering affidavit by Mr. Thomas, of the sole partner in the respondent firm, set out that his head clerk, who had at present left the country, and whose intended departure was notified to the Law Society, induced him to purchase the forms from Messrs. Richards, whose representative gave the assurance that to use the forms was quite in order, and that many of them had been disposed of to firms in Cape Town.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J., said the respondent was guilty of very improper conduct, as, on his own admission, he intended to mislead people that there was more authority in the document than it really possessed. He admitted that the document was used because of its official look, and was sent out in order to induce his customers to pay their debts. The document, in appearance, is certainly misleading. It is very official and legal in form, and there is no doubt the person reading this document would be under the impression it was issued out of some court of justice, and that was exactly the intention of the respondent. The Court, as a rule, is very adverse to exercise its jurisdiction for contempt of Court, and under all the circumstances, though the conduct of Mr. Thomas has been extremely improper and ought to be checked, I think that the aim of the applicants will be reached by ordering the respondent to pay the costs of this application.

TRIAL CAUSE.

RECEIVERS, GRAND JUNCTION { 1905.
RAILWAYS V. WALKER. { Mar. 8th.

This was an action brought by the Receivers of the Grand Junction Railways against John Walker and Son and John Walker personally for an order for transfer of certain properties in connection with the undertaking and contracts for the construction of certain railways. Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Uppington) was for the plaintiffs; Mr. Russell was for the defendants.

Mr. Russell said that before the trial was proceeded with he should like to make an application for a commission to take the evidence in London of John Walker, the defendant, and other persons residing in the United Kingdom, whose evidence may be material to the case, and also for costs to be costs in the cause. Counsel read the petition of the defendant, who craved leave to refer the Court to his affidavit of the 18th November last. The petitioner appended a certificate from a medical man in London, who said that the defendant was in his 70th year, and was quite unfit to take a journey through the tropics to Cape Town, or any sub-tropical climate, much less to undergo the worry attendant upon litigation in a sub-tropical climate. Counsel said that a similar application was before the Court some time ago.

Mr. Schreiner said that he did not see how the defendant's evidence was material to the claim in convention. As to the claim in reconvention, in that matter defendant was really the plaintiff, and he claimed a sum of over £387,000 on debentures. The application, if granted, would not only entail delay in the litigation, but it would also entail great expense in instructing some one to deal with the evidence given by Mr. Walker. The defendant ought to pay the costs of that day. He did not see why the defendant could not come out to this country, say, in May next, when the weather was cooler.

Mr. Russell (replying to his lordship) said that his client would be prepared to pay the costs of the day.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he would make an order in the following terms: That the case be postponed until the last day of next term, if the cost of the day be forthwith paid, and that the decision be postponed upon the application for examination of Mr. J. Walker on commission until the plaintiff shall have had an opportunity of obtaining an affidavit as to the state of his (Mr. Walker's) health. If the defendant should not pay the costs of to-day within a week from this date, then the Court will set down the case for trial on Saturday, the 18th March.

ADMISSION.

{ 1905.
Mar. 8th.

Mr. Sutton moved for the admission of Mr. Harry Saunders as an attorney-at-law and notary public.

Application granted, and oaths administered.

RHODES V. RHODES AND BOWEN.

This was an action for a decree of divorce against the first-named defendant, and damages against the second defendant. Leave was granted to sue by edictal citation in September last, and the order was personally served. The second defendant pleaded and subsequently made a tender, which was now put in by consent. The declaration set out that the plaintiff was an attorney at Kimberley, and the first defendant his wife, and the second defendant an attorney of Kimberley until June, 1904. The plaintiff was married in January, 1895, at Graham's Town, without community of property. In terms of an ante-nuptial contract, the plaintiff settled on his wife an assurance policy, and £2,000, which he invested for her. About June last the first defendant deserted him, and plaintiff alleged that she committed adultery with the second defendant during the months of April, May, and June, and was at present living in open adultery with Bowen. He claimed a decree of divorce against the first-named defendant, and forfeiture of the benefits under the ante-nuptial contract, and £2,000 damages against the second defendant, with costs. The plea put in by Bowen set out that at present he resided in Australia. He had no knowledge with regard to the settlement. He admitted adultery on the voyage between Cape Town and Tasmania, but denied adultery at Kimberley, and he denied that the plaintiff suffered any damages. Counsel then read certain evidence taken on commission, from which it would appear that the first defendant, who travelled as Mrs. Bowen to Tasmania with the co-defendant, was attended by a doctor, who stated that she was pregnant. The stewardess recognised the photos as those of Mr. and Mrs. Bowen. The second defendant tendered £500 and costs.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. P. Jones) for plaintiff. Defendants in default.

James Joseph George Rhodes, the plaintiff, an attorney at Kimberley, stated he was married on 3rd January, 1895, at Graham's Town. At the time of his marriage he entered into an ante-nuptial contract, settling on his wife his assurance policy and £2,000, which he invested. In 1899 he got to know Bowen first, who became very friendly with his wife. At the end of 1903 he went to Hermanus. In June, 1904, his wife asked to come down to Cape Town, and witness saw her off at the Kimberley Station. He never saw her since. He accepted the tender of £500, with costs, from the second-named defendant.

A decree of divorce was granted against the first defendant, with forfeiture of the settlements under the ante-nuptial contract, and costs, and judgment against the second defendant on the consent paper for £500, with costs, the plaintiff to have his witness's expenses.

VENTER V. VENTER AND OTHERS. { 1905.

Sale to minor children—Revocation.

V., wishing to provide for certain minor children, sold certain land to them jointly for £600. His wife having subsequently admitted that two of these minors were illegitimate, V. made another disposition of his property, excluding these two children from all share in his property.

Held, that as the Court had refused to find that these children were illegitimate, they could not be deprived of their rights under the sale, but as their curator had stated that they were willing to accept £100 each in satisfaction of their claims, the Court ordered transfer to be passed to the remaining beneficiaries, on condition of their paying out this sum.

This was an action for a declaration of rights, brought by the executors of the estate of the late Hermanus Venter, in which they asked for the transfer of property to certain three minor sons, who were half-brothers of the plaintiffs. The matter had previously been before the Court, and it was ordered that all parties should be joined in a declaratory action, particularly those children who were said to be disinherited by the will (14 C.T.R., 777). The deceased had been married three times, and in 1902 he discovered that his wife was unfaithful to him. He got a divorce, and alleged that the two last children, who were represented by Mr. Roux, were not his children. Mr. Hermanus was married three times, and by the first wife he had fourteen children, eight or nine by the second, and eight by the third. In 1899 the father sold to the children, as from himself, a certain amount of ground, to the value of £600, and the seller and buyer papers were duly executed. Subsequently he became suspicious of the faithfulness of his wife, and in divorce proceedings the wife admitted that the two children were not those of Hermanus Venter. Thereupon, in 1902, the deceased had fresh papers of seller and buyer executed, in which these two children were excluded from the purchase (which purchase was of the nature of a gift from the father to his children). The two minor children were now disputing the revocation.

Mr. Burton appeared for the plaintiffs, Mr. Gutsche appeared to consent on behalf of the first defendant, and Mr. Roux appeared for the second defendants as curator ad litem.

L. Jacobus Coetzee, attorney, practising at Philip's Town, said that the documents produced were drawn up by him and signed in his presence. The first document, signed in November 26, 1900, was the declaration of seller to the eight children. There were two more of the same date, being declarations of seller and buyer. They were signed before him in February, 1902. These were in regard to the three sons. Mr. Venter said that a mistake had been made, and only the last three children were to get transfer. The Civil Commissioner accepted the amended papers.

[Hopley, J.: It is an attempt to set aside a sale by papers subsequently drawn.]

Mr. Burton: That is what it will come to.

Cross-examined: The paper selling to the eight minors was drawn in the office of witness. Mr. Venter knew quite well what he was doing.

[Hopley, J.: Your point is that the Civil Commissioner acted ultra vires?]

Mr. Roux: Yes, my lord, he acted ultra vires, and therefore could not bind the eight buyers.

Johan Carl Martinus Venter, one of the plaintiffs, and also one of the tutors of the six children, stated that he knew of the trouble his father had with his wife. The three eldest children had more or less £100 when their father died, but no landed property. The other five had very little. Under a bond, witness had to give each of the children £100 as they came of age. Witness was one of the executors of the will, and came to ask the Court what was to be done.

Cross-examined by Mr. Roux: If the Court found that the two minors, now excluded, were to get their eighth share, he did not think the estate could do it.

Counsel having been heard in argument.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (March 9th).

Hopley, J.: This is a case in which the late Mr. Hermanus Carl Venter, who was an old man with no less than three families by three different wives, in his old age wished to provide for the youngest family, who were all minors at the time. There were eight of them, and, as far as he knew, in the year 1900, at all events when he proposed to provide for them, these eight were all his own legitimate children, and in or about November, 1900, he provided for these. He set apart some of his landed property, and entered into a sale, a transaction which bore upon its face the look of a sale from himself to his minor children. He made a declaration on the 26th November, 1900, that he had sold for £600 certain landed property, which is the property in question in this case, to the eight minor children. He does not seem to have made at the same time a corresponding declaration as the guardian or agent for these children as purchaser, but apparently, about a year afterwards, in November, 1901, that declaration was made by himself as agent for these same eight children, dealing with the same landed property, thus making a completed sale to these eight children. It has been said that as these children had no assets to speak of, this must be looked upon as a donation by the father to the children, and must be treated upon that basis. I am not satisfied on the evidence that it was intended to be an out-and-out donation. In my opinion, it must be treated as a sale to the eight, and accepted by him as their guardian. If it was a sale, the rights of these eight children became vested in the property. Shortly afterwards, or somewhere about 1901, the old man discovered the infidelity of his wife, and he subsequently took proceedings to have her divorced, and then it seems to have occurred to him to make another settlement, and endeavour to disinherit the two youngest children, who in the divorce proceedings his wife admitted were illegitimate. In November, 1901, the agent went before the Civil Commissioner at Hanover, and paid transfer duty on this sale of £24, and £1 12s. as a fine for the delay, so that everything was in order as a sale. On the back of the receipt which the Civil Commissioner gave, the names of these eight minors were placed, as being the people to whom the transfer was to be made. That receipt was given in December, 1901. Two months after that it appears the old gentleman came to the conclusion that he had made a mistake, but I don't think it was a mistake, because every child's name is fully set out, and it is not likely that the attorney would have known the Christian names of each one of the eight. I don't think that was the mistake that was made, but when he came to the attorney in 1902, he said he had made a mistake in the way he had provided for his family, and he thought he had better make a new disposition. He went to the attorney, and declared he had sold this property for £600 to only three of these sons. The difficulty, however, was to put in the names of these three people without cancelling the previous sale. The documents were in the hands of the Civil Commissioner, and so, to endeavour to put right what was called a mistake, a declaration was made in February, 1902. A Justice of the Peace and an attorney of this Court wrote to his correspondent at Philip's Town telling him to ante-date this document. Now that, of course, was improper, and he ought not to have endeavoured by filling in a false date to have made it appear that the declarations were made before him in November, 1900, when, as a matter of fact, they were not made until February, 1902. Either as a Justice of the Peace or as an attorney of this Court, he acted improperly. But I have to view the matter to see if these subsequent declarations made any difference in the matter. In my opinion they could not be taken to make any difference. The sale had been concluded, transfer duty paid, and the rights of the children vested in the land. That being the case, it now remains to adjust the rights of the parties. No transfer was actually given of this property, but in his will the seller again dealt with this property.

and left this very same property to the same three children to make provision for the youngest three children. This provided for six children of the marriage, and cut out altogether the two youngest, which he considered illegitimate. He seems to have asked that certain benefits for these two youngest children should be forfeited, but the Court has previously refused to look upon them as illegitimate, having been born in wedlock. In leaving this property, he left it to the three to whom the second lot of declarations purported to sell it, on condition they should pay to their sisters a certain amount, the sum of £225, and he also left to the brother an erf in Philip's Town, on condition he paid to two sisters £25. Thus he provided for six of these children, by leaving the three eldest this farm, he left the two daughters £250 between them, and he left the son the erf. But these two youngest were left out of the will altogether. Now the matter comes before the Court for a declaration of all their rights. It seems to me that these two youngest children ought to have their rights fixed by the Court by a declaration that they are entitled to set up this purchase as a sale. They probably would not have the £600 to tender for the price, and it has been stated in Court on their behalf if they could get £100 paid to each of them, they would be satisfied to withdraw all their claims. It seems to me that would be the wisest course to adopt. The other three have been settled with, and they do not set up any claim. They only wish to remain as provided for by their father's will. I think it is clear there should be transfer to the three eldest sons mentioned in the will, on condition that they pay out to the two youngest children the sum of £100 each. Then there is the matter of costs, which ought really, in a case like this, to come out of the estate, because the testator has really caused this application; but as I understand, all the assets have been distributed, and the estate liquidated, except this matter, that there would be some difficulty in making up this arrangement. I think it would be somewhat unfair to the children of the first two marriages to order them to contribute to a matter with which they are not concerned. I think the people that ought to contribute are these who now come before the Court with regard to this particular property. It seems that the three to whom transfer will be ordered, and Mr. Roux's two clients, ought to pay the costs of those proceedings. The executors will have the right to mortgage the property for the purpose of meeting the liabilities which now fall upon the property in consequence of this judgment.

TRIAL CAUSE.

MITCHELL V. SAM WEIL (1905.
SYNDICATE.) Mar. 9th.

Mining company — Agent — Remuneration — Damages for non-delivery of shares.

*The defendants engaged to remunerate M. for his services with a certain money payment and certain mining shares.
These shares were not delivered, and M. now sued for delivery and also for damages for non-delivery.*

Held, that he could not succeed on both claims.

Held further, that he was not entitled to damages for delay in the delivery of the shares, though they had greatly fallen in value.

Philip v. Metropolitan Railways (10 Juta, 52) followed.

This was an action brought by John Layton Mitchell, a mining engineer of Bulawayo, against Samuel Weil, Julius Weil, and George David Smith, trading as the Sam Weil Syndicate, to recover a certain sum and shares alleged to be due to him by way of commission, and damages in the sum of £1,353.

It was stated that Mr. Smith had not filed a plea, and that he was not represented before the Court.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is a mining engineer, residing at Bulawayo, Rhodesia.

The defendants are Samuel Weil, Julius Weil, and George David Smith, residing in Cape Town, and trading in co-partnership as the Sam Weil Syndicate.

2. During the years 1895, 1896, and 1897 the plaintiff was employed by the defendants to acquire on their behalf gold-mining claims in Rhodesia.

3. In or about the month of December, 1895, the plaintiff, acting as the duly-authorized agent of the defendants, entered into an agreement with one Benjamin William Leach, in the Ingwenia district of Matabeleland, in terms of which the plaintiff, with the authority and consent of the defendants, and on their behalf, agreed to acquire for the said syndicate certain gold-mining claims, the property of the said Leach.

4. The claims so purchased from the said Leach were described as follows: Veracity, Naomi 1, 2, 3, Monica, Naran, Cusco, Laura, Outalpa, and Mea, afterwards repegged as the Bud.

5. In consideration of the services rendered to the defendants by the plaintiff in the purchase of the said claims, the defendants undertook to pay to the plaintiff a commission of 10 per cent. on any properties secured to the defendants by the plaintiff, the said commission being payable on the sale or flotation of the said properties.

6. Thereafter the said claims were duly sold and transferred on or about the 1st March, 1899, from the defendants to a company known as the Enterprise Gold-mining and Estates Company, Limited.

7. The consideration for which the said claims were transferred to the said Enterprise Gold-mining Company, Ltd., was £10,000 in cash and shares equal to £217 7s. 10d. in cash, per block of ten claims, and £782 12s. 2d. in shares per block of ten claims.

8. The plaintiff says that in terms of the agreement referred to in paragraph 4 of this declaration, he was entitled to demand from the defendants, on the sale by them of the said claims to the Enterprise Gold-mining Company, Ltd., the payment of the sum of £217 7s. 10d. and 782 shares in the said Enterprise Gold-mining Company, Ltd., as will more clearly appear from the account annexed to this declaration, which the plaintiff prays may be considered as inserted herein.

9. The defendants have refused and neglected to pay to the plaintiff the said amounts of £217 7s. 10d., and have refused to deliver to the plaintiff the said 782 shares in the said Enterprise Gold-mining Company, Ltd.

10. With respect to the said shares, the plaintiff is entitled to demand from the defendants the payment of the sum of £1,153, as and for damages sustained by the plaintiff, owing to the wrongful refusal of the defendants to deliver the said shares in accordance with the terms of the said contract, the said shares having greatly fallen in value since the date of the flotation of the said Enterprise Gold-mining Company, Ltd.

11. The defendants are further indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of £25, being the purchase price of certain two claim licences purchased by the plaintiff for and on behalf of the defendants during the month of December 31, 1895.

12. All things have happened, all times elapsed, and all conditions fulfilled necessary to entitle the plaintiff to demand from the defendants the amounts set forth in the account annexed to this declaration, together with the sum of £1,153, as and for damages aforesaid, and the sum of £25, but the defendants wrongfully refuse to pay the said claims or any portion thereof.

Wherefore the plaintiff prays: (a) That the defendants may be ordered to pay to him the said sum of £217 7s. 10d., with interest a tempore morae, and to deliver to him 782 shares in the said Enterprise Gold-mining Company, or the value of the said shares; (b) judgment in the sum of £1,153, as and for damages as aforesaid; (c) judgment in the sum of £25; (d) alternative relief.

The plea of the defendants Samuel Weil and Julius Weil was:

1. As to paragraph 1 of the plaintiff's declaration the said defendants say that they are not permanent residents at Cape Town, but have visited it at various times, and that the Sam Weil Syndicate is no longer in existence, but otherwise they admit the said paragraph.

2. They deny paragraph 2 of the plaintiff's declaration. During the years mentioned therein the plaintiff was in the employ of the syndicate at a monthly salary, and was engaged in looking after work on the mining property of the syndicate, such as erecting beacons and keeping them in order, and was under a duty to submit particulars of any claims which were available for purchase and which were brought to his notice.

3. In the course of his said employment and in the discharge of his duty, the plaintiff in or about December, 1895, brought to the notice of the defendant Smith certain gold mining claims, which are the claims mentioned in paragraph 3 of the plaintiff's declaration, and with the authority of the said Smith entered into an agreement with the said Leach upon certain terms not necessary to specify for the acquisition of the said claims by the syndicate, and the said claims were then described as is set forth in paragraph 4 of the plaintiff's declaration.

4. They deny paragraph 5 of the plaintiff's declaration. They say that a certain agreement under which the plaintiff was entitled against the syndicate to a commission of 10 per cent. on the sale or flotation of claim properties pegged by him on behalf of the syndicate, or purchased by the syndicate on his introduction had no relation to and did not include the claims referred to in the declaration with the acquisition of which the plaintiff was only connected in manner set forth in paragraph 3 hereof.

5. They deny paragraph 6 of the plaintiff's declaration. They say that the registration of the claims aforesaid was not recognised as valid by the Mining Commissioner, and the said claims were thereafter forfeited and wholly lost to the syndicate. The areas comprising the said claims were re-pegged by others known as the Bell Syndicate in 1897, but that syndicate thereafter also forfeited the said claims. In 1898, at the time when the plaintiff had no connection with the syndicate, the same areas were lawfully pegged for and on behalf of the syndicate by their agent, and subsequently the title thereto was perfected.

6. The claims so acquired by the said agent in 1898 were duly sold and transferred in March, 1899, to the Enterprise Gold Mining and Estate Company, Limited.

7. They admit paragraph 7 of the plaintiff's declaration save that the claims therein mentioned are those referred to in paragraph 6 hereof, and save that they say that in connection with the flotation of the said company the syndicate paid 20 per cent. on £50,000 to provide working capital, £1,000 for advertising, and £1,500 and upwards for brokerage, a pro rata portion of which expenses must be deducted from the consideration set forth in paragraph 7 of the declaration.

8. As to paragraphs 8, 9, 10, and 12 of the plaintiff's declaration they admit that they refuse to pay the plaintiff the amounts or deliver to him the shares therein mentioned, but otherwise they deny the allegations in the said paragraphs.

9. As a special further plea, if necessary, they say that the plaintiff is not entitled to have and maintain this action by reason that before action brought he for valuable consideration ceded and assigned all his, the plaintiff's claim aforesaid, and notified the defendant Samuel Weil accordingly.

10. As to paragraph 11 of the plaintiff's declaration, they say that if the plaintiff, as is now alleged, expended on behalf of the syndicate the sum of £25 therein mentioned he should have charged the same in his account with the syndicate, but they are ready and willing upon proof by him that he did properly expend the same on behalf of the syndicate, and has not received it, to pay the amount, but they have had no such proof, and do not admit the allegations contained in that paragraph.

Wherefore, subject to the production of such proof as is referred to in paragraph 9, they pray that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff, in his replication, specially denied the alleged cession of his claim, and as to the rest he joined issue.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Swift) for plaintiff; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. P. Jones) for the first two defendants. The third defendant in default.

Mr. Burton said it was important that the Court should be acquainted with correspondence which recently took place between the parties. On the 14th February the defendants' attorneys wrote to the plaintiff's attorneys tendering in full satisfaction of claims (a) and (b) of the declaration the sum of £1,000, which Mr. Mitchell could have entirely in cash or shares, or partly in cash and partly in shares in the Enterprise Company at their face value of £1 sterling. As to the licences on which £25 was claimed, they (the writers) were informed that the charge was high, but they would be prepared to pay this sum. The tender was for £1,025, with taxed costs to date in full satisfaction of the plaintiff's demand. On the 20th February the plaintiff's attorneys said that they were instructed to decline defendants' tender. The plaintiff, it was added, was surprised that defendants should only have tendered him the actual amount of the commission due, without regard to the damage which he had sustained. On the 28th February defendants made for plaintiff's acceptance a further proposal, and offer to pay him according to prayer (a) of the declaration, also on prayer (b) £200 damages, and on prayer (c) £25 for the licences, with taxed costs. The defendants said that they made this offer because they desired to avoid further litigation. On the 2nd March the plaintiff replied declining this offer. Mr. Burton went on to say that so far as the plaintiff was concerned, the offer of the defendants being, as he was informed, still open, substantially, the question before the Court was whether the sum of £200 was a sufficient measure of damages.

[Maasdorp, J.: But how has the plaintiff suffered these damages if the shares are now delivered to him?]

Mr. Burton: We say we suffered damages because we did not get the shares earlier, inasmuch as if the shares had been delivered to us when they should have been, according to the contract, we should have made a handsome profit on them. Those shares have now fallen to a very low price. We get the shares, but we have lost all opportunity of making the profit we should have made out of them.

Mr. Swift then proceeded to read the evidence, taken on commission in Bulawayo, on the 23rd and 24th November last, of John Layton Mitchell (the plaintiff), Charles Davis Fleming, mining commissioner; Wm. Dalgetty, broker's clerk, Bulawayo; and Arthur G. S. Richardson, Duncan S. Campbell.

Mr. Jones read the evidence taken on commission of the defendants, Sam Weil and G. D. Smith.

Mr. Burton then called,

Alfred Bolus, of Bolus Bros., stock-brokers, Cape Town, who said that his firm had a transaction in Enterprise shares in September, 1900, at 20s. The shares had not, to his knowledge, been largely dealt in in Cape Town. The price on the London market when the last mail left England was given in one paper at 11s. 3d., buyers, and 13s. 9d., sellers, and in another paper 8s. 9d., buyers, and 11s. 3d., sellers. From a mining list he found that the prices during the past few years had been as follows: 1904, highest 20s., lowest 6s. 3d.; 1903, highest 33s. 9d., lowest 8s. 9d.; 1902, highest 37s. 6d., lowest 15s.; 1901, highest 15s., lowest 7s. 6d.

Cross-examined: He thought 12s. 6d. would be a fair price for the shares at the present time.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Julius Weil (one of the defendants) said that the Weil Syndicate had been dissolved, and all the parties had been satisfied. Mr. Smith had held a half interest. The cost of development had, as far as he knew, been the usual amount. The firm of Julius Weil and Co. had the largest holding of shares in the company. The company was considerably interested in the Giant Company. The claims in the Gwelo district were not sufficiently encouraging to go on with. In exploiting the Giant Company, the Enterprise Company expended for development purposes £40,000 cash. The Consolidated Goldfields and witness advanced the Giant Company £10,000 to continue the necessary development that the engineer said he would like to see done before going to flotation. Then they subsequently floated the company for £245,000, of which 45,000 were reserve shares. The Giant Company then returned to the Enterprise the whole of its £40,000, and also 80,000 shares. Witness did not withdraw from the offer defendants made on the 28th February. Witness had confidence in the future of the Enterprise Company. The shares were not by any means broadly spread.

Cross-examined: He did not see how the plaintiff had suffered damages by reason of the non-delivery of the shares. The only way in which he could have suffered damage was if he could have said that had he had the shares when they were at the very highest pinnacle, he could have sold them. If the plaintiff had sold at 37s. per share he would have had the benefit of the whole 37s., seeing that if the shares had been delivered to him he would have had to pay nothing for them. Intrinsically, witness thought the shares were worth more to-day than when the company was started. He understood that it was agreed that a fair market price to-day would be 12s. 6d.

Maasdorp, J., put it to witness whether, seeing that on the average of the past few years the shares had been of the value of 20s., a proper measure of damages would be the difference between that figure and the present market price upon the shares that should have been delivered to the plaintiff.

Witness said he was not in a position to answer that question.

Counsel having been heard in argument.

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff in this case alleges that he rendered certain services to the defendants in obtaining for them a number of claims or properties in Rhodesia, and that it was agreed between the parties that, in consideration of the services rendered by the plaintiff to the defendants in the purchase of the said claims, the defendants undertook to pay to the plaintiff a commission of 10 per cent. on any property secured to the defendants by the plaintiff, the said commission being payable on the sale or flotation of the said properties. The plaintiff further states that the properties which he obtained on behalf of the defendants were afterwards sold and transferred on the 1st March, 1899, from the defendants to the Enterprise Gold Mining and Estates Company, and that the consideration given for these claims was £10,000 in cash and shares, equal to £217 7s. 10d. in cash per block of ten claims, and £782 12s. 2d. in shares per block of 10 claims. Plaintiff states that in respect of the consideration obtained by the company for these claims, he was entitled to a sum of £217 in cash, and to 782 shares in the Enterprise Company. There is also a further claim for £25 for out-of-pocket expenses incurred by the plaintiff in respect of certain licences. In respect of these allegations, the defendant now claims £217 7s. 10d., with interest a tempore morae, and the delivery of 782 shares in the Enterprise Gold Mining Company, and to have also £1,153 as damages suffered by him because of the non-delivery of these shares upon the due date by the defendants. Then there is this further claim for £25. At first the whole of the claim put forward by the plaintiff was disputed by the defendants. At one time they regarded these claims as not having been obtained through the services of the plaintiff, but that after his efforts to obtain the claims the whole matter had fallen through. However, they now abandon that position, and they are prepared to accede to certain of the plaintiff's claims. Admitting that he rendered services for which he is to be remunerated, they tendered on the 28th February last to pay the sum of £217 7s. 10d., to deliver to him 782 shares, and in respect of damages to pay him the sum of £200, and also to pay the further claim of £25. The only difference between the parties, therefore, at present is whether the plaintiff is entitled to damages in the sum of £1,153, or only in the sum of £200. The question of damage is raised on the ground that the shares were available for distribution in the beginning of 1900, and that the defendants then failed to deliver them. Since that period the shares have been saleable at various prices, and at one time they rose to as much as 39s.

Their value now seems to be 12s. The plaintiff, therefore, seeks to recover the difference between 12s. and 39s. per share. The question the Court has to decide is whether the plaintiff is entitled to delivery of the shares, and also to the damages suffered through the delay of the defendants in making the delivery to the plaintiff of the shares. Upon this question there is a passage in which the matter is dealt with by Voet. In Voet, 19, 1, 20, appears the following passage: For neither can a purchaser, on the ground of delay in the delivery of the thing sold, claim the value of the profit which he might have obtained, by trading if the delivery had been made at the proper time. Upon the doctrine here laid down by Voet there was a case decided in the Supreme Court, Philip v. The Metropolitan and Suburban Railway Company (10 Juta, 52). The Chief Justice, in giving judgment, in that case, quotes this passage from Voet, and says: "There may be exceptions to this general rule, as, for instance, where the defendant's refusal to perform his part of the contract has been fraudulent, but no such exception arises in this case." Of course, the exception would be based upon the principle that where the defendant had been guilty of fraud he would be liable to damages, which would not occur there, there is simply a question of breach of contract. Now, in this case decided in the Supreme Court it appeared that there had been land sold, and the purchase price for the land had been paid, but the transfer of the land did not take place for a considerable time. Plaintiff afterwards sued the defendant for transfer of the land, and also claimed damages for the loss he had suffered through the delay. If this case is decided on the principles here laid down, then it must be held that the plaintiff is not now entitled to claim delivery of the shares, and also to ask for damages suffered through the delay. But it has been urged by Mr. Burton that these cases go off on the principles applicable to purchase and sale, and would not affect a case of the present character. It seems to me that upon this particular principle there can be no difference. Supposing, for instance, it was a case of exchange, the same principle would be applicable even if money was not to pass on one side. Here we have a case neither of sale nor exchange, but of giving services in return for the delivery of these shares. It seems to me that for the value the plaintiff puts on his services he now claims this consideration. I am of opinion that there is no difficulty in applying the principles mentioned in the authority cited to the present case, and, if that is so, I come to the conclusion that the plaintiff is not entitled to damages caused merely by delay, and I may say that no case has been cited in which any plaintiff has yet been successful in obtaining the delivery of shares and damages on the ground that the shares were not delivered in due time. It appears that some damages have been tendered by the defendants, and Mr. Schreiner has explained that there were certain circumstances which influenced the defendants, in coming to the conclusion that, although they did not know exactly on what claim for damages the plaintiff might be successful, probably some good reason for claiming damages might be made out, and defendants were, therefore, induced to tender the sum of £200. It is quite possible the question may have been raised whether the plaintiff would not have been entitled to more than the mere interest a tempore morae, and might have claimed interest from the year 1899, so there seems to me to have been good ground for apprehension that the plaintiff might have been entitled to some damages. It is not now necessary to go into the question of what amount he would have been entitled to through loss of interest, because it is quite clear that the amount tendered would far exceed any amount which might be arrived at by any calculation. Under the circumstances, judgment must be entered for the plaintiff under prayers (a) and (c), and under prayer (b) judgment must be entered for the sum of £200 as and for damages. As it seems to be agreed by the parties that a tender to that effect was made on the 28th February, 1905, costs must be paid by the defendants up to that date, and costs incurred after that date must be paid by the plaintiff.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

TRIAL CAUSES.

VAN NIEKERK V. VAN NIEKERK. { 1905.
 { Mar. 9th.

This was an action to compel the defendant to carry out a certain agreement with regard to the division of certain land in the district of Malmesbury, and to sign the papers necessary for the purpose. The declaration set out that the parties were the undivided owners of certain land in the Malmesbury district. In the month of July, 1903, they agreed to a partition, and the necessary documents were drawn up and signed by the plaintiff, but the defendant refused to carry out the agreement. In his plea the defendant stated that he agreed to the partition of the land, subject to the adjustment of their rights. He was never consulted with regard to this adjustment, and knew nothing about it until the documents were sent to him. The mode of division cut off the water supply for his live stock. He was ready and willing to sign the document, provided the plaintiff gave him a right to the water, and a right of way of ninety feet wide. The bondholders over the property refused to agree to the partition.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Russell), was for the plaintiff, and Mr. W. P. Buchanan (with him Mr. D. Buchanan), was for the defendant.

Henry Thomas, Elsie's River Halt, said he had been connected with land speculation, and made arrangements to purchase the plaintiff's land with a view to cutting it up into plots. The defendant was aware of the division. Certain pegs were put down, showing the division. The defendant chose the portion on which the homestead was when the division was made. About a month later the defendant came to him, and asked witness to sub-divide, and sell his land. Or. written instructions from the defendant, witness gave the surveyor authority to sub-divide his ground. It was agreed that they would keep the two homesteads for their "educational scheme." One hundred and fifteen of lots of the defendant's ground were sold, and all those of the plaintiff's. Transfer was not yet taken, as the people would not pay until the siding was put there. The defendant's portion was sold on the misrepresentation that a siding was going to be placed there.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He purchased the plaintiff's portion in July, when arrangements were made to divide the two farms. The defendant was with the surveyor all over the farm, and showed him how the division was to be carried out. Not a single word was said about the water. Witness believed he would give £2,000 for the ground, and although that would settle the case, he was not in Court to do business.

Alfred Holme, Government land surveyor, who divided the farm, in July, 1903, stated the defendant knew what witness was doing. The beacons enclosed more ground than the diagram showed, and the farm was about equally divided. Witness went with the defendant and another person to fix a place where the siding was to be on the defendant's ground. The defendant must have known what witness was doing when he pegged out the other lots.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: Thomas engaged him first, and witness took it that he was arbitrator between the two brothers in dividing the land. The defendant knew of the sub-division when they were working at the siding.

Thos. Cairncross, engineer, who went out to the land in February last, stated that he had holes made in the bed of the river at the defendant's place, and found water at 1 ft. 9 in. and 1 ft. 11 in. from the surface. He concluded there was no difficulty in getting water at that place.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He had to bore for water.

Nicholas Frederick van Niekerk, plaintiff, said he sold his half of the farm to Thomas. When they discussed the matter together, defendant said he would take the part with the buildings on it.

[Hopley, J.: Did your brother see the pegs showing the division?]

Witness: After Mr. Holme finished the survey, I showed my brother the pegs.

Arthur Wallace Steer, plaintiff's attorney, said the defendant fully understood and agreed to the plan.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

The defendant stated that when his brother said he had sold his part of the farm, witness said: "Why did you not say anything about it before, and sell the whole farm?" Plaintiff said perhaps the buyer would take the lot, and that he was getting £1,500 for his part. Plaintiff said he would have the ground divided into two equal parts. In May or June they asked him to sign certain documents, which he refused to do.

Abraham van Niekerk stated that he was a brother of the defendant and plaintiff, and during his father's time he herded the cattle. In summer the little river was quite dry. There was no water in the middle of the farm in midsummer.

Rachel van Niekerk, wife of the defendant, stated that the plaintiff told her he had sold his portion, and the defendant could choose what portion he would have about the boundary, and witness said he would give a reply on Saturday. The first time she saw Thomas was after the surveyor had been on the farm. Her husband said he could not decide until Saturday.

Katrina Jameson, sister of the defendant, stated she was present when the plaintiff and Thomas came to the house. The defendant said he would consent on Saturday.

Andries Loubscher, a neighbouring farmer denied that water could always be got in the bed of the Klappmuts River.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: On the side of the defendant's farm, he did not see a fountain in the river. About a month or so ago he was on the farm.

Lamber Dreyer, neighbouring farmer, stated that in dry summers there was no water in the Klappmuts River.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: He knew nothing of the wells on the farm, but he saw no reason why they should not be made.

Mr. Buchanan closed his case, having been heard in argument on the facts.

Hopley, J.: The declaration might have been excepted to as being at variance with the summons, but as no such exception was taken, it is for me to see whether I am satisfied there was a contract, such as set forth in the declaration, and whether effect should be given to it. The proposal to divide was one of the fairest that could be devised, and the defendant got his choice, and took the portion with the two houses. That he agreed to this line, as spoken of by more than one witness, I am quite satisfied. The defendant asked Thomas to dispose of his portion, and the matter was committed to a document, which was drawn up in Mr. Steer's office. The defendant clearly acquiesced in the sub-division. The defendant will be ordered to give transfer, as agreed upon by him in July, 1903, according to the documents drawn up by Mr. Holme, the land surveyor, and that the defendant give transfer of the remaining extent of the land held in common by them. If there be any expenses in getting the remaining extent properly described, these expenses will be shared equally by the plaintiff and the defendant, the defendant to pay the costs of this present action, and the plaintiff to have his witnesses' expenses.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

TRIAL CAUSE.

		1905.
FOURIE AND OTHERS	v.	Mar. 10th.
MOSTERT AND OTHERS.		" 13th.
		" 14th.
		" 31st.
		Apr. 17th.

Will, joint—Adiation—Condition
ne exeat extra familiam—Sale —Fraudulent misrepresentation.

This was an action for a declaration of rights. From the pleadings it appeared that the plaintiffs were certain of the children of Coenraad Fourie, and the defendants, one Mostert and Mrs. Annenberg, who was married out of community of property, and the third defendant, Ockert Fourie, one of the sons under the will. By the will and codicil, the property at Oudtshoorn and Ladismith was be-quested to the children, subject to a certain condition that the heirs could sell their rights only to one another. Under false and fraudulent misrepresentations, the plaintiffs were induced to give their consent to a sale of Ockert's share to the defendants, who represented that the share had been purchased for £3,050, and that he was getting in exchange a farm worth £2,700, after all his (Ockert's) debts had been paid. Plaintiffs sought for a declaration of their rights, and were willing to purchase the share inherited by Ockert for £1,900, which was the actual price arranged upon. The defendants in their plea denied that the plaintiffs were by false and fraudulent representation induced to sign the consent.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington), was for the plaintiffs and Mr. Schreiner (with him Mr. Sutton), was for the defendants.

Johannes Fourie, one of the plaintiffs stated that under the testament of his parents, the heirs could only sell their shares to one another. He knew Mrs. Annenberg before September last year. Mostert came to the farm in September last, and told witness that he had bought his brother Ockert's share. Witness asked him what right Ockert had not to sell the ground, and added that if he did, the Jews would come and take the ground, and he (witness) would have to suffer. Mostert said he had bought Ockert's share for £3,000, and that he would pay all his debts, and leave him with £350 clear. Mostert further said he had bought Ockert a beautiful farm at Oudtshoorn for £900. It had a magnificent vineyard and an orchard. Witness said he would go to his attorney at Ladismith and make inquiries. Mostert said he was anxious to settle the matter, and at his request witness accompanied him from farm to farm to see the different brothers. Eventually it was decided that the ground should not be apportioned by a land surveyor, but by arbitrators. Witness, when he heard Mostert say that he had bought the whole of the Ockert's share, and not one-seventh, refused to have anything to do with the matter.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Before Ockert negotiated with Mostert, he never heard that he attempted to sell his share to Klassen. When there was water, they were all making a good living on the farm. If a man had got to take his portion at the bottom, he would suffer more in the dry season. He had never heard anything about Ockert trying to get rid of his property. Ockert did not beg of witness to give his consent to the sale. When his brothers had important business, they consulted witness about it. Stephanus came home from Oudtshoorn one night, but he was not competent to do business. The following Sunday he was capable of doing business, but although he expressed an intention of doing so, he did not go and see Ockert. Mrs. Annenberg's husband promised to give furniture to Stephanus's wife if Stephanus would sign the consent. Witness was the first to sign the document in Brink's office. He identified a document similar to that put before him on the first occasion, when Mr. Brink made alterations. When Mostert, witness, and his father were together, his father might have asked Mostert, who was going to pay the annuity of £15 per annum. Mostert said that Ockert would pay. Ockert did not ask for assistance outside, because witness could not pay the £1,900 for the farm. Mr. Mostert said, if witness agreed to sell the ground, he would pay all the debts of Ockert, who would have £350 over. Ockert said that the ground he was buying was double the value, and much larger than the ground he was selling. He did not advise Nicholaas to sign the consent. Witness said: "I won't sign anything; you can do what you like." He did not help Mostert to get the other brother's signatures.

Re-examined by Sir H. Juta: If he could buy Ockert's share for £1,900, he would have no difficulty in selling it at a higher price.

Fredrick Ellis, brother-in-law of Johannes Fourie, stated that in September last year he was in Johannes Fourie's farm. He was present at the conversation between Mostert and his brother-in-law. Mostert told the last witness that he had bought Ockert Fourie's ground, and Johannes said he would not sign his consent. Then Mostert read a document. Johannes positively refused to sign the document. Mostert said he had given £3,500 for the ground, and told Johannes that he had purchased for Ockert a fine farm at Oudtshoorn. Mostert's explanation about a bargain which witness could not understand was that he was anxious to clear Ockert of debt, and place him on a good footing.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Johannes Fourie was not willing to sign. He heard all the conversation, but something might have escaped him.

Louis Fourie, another plaintiff, in the case, gave corroborative evidence of the transaction, as set forth by his brother, with the exception that he valued Ockert's share at £4,000.

Daniel Stokes, carpenter, of Oudtshoorn, who had formerly been farming in the district, stated that he knew the plaintiff's farm. He was there last September, doing some work, when Mostert came on the farm on Saturday, 24th, and wanted a paper signed by Louis Fourie, stating that he was buying Ockert's share. Mostert said to Louis: "Now, Louis, don't be foolish, come and sign the paper." Louis said he wanted a sub-divided portion that must be surveyed. Louis told his brother that they should buy the share themselves.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He was not related to the parties. The paper was read out after he came into the house. It was stated in his presence by Louis Fourie that there was the name of a Jew in the paper, and Mostert explained that by the fact that he had to get £800 off Minnie Annenberg.

Stephanus Fourie, one of the plaintiffs, stated that he saw Mostert about six o'clock on the evening of the 24th September at the farm. Mostert wanted witness to sign the consent paper, but witness refused to do so. Mostert came back later on, and endeavoured to impress witness with the beautiful farm he had bought for Ockert at the other side of Oudtshoorn, and stated that he had bought Ockert's share for £3,050, and the other farm would cost £2,700. Next morning, Mostert renewed the application, and witness told him to go away, as he would sign nothing. Ultimately witness gave his consent, but if he had known that the purchase price was £1,900 instead of £3,050 he never would have signed it. He was still ready to buy Ockert's share for £1,900.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He had £100 in cash at home, and 130 ostriches on the farm. Witness was an insolvent. Previous to the 24th September, witness saw Joseph in Oudtshoorn, but Joseph did not tell him that the farm at Oudtshoorn which Mostert had bought was a bad one. When Mostert and Annenberg came to the farm he did not tell them that he had seen Joseph the previous day and talked the matter over with him. He was fined for malicious injury to property by breaking through the gates on Mostert's property.

Re-examined by Sir H. Juta: His estate was voluntarily surrendered. He had been carrying on farming ever since, and was a far better farmer now than ever.

Johannes Mostert, brother-in-law of the plaintiffs, stated that the defendant Mostert came to his farm with a paper on the morning of the 24th September. The defendant asked him to sign a document stating that he had bought Ockert's share. Witness refused to sign it. The defendant told him he bought Ockert's share for £3,050. Eventually he agreed to sign the paper when he saw the names of the others on it. If witness had known that the price was £1,900 he would not have signed the document. He valued Ockert's share at £3,000.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: His wife was not joined as one of the plaintiffs. The defendant did not call to see him on the 22nd September. Witness did not send the defendant to Johannes first, stating that whatever Johannes did he (witness) would do likewise.

Paul Stephan Klassen stated on the 1st November last year he went to Johan Smit's place at Oudtshoorn. There were between five and six morgen of arable land. There would be about three thousand nine hundred vines in the vineyard.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

Jacobus Mostert, defendant in the case, stated that on 15th September two options, one for £1,000 and another for £2,000, were obtained by witness. The contract that was subsequently made was for the option on the whole. On the 17th September he got an option from Mr. J. J. Smit at Oudtshoorn. The option mentioned £900 as the purchase price of Smit's property. Witness went out to Smit's farm with Ockert, and after looking over the farm agreements were come to between witness, Ockert, and Smit. Next morning, along with Ockert and Annenberg he went into Attorney Theron's office, and had the deeds drawn up from the options. The documents were read over to Ockert, and everything was clearly explained to him. It was only after the documents had been drawn up that he discovered the conditions of the will. The attorney drew up the consent paper, and Ockert, Annenberg, and witness went out to the farm. Witness told Mostert that Ockert got £1,900 for the farm, and that another farm was to be bought for him for £1,500. Mostert told witness to go to Johannes first, and if he signed he (Mostert) would sign also. Witness also saw the plaintiffs' father, and talked the matter over with him. When witness saw Johannes on the morning of the 24th he seemed to know all about it, and asked about Ockert's debts. Witness told him Ockert would get £350 to settle his debts. Witness never said that he was paying £3,050 for the ground, nor did he say that £2,700 was to be paid for Ockert's new farm. Witness did not describe the farm as stated by the plaintiffs. They seemed to know all about the transaction. Johannes was not willing to sign at the time; he wanted to see Becker, an attorney at Ladismith, first. The old man's attitude was taken up chiefly in respect of the annuity of £15 per annum. It was suggested by Johannes and his father that the farm should be divided by arbitration. The pencil alterations on the consent paper were made by Mr. Brinck on the suggestion of Johannes providing for the division by arbitration. When Mr. Brinck read over the document, Johannes expressed his satisfaction, and signed it. The only trouble in getting Louis to sign was that he was anxious to have a surveyor instead of dividing the farm by arbitration. Witness paid off £350 to settle Ockert's debts. Johannes helped him materially to get the signatures. Stephanus had been very adverse to signing, and it was only when the suite of furniture was promised to Mrs. Fourie that he agreed to sign. The farm was divided in due course. At the time of the purchase he thought at £1,900 the farm was a good bargain, but he did not think so now.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Witness thought the value of Ockert's share was about £1,800. Witness was a speculator in land. It was not a big blow to him when he heard that he had to obtain the permission of the other members of the family. He knew perfectly well that the brothers would be very anxious to buy Ockert's share for £1,250, which was really the amount he was paying for it, when Smit's property was counted as a joint transaction. He would not have told the brothers if they had asked him what he paid Smit for his property. The brothers were not in the least curious to find out what sort of property Smit's was.

Jacobus Mostert, under cross-examination continued, stated that he was anxious to get the consent paper signed before Monday as Joseph, to whom the Fouries owed money, might come on the scene and try to get possession of the ground. Joseph's idea was to lend them plenty of money, and force them to be insolvent. He was not afraid that Joseph would offer a better price. Witness was not anxious to get possession of the land before any question was asked. He did not think it necessary to bring Ockert, who had tried to get rid of his land, to his brothers in order to induce them to give their consent. Ockert was never present at any of the interviews when the brothers were reluctant about signing the consent paper. If Klassen said witness told him he was going to give £3,050 for Ockert's farm it was not true. Stephanus told witness that he (witness) had humbugged his brother by selling him worthless ground. Witness told him it was not so. The terms for the purchase of Smit's farm was a bond of £400 and the rest in cash.

Re-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He spoke to the wives of the plaintiffs about the matter, and three of them were in court at present.

Mr. Annenberg, husband of the second defendant, stated that he went with Ockert to Smit's farm. The sale was concluded with Ockert apart from Smit, and then they saw Smit, and the sale was arranged. Ockert was quite sober when the documents were read over in the attorney's office. It was after the deed of sale was drawn up that he heard of the restriction in the will. Stephanus said that he had been to Joseph's, and knew all about it, and refused to sign the consent paper. Witness explained that Ockert would be insolvent in a few months, and when he explained to Stephanus his own position he got a bit annoyed. Not a word was said about the new farm that Ockert was to get. There was no mention of the price. Mrs. Fourie said she would talk to her husband if witness would make her a present of a suite of furniture. Witness agreed to that in order to save time. Stephanus then agreed to sign the paper. Stephanus was afraid that his property would be cut into a seventh. The business had been quite straightforward throughout. In all £350 was paid in respect of Ockert's debts. There was never a word said to Paul Klassen about the price of the farms. The only question was that by a mistake of the attorney the document was erroneously drawn, and the plaintiffs said that the defendant had purchased a seventh of Ockert's share, which would be a seventh of a seventh, instead of a seventh of the whole. When Mr. Bink asked the heirs if they objected on the ground of misrepresentation there was no reply from them.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: He was very much surprised to hear of the misrepresentations. His brother-in-law was a very "bad hat"; he was a gambler. His brother was in court, and he challenged him to take an action against him.

He included in his furniture business the sale of mules and speculation in land. Some people might call that gambling, but he drew the line at cards. Witness obtained about £800 from another business, and put it into this transaction in his wife's name. His business was insolvent for about £6,000, and there was that amount of debt about a couple of months ago. His only creditor was aware that he was taking £800 out of the estate to buy property for his wife. He expected the Court to believe that. On the 8th October he put Ockert's ostriches in the pound; in all there were about thirty-four. Relations were strained when Johannes came up with a stick to prevent him impounding Ockert's ostriches. His religion forbade him to drive on a Saturday if he could possibly avoid it, and he did not do any business on the Saturday; it was Mostert who did the business. He denied that the whole transaction of the furniture was his own, and that the introduction of his wife's name was a blind.

Re-examined by Mr. Schreiner: When he made the advance to his wife he never dreamt of insolvency. His liabilities would amount to about £8,000, and his assets, which consisted of stock-in-trade and outstanding debts, amounted to about £7,500. There would be a deficiency of about £500 in his estate. His only creditor—Mr. Wallace—knew all about the transaction of taking money out of the estate.

Carl Meiring, landed proprietor, of Oudtshoorn, stated that he was asked by the Fouries to come in to divide the farm. Witness measured the different areas, and awarded Ockert about sixteen morgen. When Brink read out the deeds, not one of the plaintiffs said a word about the amount of £3,050, nor did they say anything about £1,900 being too little. He might have heard of misrepresentation at the meeting.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: It was when he received a letter from Mostert and Annenberg that he concluded the dispute about the division on the 13th was settled.

Re-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He had no doubt that Mr. Brink read out the prices of £1,900 and £1,500. Not a single one of the heirs even said that the defendants had told him that Ockert was getting £3,050 for his share.

Johan Anderson, farmer, of Oudtshoorn, who acted as arbitrator in the division of the farm, stated that Ockert gave up his part of the farm in witness's presence. From witness's experience he valued the land which belonged to Ockert at £1,900. It was an out of the way price to speak of £200 a morgen, for the land. On Ockert's farm there were not fifty birds.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Witness was a step-brother of Mostert. He knew of no land in the Oudtshoorn fetching £200 per morgen. He knew nothing of the farmers endeavouring to extract very fat prices out of the Government.

Charles Theron, attorney, of Oudtshoorn, stated that on the 22nd September, he heard for the first time of the sale of Ockert's land. Mostert, Annenberg, and Ockert called at his office, and witness drew up the documents containing the prices. There was no suggestion of such a price as £3,050. Nothing was said of the will at that time. When he heard of the conditions of the will, he drew up a consent paper, and handed it to Mr. Mostert. Witness held Mrs. Annenberg's power of attorney, and also that of Ockert to pay out certain moneys amounting to £350 to his creditors. Stephanus told witness that he heard Ockert had sold his land, and that he would refuse to sign transfer.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Witness got the money from Annenberg and Mostert to pay Ockert's debts. The money came from Annenberg direct to pay Smit. Stephanus did not say that his brother had been "humbled." The refusal stopped short because the defendants did not want the plaintiffs to know what they paid Smit.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (April 17th).

Maasdorp, J.: It appears from the evidence adduced in this case that on the 12th day of November, 1881, Coenraad Josephus Fourie and his wife Martha Maria Fourie, who were married in community of property made a joint will, to which a codicil is annexed by which they bequeathed to their joint children already begotten, or still to be begotten, of their marriage, and in case of predecease of one or more of them, then their lawful descendants, all the landed property belonging to their estate at their death, the heirs having the right to sell their shares or rights to one another, only so that these lands shall remain in the possession of the heirs or their lawful descendants only. Thereafter Martha Maria Fourie died, but Coenraad Josephus Fourie is still living. He seems to have adiated under the will and codicil, and the inheritance and bequests became vested in the heirs and legatees in terms of the will and codicil. The children interested in the land bequeathed under the codicil are the plaintiffs, their sister Isabella Johanna Mostert, and the defendant Ockert Josephus Fourie. After the death of their mother, the children were permitted by their father to take possession of the land bequeathed to them in separate but undivided portions, on condition that each of them paid him an annuity of £15 in consideration of his having given them the immediate occupation of the land. The several heirs accordingly took possession of their separate portions, and remained in occupation thereof until the year 1904. On the 22nd of September of that year Ockert Fourie entered into an agreement with Minnie Annenberg, married in community of property to Hirsch Braur Annenberg, and Jacobus Petrus Mostert, two of the defendants, by which he sold to them the land inherited by him under the above-mentioned codicil for the sum of £7,900, in lieu of £1,500, of which the seller accepted land held by the purchaser under an option from one Johannes J. Smith; £350 was to be paid in cash, and £50 in value, represented by a boiler and other articles. Possession was to be taken on the 16th October, 1904, and transfer to be given as soon as possible. The purchasers also undertook to pay the annuity of £15 payable by Ockert to his father. When this purchase took place, the purchasers were not aware of the restrictions upon the sale of the property contained in the codicil. When they discovered that the sale could not go through without the consent of the other heirs, they set about obtaining it, with the result that upon the 24th of September, 1904, they became the holders of a document signed by all the heirs, in which the heirs gave their consent to the sale of the property mentioned to Winnie Annenberg and Jacobus Mostert, saying they had no desire to take over or buy the property in terms of the will of their parents. Upon the circumstances attending the execution of this document depend the issues raised between the parties in this case. The plaintiffs allege that their consent was obtained by false and fraudulent representations made by the defendant Mostert, acting for himself and his co-purchaser, Winnie Annenberg, and they pray that the said written consent may be declared null and void, and that the defendants may be ordered to deliver up to them the said document; and they also ask for an order restraining the said Ockert Josephus Fourie from passing and the other defendants from taking transfer of the property. The defendants (Mostert and Annenberg) deny that any false and fraudulent representations were made to induce the plaintiffs to give their consent to the sale. The alleged representations are set forth in the eighth paragraph of the declaration, and are the following: That the defendants had bought Ockert's share in the land for £3,050, and had sold to him the property of Smith for £2,700, leaving £350 to release Ockert from his financial embarrassments, and that Smith's farm consisted of 20 morgen arable land, 400 morgen grazing land, and a large vineyard and orchard, whereas the purchase price was in fact only £1,900, to be paid upon the terms already mentioned, and Smith's farm consisted only of about six morgen arable land and 70 morgen grazing land, and was worth no more than from £600 to £700. It appears that the farm of Smith was bought by the defendants on the 27th of September, 1904, for £850, £400 of which was to go in payment of a bond on the property, £250 to be paid in cash, and £200 by a four months' promissory note. The Divisional Council value of Smith's property was £480, and as it is not unfrequently the case, that the Divisional Council valuation is not much more than half the true value, it may be taken that £850 was a fair price for the land. The defendant Mostert said in evidence that at the time he bought Ockert's ground he considered it worth from £2,100 to £2,200. In that case the defendants obtained a property worth upwards of £2,000 for one valued at £850, a cash payment of £350 and £50 value in goods, making a total of £1,250. This was an excellent bargain for them, and the plaintiffs say it was even better than that, because Ockert's property, they say, is worth £3,000. The plaintiffs do not question the amount of the actual price given as standing at £1,900, and consequently the Court has not to go into the question whether persons who have a right of pre-emption can object to the value placed upon property forming part of the purchase price with respect to which they have to exercise their option. It is quite obvious that such persons may be defeated in their rights if the purchase price is in this manner fictitiously increased. As between the parties it must be taken that Smith's property represents £1,500 of the purchase price of Ockert's land, but, taking it at that, the defendant expected to make a very good thing out of the transaction, when, unfortunately for them, they discovered that unless they obtained the consent of the other heirs they would be disappointed in their expectations. On the other hand, it is perfectly clear that the plaintiffs were very averse to having strangers coming amongst them on to the land, and would have done everything in their power to prevent it. It is not pretended by the defendants that the plaintiffs gave up their right of pre-emption, because they were indifferent in the matter, on the contrary, Mostert admits that he had the greatest trouble to induce them to give their consent. The position was, therefore, this, the plaintiffs were anxious to keep the defendants out of the property, and there was no reason to believe that if they could have done so by buying the property for themselves at a reasonable price they would have been unwilling to do it. There is no doubt that the defendants upon their own admission had bought the property at a reasonable, if not low figure. In law they were obliged to allow the plaintiffs the option of taking the farm over at the same price, before they could take advantage of their bargain, and they must have been aware that if that option had been placed before the plaintiffs, they would in all probability have adopted the purchase. It was under these circumstances that Mostert went to the plaintiffs to obtain their consent, and it was under these circumstances that the plaintiffs say he made the false representations complained of. Now it is quite clear that the plaintiffs were entitled to be informed that they could, if they wished, take over the property for £1,900, the price actually agreed upon by the defendants, and yet the defendant Mostert admits that he never told them what the price was stipulated between them and Ockert. Mostert says the true price was not mentioned because the plaintiffs must have known what it was, but there is no evidence that they did, and I fully believe their uncontradicted statement that they did not. This finding has a damaging effect upon the rest of the defendant Mostert's evidence. The price for which the plaintiffs might obtain the property, in accordance with their rights under the codicil, was all important to them, and must have been a subject of inquiry by them. I believe the question was raised, and the price was mentioned, but not the true price. The issue raised was a very serious one, and counsel on both sides, seeing the importance of it, subjected the opposing witnesses to very severe cross-examination. This necessarily occupied a considerable time, but it throws much light upon the case, and as a result has greatly facilitated the finding of the Court upon the facts. The weight of evidence upon the side of the plaintiff, both direct and circumstantial, is so overwhelming, that I consider it unnecessary to go into a nice analysis of the conflicting testimony. One would imagine that when Mostert went to see the plaintiffs to obtain their consent to the written contract of sale, with the terms of which he would have to acquaint them, the most natural course was to take the contract with them; but this he neglected to do. Not having the document with him, the next best thing was to take Ookert, who was in his company on his way to the plaintiffs, with him, to support his application to them; but this, also, he neglected to do, the result being that he now stands unsupported by documentary or other evidence over against all the plaintiffs and several disinterested witnesses. One after another, these witnesses narrated what took place at the interviews between Mostert and the plaintiffs, and there is no doubt that, as compared with the evidence of Mostert, the probabilities are vastly in their favour. I can see no reason for doubting the credibility of Ellis, Claassen, and Stokes, who are wholly disinterested in the case, I cannot see what could have induced the plaintiffs to withdraw their consent in October, if they had given it in September, with full knowledge of all the circumstances. Nor do I believe that if they fabricated a false case in October, they could have induced men like Ellis, Claassen, and Stokes to support them in it. These are only a few of the many reasons that exist for coming to the conclusion that Mostert did, by these false representations set forth in the declaration, induce the plaintiffs to give their consent to the sale. The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to have it declared that the written consent obtained from them under those circumstances is null and void. Judgment is given for the plaintiffs in terms of paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of the declaration, the plaintiff declared a necessary witness.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLY.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

W. AND G. SCOTT V. { 1905.
SCARERBANE } Mar. 10th.

This was an application for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute, interdicting the respondent, Antonia Scarbane, from parting with a certain boat lying in Table Bay.

The petition of George Adie Scott stated that on the 17th August, 1904, the firm of W. and G. Scott entered into an agreement with one Theodorus Bouklas, by which they undertook to supply the said Bouklas with timber of the value of £48, for the purpose of building a boat, on certain terms and conditions. The boat was to be built and finished within a certain period by Bouklas, but he was not to have the right to sell or dispose of the said boat until he should have paid Messrs. Scott in full for all the materials supplied by them. Up to the present, Bouklas had paid nothing for the said materials. The deponent was informed that Bouklas had sold and delivered the said boat to Antonio Scarbane (the respondent) for £80. Bouklas had disappeared from his dwelling house, and his whereabouts could not be traced.

The answering affidavit of the respondent stated that he purchased the boat, Angelo Custodier, from Bouklas, for a sum of £85. In the agreement of sale, Bouklas said that the boat was his own personal property, unmortgaged, and free from all encumbrances. As regarded this boat, he knew that a portion of the wood was old.

A replying affidavit of an employee of Bouklas, stated that he knew the wood for the boat in question had been obtained from W. and G. Scott. Counsel then formally moved for the rule nisi to be made final.

Mr. Bisset for applicants, Dr. Greer for respondent.

Dr. Greer argued that there was bona fide ignorance on the part of the respondent that Messrs. Scott had any property in the boat in question. This was a sale of wood which was afterwards transformed into a boat; the whole transaction was different from a transaction, sav. in a horse. He submitted that the innocent party in this case should not be made to suffer. There was a certain amount of negligence on the part of the applicants in not taking over possession of the boat, and giving notice to the small world at the beach that it was their property. W. and G. Scott were the persons who ought to have looked after this person who had disappeared.

Hopley, J.: If the respondent were absolutely an innocent purchaser in this matter then he is very much to be commiserated; but he has the misfortune of having bought another person's property from one who seems to be a dishonest man, and he has to suffer pecuniarily. I am afraid there is no course open to me except to make the rule nisi absolute, with leave to the respondent to bring an action during next term, costs to abide the result of such action if instituted, failing such action, respondent to pay costs.

DU PREEZ V. TERBLANCHE.

Mr. Gardiner, on behalf of the plaintiff, moved as a matter of urgency for the removal of the trial to the next Circuit Court at Oudtshoorn. Defendant's attorney consented to the application.

The cause was ordered to be removed for trial as prayed.

FISHER V. ISAACS AND PARRY.

This was a motion for an order requiring the respondents, Albert Isaacs and Edwin Parry to pay into Court the sum of £300, being the deposit stipulated for and paid by one Benny Yates, as purchaser of certain licensed premises, the Belvidere Hotel, St. John-street, of which applicant was the lessee, and for the attachment of certain money ad fundam jurisdictionem, pending an action to be brought by applicant against the said Yates for completion of the contract of purchase. The petition set out that the purchaser, Yates, had left the jurisdiction, petitioner's impression being that he had gone to the Transvaal. The petitioner had given a cheque to Isaacs on account of the purchase-price, and the latter had cashed the cheque and divided the money between Parry and himself. The purchase-price was £3,150.

An answering affidavit by the respondent Parry, stated that he and Isaacs acted as brokers in the transaction. Isaacs received a cheque from Yates after the parties had agreed to the sale and purchase. The amount of the cheque was £300. The amount due on brokerage on the sale was £400, and the cheque in question was treated as a set-off against the brokerage that was due and owing. He denied that the said sum was to be deposited with the landlord, and said it was agreed between applicant and the brokers that it should be treated as a set-off against the brokerage. Deponent said that the purchaser, Yates, had not left the jurisdiction of the Court, and that he was, to his knowledge, residing at Swellendam.

The replying affidavit of the applicant, John Fisher, stated that £300 was part of the £1,000, which was the portion of the purchase-price that was to be paid in cash. The money was to have been deposited with some outside person, and it was never agreed that it should be treated as a set-off. Deponent added that the South African Breweries and Gourlay, Cavanagh and Co would not consent to the completion of the purchase of the lease and so forth by Yates.

Hopley, J. remarked that it did not seem to him that it would be much use for applicant to obtain judgment for the completion of the purchase if the landlords would not recognise Yates as lessee.

Mr. Searle, K.C., for applicant, Mr. Alexander for respondent.

After hearing Mr. Searle in argument, Hopley, J.: This is an application calling upon the respondents, who are brokers in Cape Town, Albert Isaacs and Edwin Parry, to show cause why they should not be ordered forthwith to pay into the Court the sum of £300, being a deposit stipulated for and paid by one Benny Yates as purchaser of the Belvidere Hotel from the applicant. They are also called upon to show cause why the said money should not be attached, to found jurisdiction in an action to be instituted by the applicant against Yates for the completion of the said sale, or in the alternative, for damages and for forfeiture of the deposit money. Now, it appears that these two brokers were concerned in arranging a sale from Fisher to Yates of the Belvidere Hotel, and it seems perfectly clear from the correspondence that in consideration of their giving Fisher the price of £3,150, Fisher was perfectly willing to pay them £400 as commission. The matter was put through finally by the brokers as between Fisher and Yates on the 13th January, and on that day Yates paid a sum of £300, which, in the broker's note, is described as a "deposit," but which, as I read the broker's note, ought to be described as a cash payment of £300 towards the purchase-price. To my mind, when the £300 was paid, it passed to Fisher, and became his property, and the agreement of sale being completed and Fisher being satisfied and Yates being satisfied, it seems to me that, prima facie, the two brokers had earned their £400, as agreed upon. I see nothing unnatural in the statement of the respondents that Fisher agreed that they should take this sum of £300 in part payment of their commission. It seems to me that if Fisher wishes to contest this position he had better bring an action against the respondents. I do not see why they should be ordered to pay this sum of money into Court; there is no allegation that they are men of straw. On the other hand, the application to attach £300 to found jurisdiction against Yates, it seems to me, must fail on two grounds—first of all because it is no longer clear that it is the property of Yates, and, secondly, because I am satisfied that he is out of the jurisdiction. It is said that Yates is in Swellendam, and if so there should be no attachment, whether the money belongs to him or anybody else, to found jurisdiction, which this Court already has over his person. It seems to me that, on all these grounds, the application should be refused with costs.

HARRIS V. LEE.

Ejectment—Rights of joint tenants—Acquiescence.

This was an application for an order requiring the respondent, Robert Lee, trading as Robert Lee and Co., to so adjust a certain show case that it should not encroach on the front wall of the applicant's premises. The petitioner, Alfred Harris, stated that he was a watchmaker and jeweller, carrying on business at 78, Plein-street, Cape Town, occupying the ground floor of a double-story building. The respondent occupied the upper portion of the adjoining premises, No. 80, Plein-street, and carried on the business of a photographer. Petitioner had a show case, in which he desired to place spectacles, etc., for sale, but owing to the show case of the respondent encroaching on his front wall, it was impossible for him (applicant) to put out his show case. An affidavit by Robert Brown Morrison stated that he was the landlord of both 78 and 80, Plein-street, and that the show case of Messrs. Lee and Co., photographic artists, encroached on the wall space of the applicant.

The affidavit of Robert Lee stated that his show case had stood in this place for some years, and that a show case was there when he took over the business from his predecessor. He only claimed such enjoyment of the premises as his predecessor had had for a considerable time. Applicant had entered upon his tenancy subsequently to deponent, who declared that he had in no way encroached upon the wall space of applicant.

The replying affidavit of the applicant denied respondent's allegations. Mr. Alexander for applicant submitted that it was clear, not only from the affidavits, but also from the photographs put in by the respondent, that his show case encroached on the applicant's wall space. The respondent occupied rooms upstairs, and he had no right to exhibit on the front wall of the applicant's shop.

Mr. Searle, for the respondent, submitted that it was by no means clear what were the rights of the applicant in this matter. The point had often been mooted in this Court, but had never been decided, as to what were the rights of a person who came into possession of certain premises finding a state of things there which, to some extent, might be held to conflict with the apparent rights of another party. Counsel urged that the respondent had a right to some portion of the wall, so that he was enabled to display his goods to people in the street. The applicant had not shown a clear right to the portion of the wall where the respondent was exhibiting his show case, and where the respondent had had a show case for five years. He contended that the Court should not, on motion, grant what was really an order of ejectment, seeing the great hardship it would be to the respondent, who, for instance, had put up an arch that would have to be removed.

Mr. Alexander submitted that there had been no acquiescence on the part of the applicant in the acts of the respondent. The matter was really now a matter between the landlord and the respondent.

Hopley, J., The applicant seeks an order of ejectment against the respondent on the ground that by means of a certain show-case he is encroaching on the street surface of the party wall which divides the entrance to the premises occupied by the respondent from those occupied by the applicant. There seems to be no doubt that the respondent was a tenant some time in advance of the applicant. Respondent's predecessor had been a photographer, and he found when he went into this place a show-case on either side. It was that entrance and the show-case alongside which he took over. For some time the jeweller seems to have raised no protest, but on the contrary he set up a glass frame on which he painted, and set forth all the various details of his business, and the various departments, which stood in between the show-case and his own shop window. His own shop window seems to be very large, but in 1903 he wanted more room, and he caused a law agent to address a letter to the respondent calling upon him to remove the show-case. The respondent declined, and he seems to have been determined all along to resist to the utmost any such demand on the part of the applicant. The applicant now comes, and says that he has a perfectly clear right, and that the respondent must remove his show-case lower down. I cannot see that he has such a clear right, or that he has a right at all. I cannot say, for instance, that there is not some sort of defence which might not be raised on the ground of acquiescence, quite apart from anything in the way of prescription. Prescription, of course, could not be set up, but acquiescence might possibly be. I think that, as the applicant knew perfectly well that this matter was contested and that there would be considerable difficulty in showing that he was entitled to a perfectly clear right, it was rash to come here upon motion. I think, therefore, that I must give no order on the present application, and direct the applicant to pay costs, save that the applicant may, if he choose, enter an action to prove his right, notice of motion to stand as summons. I think that the applicant has come to court wrongly, and that he should pay the costs.

ZEEDERBERG AND DUNCAN V. ALPEROWITZ.Summons—Service.

The posting of a summons on the door of the Supreme Court is not sufficient service.

Mr. Pyemont moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent. It was stated that service had been made by posting the summons on the door of the Supreme Court.

Hopley, J., said that there would be no order, on account of insufficient service.

Mr. Pyemont then applied for an extension of the return day until the 15th April.

This was granted, subject to fresh service of the summons.

GARVIE V. TAMBOER.

Dr. Rainsford moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent. Counsel said he was not aware what service there had been on the defendant.

Final order granted, with costs, save costs of briefing counsel.

At a later stage, His Lordship said it had been brought to his notice that for some years it had been the practice in this Court for the Taxing Master not to allow to the attorneys costs for briefing counsel with returns of summonses, and, as a consequence, a practice had grown up of counsel coming into court uninstructed in a great many cases as to the returns of the summonses. That practice might have been all very well if provisional cases were still heard before two judges, so that while one judge heard the application, the other could check the returns of service. It was obviously impossible for one judge alone to do that. He personally thought that the Taxing Master ought certainly to allow costs of briefing counsel with the returns of service. As to the orders he had made that morning, it seemed that under the circumstances he should withdraw that part, disallowing costs of briefing counsel, and that those costs should be allowed. He hoped that in the future counsel would always be briefed with the returns of the service, and that the Taxing Master would allow the costs.

Jones moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,200, with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from 1st January, 1904, £15 12s., two premiums for insurance paid, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable. The bond had become due by reason of non-payment of interest.

The defendant appeared in court, and stated that nine months ago he assigned his estate to Mr. Steytler, who had sent a cheque for £36, being half the amount of interest due, and the plaintiffs refused to accept it.

[Hopley, J.: If the plaintiffs paid all the interest, would you want to execute?]

Mr. Jones: We may have the trouble of coming again to court.

[Hopley, J.: I'll give him a month.]

Mr. Jones: He would have that under the rules of Court, my lord.

The bond, he said, appeared to have been cancelled in error. The money had not been paid as the applicant had thought. An order of Court had been granted some time ago, when the error was discovered, restraining Brand from selling the property. Counsel said that the application was somewhat unusual, and he was unable to find a case on all fours with the present one.

The watch had been placed in the defendant's custody for safe-keeping, and it had been detained by her against certain charges for repairs. She claimed £3 odd. and plaintiff had offered her 25s.

Hopley, J. said that there appeared to have been a good deal of unnecessary litigation in this matter. An order would be granted for delivery of the watch on payment to defendant by the plaintiff of 25s., defendant to pay the costs.

Criminal trial on Circuit—Removal.

The Supreme Court has no power to remove a criminal trial from one circuit to another. Application should be made to the Circuit Court.

Mr. Burton moved as a matter of urgency, upon notice to the Attorney-General, for removal of the trial of petitioner from the ensuing Circuit Court at Oudtshoorn, to such court as this Honourable Court may appoint. The charge against the petitioner was of attempting to commit the crime of fraud and perjury. The ground of the application was that considerable comment, criticism, and prejudice had arisen against the petitioner in the town and district of Oudtshoorn, on account of his dealings with a certain insolvent, and he was assured that, owing to the prejudice that had existed, and did still exist, he would not receive a fair trial. Corroborative affidavits by A. J. Gill, of Prince Vintcent and Co., and Mr. Nel, Field-cornet, were read.

Mr. Nightingale appeared for the Attorney-General to oppose.

Mr. Burton said that he thought it would be apparent from a newspaper article circulated in the Oudtshoorn district that considerable prejudice existed against the petitioner. He understood that the Attorney-General intended to take the point that the Court had no jurisdiction, and that such an application should be made to the Circuit Court where the indictment was presented. Counsel admitted that the case of Queen v. Otto (3 E.D. Court, 170) was against him. The 44th section of the Charter of Justice, which gave the Court jurisdiction, used the term "action or suit," and did not mention criminal indictments. He submitted, however, that under the wide general powers conferred upon the Supreme Court, his lordship had the power to order removal of the trial. He admitted, however, that he was unable to produce a precedent for this application.

Mr. Nightingale said that the indictment in this trial was filed in the Circuit Court, and the Crown relied on the 44th section of the Charter of Justice, as supported by the case of Queen v. Otto.

Mr. Burton said it was extremely unfortunate that the Crown should persist in the attitude which had been adopted. The air of Oudtshoorn was altogether unfavourable to the petitioner.

Hopley, J.: If the judge before whom the case comes has reason to believe that the applicant will not have a fair trial, he will be able to remove the hearing to a more convenient court. It seems to me that according to the 44th section of the Charter of Justice and the ruling of the E.D. Court in the case of Queen v. Otto, I cannot make any such order as I am now asked to make, in face of the opposition of the Attorney-General to such an order. The result is that I can make no order on the present application, leaving the petitioner to make an application to the proper Court, the Circuit Court at Oudtshoorn, before which the trial is now pending.

WEAKLEY V. ESTATE VAN DER WALT.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, on behalf of Weakley, defendant in the action, for the removal of the trial to the Circuit Court at Colesberg, costs to be costs in the cause. Respondent's attorney consented.

Order granted as prayed.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY]

TRIAL CAUSES

BOISON V. BOISON. { 1905.
Mar. 14th.

This was an action for restitution of conjugal rights brought by Amyas Goodwood Boison, otherwise known as Sidney Boison, against his wife, Emma Jemima Boison (born Price), on the ground of her unlawful and malicious desertion of the plaintiff.

The defendant was in England, and the notice of summons was served by edictal citation, substituted service having been allowed. It appeared that the citation had come to the notice of the defendant, but she had not entered a plea.

The declaration set out that the parties were married at the Registry Office, Mile End-road, London, England, on January 13, 1896; that in or about the year 1896 the plaintiff came to Cape Town, and defendant afterwards joined him; that the parties resided together in Cape Town until May, 1898, when the defendant unlawfully and maliciously deserted the plaintiff; and that her present whereabouts were unknown to the plaintiff. Plaintiff claimed an order of restitution, failing which, divorce.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan for plaintiff; defendant in default.

Amyas Goodwood Boison (the plaintiff) said he was known among his friends as Sidney Amyas Boison. After marriage, he and his wife lived in London about four months, and he then came out here, intending to settle here. He sent his wife a passage ticket after he had been here about nine months. They took a house at Green Point, and lived together about two years. While he was travelling up-country his wife deserted him in May, 1898.

His wife used to be always "nagging," and wanting to go home. She used to tell him that if he had sent her money instead of a passage ticket she would not have come out here. In June, 1904, he was in England, and he employed a private inquiry agency to make investigations, but he was unable to find any trace of his wife's whereabouts. Witness was aware that letters had passed between the attorneys of the defendant and the witness's attorneys. A letter from defendant's attorneys stated that they proposed to instruct Messrs. Reid and Nephew. Witness was of independent means when he was married, but he was now engaged as a commercial traveller. His wife was a hospital nurse.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to the plaintiff on or before June 15, plaintiff to tender to defendant a second-class passage to Cape Town, failing which, defendant to show cause on June 29 why a decree of divorce should not be granted as prayed, the rule to be served personally, or on the defendant's solicitor, Mr. R. Philip Upton, 5, Great James-street, Bedford-row, London.

SEALE V. DOOVEY.

This was a case which came before the Court on March 3rd, and at the suggestion of Hopley, J., stood over in order to give the parties an opportunity of arriving at a settlement. The case was now resumed.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan (with him Mr. Roux) was for the defendant.

Mr. Buchanan stated that his learned friend, Mr. Uppington, appeared for the plaintiff at the first hearing, but he was now unable to be present, owing to a case which was being heard in another Court.

Mr. Gie, of Messrs. Herold and Gie (plaintiff's attorneys), in answer to his Lordship, said that the plaintiff desired the case to be continued. Notice had been given to the defendant on the previous day that there was a possibility that this difficulty would arise, but no reply had been received from the defendant.

The case, he urged, might be postponed until next term.

Hopley, J., said that it would be a pity, it seemed to him, to have the expense of a protracted postponement, with a further hearing fee, counsel's refreshers, and so on.

Mr. Buchanan indicated to his Lordship the principal points still in issue between the parties.

Hopley, J., suggested that the parties should agree to refer the points to a competent architect or builder.

After a consultation between the parties

Mr. Buchanan intimated that they had practically agreed upon the name of Mr. Parker as referee.

At a later stage,

Mr. Buchanan produced a consent paper, signed by the parties, for submission of the matters at issue to the arbitration of any qualified architect appointed by the Court in terms of Act 29, of 1898.

An order was granted referring the matter to Mr. John Parker, failing him, Mr. Simkin, in terms of consent paper, evidence already taken and papers produced to be handed to the referee, with power to re-call any witnesses whom he may think fit.

Postea (June 28th).

Mr. Upington applied to have the award of the official referee's report made a rule of Court. The other side disputed the award, on the ground that the referee's decision was not consistent with the legal direction given by his lordship at the trial. The application was made on behalf of the plaintiff in the case, and called upon Doovey to show cause why the referee's report should not be made a rule of Court, and why the defendant should not pay the costs.

Mr. Roux put in affidavits, and contended that the referee had put a wrong construction on the contract, by holding that the plaintiff was not bound to go down to the solid for foundation, and moved to have the allowance to the plaintiff reduced, or to have the matter remitted to the referee.

Counsel having been heard in argument of the facts.

Hopley, J., said the referee had carefully gone into the matter, and had given a very clear and lucid report; but he has taken upon himself to construe a contract in a way which, no doubt, appeared to him equitable. The contract, however, must be taken as he finds it. After reviewing the facts of the award, his lordship held that by disallowing the £124 for foundations and by rectifying the claim for £44 made by the defendant to £22, which was claimed on the pleadings, there would be in favour of the defendant £102 17s., and taking that from £191 18s. 5d., the amount awarded, left a balance in favour of the plaintiff for £89 1s. 5d. for the plaintiff, both parties to pay their own costs, the reference costs divided.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

LOGAN V. ABRAHAMSON. { 1905.
Mar. 14th.

Mr. Gutsche said that a settlement had now been arrived at, and he moved for the provisional order of sequestration to be superseded.

Provisional order superseded.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers applied for the rehabilitation of Robert Duncan, trading as Duncan Bros. Counsel said that the trustees' report was favourable. Insolvent had been a landing and shipping agent, and his own father was a creditor for more than half the liabilities.

Granted.

Mr. Pyemont applied for the rehabilitation of Henry Strutt Taylor and Philip Barrand, trading as Barrand and Company, of Graham's Town. The trustees raised no objection to the application.

Ordered to stand over, pending production of Master's certificate.

At a later stage, Mr. Pyemont produced the Master's certificate, and the application was thereupon granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte KELLY. { 1905.
Mar. 14th.

Mr. Roux moved for the cancellation of certain mortgage bond for an amount of £50, upon certain property at Zonnebloem. All trace of the bond, which was believed to have been passed in 1863 to the late Mr. Hofmeyr, auctioneer, Cape Town, had been lost. Petitioner bought the property in question in November, 1904, and he had re-sold it. The matter was one of considerable urgency; hence the application. The applicant prayed for an order cancelling the bond upon payment by him of £50 into Court, and for a rule to issue calling upon all concerned to show cause why the said sum of £50 should not be returned to him.

Order granted as prayed, rule to be returnable on the 15th April, and to be published once in the "Cape Times" and the "South African News."

BUTLER V. BUTLER.

Divorce—Substituted service—Authentication.

The Court granted a decree of divorce on the faith of an affidavit sworn by a clerk to a certain firm of attorneys in Chicago, but stated that in future all similar affidavits must be duly authenticated.

Mr. Gutsche moved for a certain rule nisi for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, divorce, to be made absolute, the defendant (Jessie Butler), who had been served with the rule in Greenwood-avenue, Chicago, U.S.A., being in default. It was stated that defendant refused an offer of passage money to return to her husband in Cape Town, and said she did not want to return to him. An affidavit to this effect was put in, sworn by a clerk in the employ of a firm of attorneys in Chicago, before one Margaret Shortle, a notary public.

Hopley, J., said he thought there should be some certificate attached, as to the bona fides of the affidavit. The matter must stand over pending further inquiries.

At a later stage,

Hopley, J., said that he had shown the document to the Chief Justice. They agreed that the document ought to be properly authenticated, and that in its present form it was somewhat irregular. However, he saw no reason to believe that the document was not authentic, and that service had not been effected on the defendant. He wanted it to be clearly understood that this was not to be a precedent for any future application where documents were not in due form. An order would be granted as prayed for divorce, and access to the child.

Ex parte MAKABUWA.

Mr. Roux moved for a rule nisi, under the Derelict Lands Act, to be made absolute, due publication having been given.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte MOOS.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for a rule nisi, authorising the removal of a certain servitude, as a roadway, upon land belonging to petitioner to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte HEMPEN.

Dr. Greer moved for a rule nisi releasing the petitioner's estate from sequestration to be made absolute. Petitioner's estate had been sequestered by mistake instead of his wife's.

Rule made absolute.

WILMS V. THIELE.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for a rule, temporarily interdicting certain goods and property, pending an action to be brought, to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte MARAIS.

Mr. Pyemont moved for an order authorising the transfer to petitioner of certain three water erven in the edivision of Graaff-Reinet, bought by him, and belonging to the estate of his late wife, of which he was executor.

Order granted as prayed.

CHANNING V. CHANNING.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved on behalf of Janet Channing, of Cape Town, for leave to sue her husband, Matthew Channing, a carpenter, by edictal citation, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, divorce. Petitioner's husband joined a corps in Natal on the outbreak of the war in 1899, when he requested her to come to Cape Town. She had not since heard from him, and she knew nothing as to his whereabouts.

Hopley, J., said that the matter had better stand over until the petitioner had made inquiries for the corps that her husband joined. He would not grant an order at present.

BAUMGARTEN V. PAUL.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved, on behalf of the defendant in this action, for leave to sign judgment against the plaintiff for not proceeding with his action, with costs.

Order granted.

LEVY V. WYNESS.

Mr. Roux moved for leave to sue the respondent, who had been lessee of the Frontier Hotel, at Dordrecht, by edictal citation, for a sum of £250, and for the attachment of funds defendant had placed in the hands of Messrs. Dreyfus and Co., of East London, agents of the North British Insurance Co., ad fundandam jurisdictionem. The respondent was believed to be at Petersburg, in the Transvaal. The matter arose out of a fire at the hotel, and the insurance of the billiard tables and appurtenances, Venetian blinds, and linoleums.

Order granted, authorising the petitioner to sue Wyness by edictal citation, and the attachment of the sum of £250 in the hands of Messrs. Dreyfus ad fundandam jurisdictionem; rule to be served personally, failing which, one publication in the "Zoutpansberg Review" and "Star," Johannesburg, rule to be returnable on the 13th May.

SCHMIDT V. SCHMIDT.

Dr. Greer moved for an order directing the respondent, petitioner's husband, to pay her a sum of £50, to enable her to institute an action for judicial separation and also for alimony. The ground of the proposed action was the respondent's cruelty towards the petitioner, his intemperate habits, and failure to supply her with means for household purposes. Respondent was now in possession of all the joint estate, and was living on the Flats.

Respondent did not appear.

An order was granted directing respondent to pay a sum of £25 to the applicant's attorney for the purposes of the proposed suit, and £6 a month as alimony, costs to abide the result of the action.

Ex parte ROSSEAU.

Mr. De Waal moved for the registration of a certain ante-nuptial contract between one Gideon Jacobus van Heerden and Louisa Krige, who were clients of the petitioner, an attorney of this court, practising at Steynsburg. The reason of the application was that the contract had not been registered within the stipulated period from the marriage, delay having been occasioned by rejection of the contract by the Registrar of Deeds on account of insufficient description of an erf donated to the intended wife under the contract.

Order granted as prayed.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. SCHWARTZ.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for leave to sue the defendant by edictal citation upon certain mortgage bonds, due by reason of the non-payment of interest, and for the attachment of the property at Kenhardt ad fundandam jurisdictionem. Defendant was resident at Germiston, Transvaal.

Order granted as prayed, rule to be served personally, and to be returnable on the 4th May.

ROSSEY V. HOLLANDER.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for a rule nisi temporarily interdicting certain pictures, pending an action, to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute, costs to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte MARAIS AND WIFE.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for leave to sell certain property in the division of Bedford, to enable petitioners to pay off the liabilities of the estate, and costs of this application, and with the balance to purchase landed property, subject to the limitations, conditions, and stipulations of the ante-nuptial contract. The property was settled by the first petitioner on his wife for the benefit of any children born of the marriage; failing issue that outlived the first petitioner, the property to revert to him should his wife predecease him. The Master, in his report, said that the case showed how worthless were settlements that were made without the appointment of trustees. The parties had disregarded the terms of the settlement from the beginning.

The matter was ordered to stand over for further information

R

Ex parte CURTIS.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved, on behalf of George Curtis, as Mayor of Oudtshoorn and chairman of the Town Council, for an order fixing a date within which certain claims should be filed of persons claiming transfer of certain property, the remaining extent of which had been acquired by the Town Council. Possession had been given to certain persons without a transfer having been passed, and the Town Council desired to have some finality to the matter. An order was made by the Court in 1897 giving the Council the remaining extent of the farms in question, and leaving them to settle with any other claimants. The petitioners had got transfer of the property, but they were unable to sell because this order was endorsed on the deeds.

Hopley, J., said that he did not see how he could make an order shutting out other people who might possibly have rights to these properties.

Mr. Searle said that the matter was a very old one, and he did not think the Court in making the order of 1897 contemplated that the Council should wait thirty years to obtain prescription. He quite recognised the difficult position the Court was in.

Hopley, J., said it seemed to him that there were only two ways out of the difficulty. Either the Council should promote a Bill in Parliament or sell the land, subject to an indemnity given by the Council to buyers against any possible claimants.

After hearing Mr. Searle further,

Hopley, J., said that no order would be given on the present application.

O'BREM V. MASTERTON.

Mr. Roux moved on behalf of petitioner, now of Three Anchor Bay, and formerly carrying on business as a draper and outfitter at Mowbray, for leave to sue Thomas Masterton in forma pauperis for the filing of a liquidation account of his administration of petitioner's estate, inspection of the books of his estate, and so forth.

A rule nisi was granted subject to the usual certificate calling upon Mr. Masterton to show cause on the 15th April why leave should not be granted to the petitioner as prayed.

Ex parte DE KOCK.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for an order authorising the Master to pay out to petitioner, as guardian of two children by her first marriage, certain money standing in the Guardians' Fund to the credit of the elder child, to be applied to her education at the Huguenot Seminary, Wellington. Petitioner's second husband was dead, and she was in somewhat straitened circumstances.

Order granted, authorising the Master to pay out £50 a year for three years upon proof to the Master that the girl was attending school and making satisfactory progress.

In re THE AMOY BRICK SYNDICATE, LTD.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers presented the first and preliminary report of the liquidators of this company, formerly carrying on business at or near Stellenbosch, and moved for an order in terms of the recommendations of the liquidators. The amount still due from contributories was about £72.

Hopley, J., said that an order would be granted directing all claims against the company to be sent in on or before the 31st May, and the contributories to pay unpaid portions of shares on or before the 31st May.

PASTINI V. CASTA.

Dr. Rainsford moved for the appointment of a commission to take the evidence of a witness in Johannesburg. Consent was filed by the defendant, subject to the commission being made general. Counsel asked for an order accordingly.

Order granted for a commission de bene esse in terms of consent paper, the commissioner to be Advocate Percival Smith, failing him Advocate Saul Solomon.

DARTER V. DARTER.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved, on behalf of Georgina Darter, for leave to sue her husband, Adrian Albert Darter, by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which divorce by reason of his malicious desertion. The parties seemed to have been of itinerant habits, and the alleged desertion took place while they were on a visit to England. Counsel, in answer to the Court, said that the petitioner resided in Cape Town, and the respondent's domicile of origin was also in Cape Town. The petitioner alleged that her husband went to America in 1903 with another woman.

The matter was ordered to stand over until to-morrow (Wednesday) for production of an affidavit with regard to the respondent's domicile of origin. Postea (March 21st).

Leave was granted as prayed. Citation to be served personally if possible, failing which one publication in each of two Cape Town papers. Rule returnable on June 1st.

Ex parte ROHLAND.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved, on behalf of petitioner, a fish-dealer, of Faure, suing for leave to raise a bond for £250 on a certain farm belonging to petitioner's son, who was of unsound mind. The land had been cultivated by the petitioner during the lunacy of his son, to whom the land was originally granted by the Government. It was proposed to divide the proceeds of the bond between the petitioner and the other creditors.

An order was granted authorising the curator bonis of the lunatic to raise a bond for £250 for payment of the petitioner and other creditors of the lunatic.

Ex parte MCCALLUM.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones renewed the application in this matter for leave to sell the Royal Hotel, in the district of Alice, and produced an affidavit of the value of the property and other particulars, as directed by the Court at the previous hearing. The petitioner was acting on behalf of his son.

Order granted authorising the petitioner to sell the property for a sum of not less than £5,500 net, and authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer to the purchaser, the proceeds of the sale to be paid to the manager of the Standard Bank, Fort Beaufort, in trust for the minor, until re-invested in immovable property of a rent-producing nature or on first mortgage upon immovable property, to the satisfaction of the Master.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

MERRINGTON V. DAVIDSON, § 1905.
STIRLING, AND MUIL. (Mar. 15th.)

This was an application for provisional sentence against the defendants, in their capacity as executors of the estate of Caroline Elizabeth Muil, for £84, with interest at 6 per cent. from the 30th November, 1903, on certain conditions of sale, a sum of £84 having already been paid. The matter arose out of the sale of certain lots of ground at Retreat, forming part of the Ilfracombe Estate.

The answering affidavit of John Muil stated that he went to the spot prior to the sale, and walked over certain ground to the left of the beacon in company with Mr Merrington. This ground, he took it, was the ground to be offered at the sale. At the sale held at Claremont subsequently, he made a number of purchases, believing that the ground was part of that over which he had walked with the plaintiff. It turned out that the land was situate on the right-hand side of the road leading from the beacon to the eastward, and consisting of sandhills. He claimed to have transfer of block C, which was to the right of the beacon.

The replying affidavit of the plaintiff stated that he told the defendant Muil that the land to the left of the beacon belonged to Mr. Powrie, and that the land on the right was his (deponent's). He denied that he pointed out to Muil the land that he had purchased.

Defendant's further affidavit denied the plaintiff's version as to what took place at the visit paid to the ground. Deponent repeated that the position of the ground with regard to the beacon as pointed out by Mr. Merrington was different from the position of the ground as pointed out by the surveyor.

Mr. M. de Villiers for plaintiff; Mr. Alexander for defendant.

Mr. Alexander having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: According to the conditions of sale, the correctness of which is assumed, the defendants bought at a public sale lots Nos. 1 to 28, block "c.c.," at £6 each. The plan has been put in upon which the sale took place, and it is clear that the whole of this property was divided into lots and blocks, and it was quite competent for every purchaser to have found out for himself what those lots were. Anyhow, the defendants bought "c.c." Now, they say that they really intended to buy "c," and the last argument is that that was an error. Well, if it was an error it certainly was not a justus error, because defendants ought to have inquired what lots they were buying. The real defence is that there was misrepresentation by Mr. Merrington, the plaintiff in this case, as to what lots were to be sold. The misrepresentation is alleged to have taken place before the sale actually took place. The alleged misrepresentation consists in this, that there was a certain beacon at a corner of the road, and that Mr. Merrington said he was selling the portion to the left. That seems to me extremely improbable, because it is clear from the affidavits that the property to the left of the beacon did not belong to the plaintiff. Clearly, the defendants wholly misunderstood the plaintiff. All the probabilities of the case are in favour of the plaintiff. Judgment will be given for the amount prayed. It is said that there has been no tender of transfer of the ground by plaintiff on payment of the balance of purchase price.

Counsel having been heard further on this point,

De Villiers, C.J.: I think that the plaintiff ought to have tendered transfer, and considering also that he claimed double what he was really entitled to in the summons, the Court should refuse to allow the plaintiff costs. But the Court will allow the amendment of the summons, so as to place the summons in the condition in which it ought to have been, i.e., to add the words "plaintiff tendering transfer upon payment of the purchase price." There will be provisional sentence, for £168, less £84 paid on account, with interest, each party to pay his own costs.

IMPERIAL COLD STORAGE AND SUPPLY CO. V. BARTLE AND GOUS.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against the two defendants, at one time trading in partnership, upon an unsatisfied judgment, for £138 15s. 4d., less £8 10s. 6d., paid to the plaintiff's attorneys.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones (for the defendants) said that they were prepared to make an offer on behalf of Gous of £2 per month, and for Bartle of £1 per month.

Mr. Buchanan accepted the offer, subject to defendants paying costs.

Decree granted, with costs, execution to be suspended on payment of £2 a month by Gous and £1 a month by Bartle, first payment to be made on the 1st April.

CHIAPPINI BROS. V. SCHNEIDER.

Dr. Greer moved for provisional sentence upon a mortgage bond for a balance of £585 3s. 9d., with interest from the 1st January last, the bond having become due by reason of notice given. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Mr. Alexander (for the defendant) read an affidavit by Edward Barsdorf (who holds defendant's power of attorney) to the effect that if proper notice were given by the plaintiffs the defendant would be able to meet the bond. The defendant had been suddenly called upon to pay the bond. She was receiving large rents from property at Zonnebloem.

Dr. Greer read a replying affidavit by Alex. John Chiappini, who said he was still prepared not to enforce the bond, provided the defendant authorised the plaintiff firm to collect the rents, and set them off against the bond. One reason why notice calling up the bond had been given was that the defendant had started collecting the rents of the property, contrary to a verbal agreement she had entered into with the plaintiff firm.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: The bond on which the plaintiff sues is for £600, as second mortgage on certain property. There is nothing on the face of the bond to show that it is a mere covering bond for money advanced and to be advanced, while, as a matter of fact, it is a bond for £600, being money duly lent and advanced to the bearer, upon which interest at the rate of 6 per cent. is to be paid. The bond contains the usual clause that three months' notice must be given, to the effect that £488 was claimed under the bond three months hence. In the notice to the defendant, the plaintiffs say, "Please find statement of account showing a balance due by you of £488 8s. 4d., which is covered by second bond in our favour." After the notice had been given, the parties apparently became on friendly terms again, the notice was silently ignored, the plaintiffs continued to receive the rents, and were paid 5 per cent. for collecting, and out of those rents they paid themselves the interest accruing on the bond, beside paying other claims owing by the defendant. Things went on in this way until afterwards the defendant gave her power of attorney to Mr. Barsdorf to receive these rents, whereupon the plaintiffs naturally refused to go on any longer assisting the defendant, and the plaintiffs brought an action on the bond. But they no longer treated it, in the summons, as a covering bond. In the summons they sued for the full amount of the bond, viz., £600. Clearly, there has never been any notice to the defendant to pay £600 in terms of the present summons. There has been a notice to pay £488, and, failing payment of that sum, the bond to fall due. Now, the summons calls upon the defendant to pay the full £600, for which there has been no due notice given to the defendant. It is unnecessary to go into the further question whether the plaintiffs and defendant had made a verbal agreement, such as the plaintiffs allege, viz., an agreement under which they were to continue to collect the rents; and further, whether it was in consequence of the defendant's action in connection with the appointment of Barsdorf that the plaintiffs were entitled to cease to act under this agreement, and revert to the original notice. There has been no due notice given by the plaintiffs to the defendant calling up the balance due on the bond. Provisional sentence must, therefore, be refused with costs.

MCLEOD V. MULLER AND OTHERS.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £1,617 0s. 10d., of which the first defendant was the maker and the other defendants were endorsers.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan appeared for the defendants, and read an affidavit by Abraham Johannes Muller, of Aberdeen, who denied that he owed anything to the plaintiff on a promissory note. The plaintiff had, he said, no authority to sue on the promissory note. Counsel also read affidavits by the other defendants, both of whom declared that there was no amount owing to the plaintiff under the promissory note.

Mr. Searle read an answering affidavit by William James McLeod (the plaintiff), who entered into a detailed statement with regard to the transactions leading up to the promissory note. He averred that the amount claimed was owing.

Mr. Searle having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: This document is, on the face of it, somewhat obscure. When the plaintiff was applied to for particulars of the account on behalf of the defendants he expressed his surprise at the application, and declined to give them a statement. He should have remembered that he was dealing with ignorant farmers, and that he had been acting for them, and that it was due to them that he should give them an explanation. It is really a matter of surprise to me that he refused to give them the explanation, which, in my opinion, was reasonably asked for on behalf of the defendants. On the whole, I have come to the conclusion that justice would be done in the present case by directing that the plaintiff should go into the principal case. He can then prove the indebtedness of all the parties, including the two sureties, under this document. In the meanwhile, I would suggest that if the defendants find, upon accounts rendered by the plaintiff, that there is an indebtedness, they should then avoid any further costs which may be incurred by tendering the amount of the indebtedness which they find to be due, instead of going into the principal case. For the present, it appears to me not to be a case in which the Court, under the ordinary procedure, would be justified in giving provisional sentence. The Court, therefore, will order the parties to go into the principal case, and the costs will be costs in the cause.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

REHABILITATIONS. { 1905.
Mar. 16th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones applied for the rehabilitation of William Peter Daniel Meyer.

Granted.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones applied for the rehabilitation of Jacob Georg Buhlmann, whose estate disclosed a deficiency of £33.

De Villiers, C.J.: The insolvent ought to have kept proper books, and the trustee thinks that, apart from the fire which insolvent says destroyed his books, the insolvent had not kept a proper record. The application will be refused, with leave to apply again in six months.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

BERMANN AND CANARD V. POLICANSKY BROS. { 1905.
Mar. 16th.

This was an application, upon notice of motion, for an interdict restraining the respondents from selling cigarettes in packets which are colourable imitations of the packets containing cigarettes manufactured by the applicants, and which are calculated to deceive anybody intending to purchase applicants' cigarettes.

The affidavit of Nathan Canard, a partner in the applicant firm, stated that they were registered proprietors of a certain brand of cigarettes called "Sultans." The respondents, Louis and Philip Policansky, were also registered proprietors of a certain trade-mark called "Sultan." Both were registered on the 11th January, 1905. When the respondents claimed to have this mark registered, the applicants objected, on the ground that as far back as 1897 the applicants had been using the word "Sultan" in regard to cigarettes sold in South Africa. The respondent, Philip Policansky, had been in the employ of the applicants, and since he had commenced in business with his brother, he had bought large quantities of their cigarettes, the last sale being on the 6th October, 1904. The respondents were now selling their own cigarettes, in packets which were colourable imitations of packets used by applicants, and calculated to deceive anybody intending to purchase the cigarettes of the applicant firm.

The answering affidavit of Philip Policansky, stated that his firm had used the words "Sultan's Favourites" for a term of five years. He denied that the packets in which their cigarettes were enclosed were colourable imitations of those used by the applicants, and said that his firm were first in the field with the brand "Sultan's Favourite," and that it was because of the successful sales that they had had in this cigarette that the present proceedings were brought.

A replying affidavit was put in, and Mr. Gutsche for the applicants, submitted that the whole get-up of the respondents' cigarette packets showed a great similarity to those of the applicants, both in regard to the label and size of the packets. They did not say that the respondents were acting wrongfully, but they did say that the Registrar of Deeds ought not to have registered two trade marks which bore so much resemblance. For over seven years the applicants had been using the green label with the imprint "Sultan," upon their packets of cigarettes. He also submitted that the respondents were quite in error in saying that the applicants had put on the market a colourable imitation of the respondent's cigarettes, "Sultan's Favourites."

Without calling upon Mr. Burton (for respondents):—

De Villiers, C.J.: The only similarity between the two marks is that the word "Sultan" appears in them, but the respondents are registered owners of the trade mark "Sultan," so that that is not a sufficient ground for making an order in terms of the application. But, then, it is said that the word "Sultan" is printed in exactly the same way on the respondent's mark as on the applicants'. I have before me the registration of the respondents' trade mark, in which the word "Sultan" appears in that very form, but an "S," a large "S," is below the rest of the letters. Then another contention is that the trade mark is green, but the colour green is not a monopoly of one person more than another, and it does not appear to me to be any intentional imitation of the applicants' trade mark, beyond the use of the word "Sultan," which, as I have said, is common to both. There are many points of difference. For instance, there is the ornamentation of the sides. The respondents have not adopted that ornamentation, and, moreover, I find that in another respect they might have imitated the applicants' trade mark, and they did not do so. In the original there are the words "Egyptian cigarettes" at the bottom. That is exactly the same as the applicants'. But they (respondents) omitted the words, and, in the trade mark, now objected to, instead of having the words "Egyptian cigarettes" appearing on the packets, as they might have had, they have the words "manufactured by Policansky Bros," as if to avoid an imitation, which might otherwise exist. It seems to me perfectly clear that there is no ground for the present application, and it must be refused with costs.

TURNER V. LLEWELLYN AND WIGGINGTON.

This was an application upon notice of motion, calling upon the respondents to show cause why they should not be committed for contempt in failing to obey an order by Mr. Justice Hopley to discover on oath documents relating to a certain matter at issue between the parties. Dr. Rainsford was for the applicants; Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for the respondents.

Dr. Rainsford stated that since the notice of motion was served, a further and fuller affidavit of discovery had been made by the respondents, and the only matter now in dispute was the question of costs. At the time the further affidavit was made, the notice of motion had been served, and counsel had been briefed. Counsel read an affidavit in support of his statements by W. G. Fairbridge, of the firm of Messrs. Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton, the plaintiff's attorneys.

De Villiers, C.J.: The affidavit does not disclose any wilful disobedience on the part of the respondents, and it is only for wilful disobedience that the Court would commit them for contempt of Court. In filing an affidavit of discovery, they indicated in the schedule that they had certain documents. They said, for instance, that they had correspondence "between plaintiff and defendants and their respective attorneys." It would have been more formal to mention the dates, and specify more particularly the correspondence, but it is a mistake which it was natural to make, because the defendants deemed that "if once they referred to correspondence between themselves and the opposite party, that would be sufficient indication to the opposite party as to what documents they intended to produce. Well, the plaintiff was not satisfied with that, and demanded fuller particulars, upon which the defendants' attorneys wrote to their clients—their clients being some distance from here, at East London—asking for the information. Then there is a demand that it must be done by telegraph. A letter was sent in, and in due time the further particulars were given, but in the meanwhile application had already been made to the Court for attachment for contempt of Court. I think the plaintiff was in too great a hurry. The defendants' attorneys were anxious to comply with the Rules of Court, they made a technical mistake, but it was not, in my opinion, such a mistake that respondents should be punished by the Court. The application must be refused, with costs.

KEATING V. NAZARETH HOUSE AND OTHERS.

This was an application to have a rule nisi made absolute restraining the Mother Superior of the Nazareth House from parting and otherwise dealing with a certain cheque for £200, or paying it over to one Oreste Nannucci.

The affidavit of the applicant stated that in February, 1904, he entered into a contract with the Mother Superior and Sisters of the Nazareth House, Cape Town, for the erection of a laundry block, for the sum of £2,850, and that he gave the Mother Superior authority to pay to Nannucci any money which might become due to him (applicant) on the said contract. Numerous and complicated transactions had since taken place between applicant and the said Nannucci, accounts had not yet been struck, there was a dispute, and the balance had to be ascertained. He believed Nannucci was claiming a sum far in excess of what petitioner owed him. On the 14th February, 1905, he wrote to the Mother Superior revoking the authority to pay over the said sums, and on the 16th February received a letter from her, in which she said that a cheque for £200 had already been made out payable to Mr. Nannucci, but, in consequence of the letter, this cheque had not been forwarded to Mr. Nannucci. There was a balance of £200 due to the petitioner on the contract.

The answering affidavit of Oreste Nannucci, stated that the whole of the transactions in question were between the applicant and the company of which he (deponent) was managing director, and that he could show clearly that the petitioner was indebted to the said company in the sum of £444 11s. 11d. He denied that there were any complications of accounts. Deponent held a promissory note from the petitioner for £213 8s. 2d., payable on the 28th February, 1905, leaving a balance due to deponent of £231 3s. 9d. Advances had been made to the petitioner to enable him to enter into the contract with the said authorities of Nazareth House.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones for applicant; Mr. W. P. Buchanan for respondents.

After hearing counsel on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: It is quite clear that the Court has not sufficient information before it to decide between the parties on the merits on this application, but it is clear that the Mother Superior ought to be allowed now to pay the money over to the Registrar. The Court will authorise her to pay the sum over to the Registrar of the Court to abide any further order of the Court, costs of this application to stand over, any costs which the Mother Superior may reasonably have incurred, for which in any event she is not to be held liable, to be paid by whichever party is ultimately held to be in the wrong.

Mr. Jones asked if those costs would include the double briefing of counsel on the other side?

De Villiers, C.J.: I think they are wholly unnecessary costs. There is no reason why this lady should have appeared at all.

Ex parte LAWRENCE AND CO.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved, as a matter of urgency, for an interdict restraining one Barnard Philips from paying out to one Per Krawitz certain moneys, being the latter's share in a certain partnership, pending an action to be brought by the petitioners in the Magistrate's Court. The said Krawitz, who formerly carried on business at 34, Caledon-street, Cape Town, was indebted to the petitioners in the sum of £37. Krawitz had been away from this colony for a period of four years, and there was reason to believe that when the partnership had been liquidated he would again leave the jurisdiction of the Court.

De Villiers, C.J.: Under the special circumstances the Court will grant a rule, but it will not make an order, the rule to be served on Krawitz and Philips to show cause on the 15th April why an order should be made as prayed, rule to operate as an interim interdict, with leave to either of the respondents to apply in the meantime for the discharge of the order.

BASSON V. BECK.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers (for the applicants) moved as a matter of urgency for a commission to examine one Arnold Francois Stewart, who was about to leave this port by the Buergermeister for Marseilles.

De Villiers, C.J., said that a commission de bene esse would be granted, saving all just exceptions hereafter, the commissioner to be Mr. Advocate De Waal.

NORDEN V. KETS.

This was an application upon notice of motion for a rule nisi to be made absolute, restraining the respondent from proceeding with the execution of a certain writ under which he had attached applicant's goods and chattels, rule to operate as an interdict in the meantime.

The matter, it appeared, arose out of a sale of certain licensed premises at Kuil's River, and had been standing over, pending the decision of an appeal in the action brought by Bosman, Powis and Co. against Norden, to determine the construction of a broker's note. That appeal had now been decided, and the judgment given in favour of Norden in the action had been upheld.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the appellant, Joseph Benjamin Norden; Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the respondent, Johannes Simon A. Kets.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: The Court has not now to consider whether Kets has acted in a very considerate manner, but the question is, has he acted according to the law? There is nothing to show that he has acted illegally. He has acted upon his strict rights, and although the Court did grant a rule nisi for the purpose of preventing the possibility of injustice being done to the applicant, the Court did not, by granting that rule nisi, intend to intimate that Kets had acted in any way improperly. By law, he is entitled to proceed to execution, but, considering that the appeal was still pending, and that the result of that appeal might be to place the applicant in a better position to carry out his part of the contract, the Court virtually—that is the effect of it—postponed the putting into effect of that judgment. The applicant now has succeeded in the appeal, and it appears now that he will be prepared, which he was not before, to carry out his part of the contract. Mr. Steytler, in refusing to advance the full sum which he promised to advance to the applicant, acted as the secretary of his Board, which was to lend the money independently of Kets. Kets was not in any way responsible for it. It so happens that Mr. Steytler was also the agent of Kets, but that does not alter the fact that Mr. Steytler, in lending the money, was acting in an entirely different position. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that the rule should be discharged, and as to the costs, these must be paid by the applicant.

COWLING V. STABLEFORD AND CO., LTD.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, in terms of section 141 of the Companies Act, for leave to continue a certain action which the applicant was bringing against the respondent company. As a matter of fact the defendant company had called the applicant's attention to the matter.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte BELL.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for leave to raise a sum of £1,000 on mortgage, for the benefit of his minor children.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report, loan to be raised for the purpose of defraying all liabilities to the satisfaction of the Master, including costs of this application.

VAN NIEKERK V. FABER.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for an order extending the return day of a certain citation. Defendant, when the original application was made, was believed to be in German South-west Africa, but a letter had since been received from him from Germany stating that he would come back to this colony in March or May.

Return day extended until the 11th May.

DONAGHY V. DONAGHY. { 1905.
Mar. 10th.

Marriage — Bigamy — Decree of nullity.

The Court refused to grant a decree of nullity of marriage on motion; though the respondent had been convicted of bigamy by intermarrying with the applicant, his wife being still alive.

This was an application upon notice calling upon the respondent, Frederick Donaghy, to show cause why the marriage purporting to have been entered into between himself and the petitioner on the 10th September, 1901, should not be declared null and void, and the record cancelled. Respondent appeared in person.

De Villiers, C.J., remarked that it was unusual to cancel a marriage on notice of motion.

Mr. Searle (for applicant), admitted that it was unusual. The petitioner in this case appeared to have been unfortunate in her matrimonial relations. She was first married to one Slate, from whom she obtained a divorce, and then she married the respondent, who was at the time also married to someone else. He was convicted of bigamy and was now serving his sentence on the Breakwater. His sentence was 15 months' imprisonment.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to respondent): Do you appear to oppose this application?]

Yes, my lord.

[De Villiers, C.J.: On what grounds?]

At the present time, having still three months to serve, I have no means of obtaining legal assistance, but when I receive from petitioner the moneys belonging to me, I can engage an attorney. The petitioner was well acquainted with her position all along, and I would like the matter adjourned until the end of my term.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If you admit that you were already married at the time there can be no defence.]

Respondent said that, as to costs, he was unable to pay anything.

Mr. Searle, replying to his lordship, said he would not press for costs against the respondent.

Respondent: I was led to believe that the second marriage would be valid, providing the first wife did not set foot in South Africa.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That makes no difference. If you are married it does not matter where your wife is. Fortunately that is not the law.]

I thought it was under the Roman-Dutch law, sir.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Oh, dear no.]

Respondent went on to say that he claimed a ten per cent. commission for managing the petitioner's property, for £60 in cash, and wished to have an order for that and also for his private property.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I am afraid you will have to proceed by action.]

Respondent further stated that he had been advised that he could obtain a divorce from his first wife on the grounds of her insanity. It had been his intention to have made the petitioner his lawful wife as soon as that was done, but he was arrested before.

Mr. Searle said it was put before the Court at the trial that respondent's first wife was in an asylum in Ireland. He was informed that the petitioner did not know Donaghy was already married when she entered into this marriage.

De Villiers, C.J., said if the respondent objected to the present application on notice of motion he could do so, and a summons would be served upon him, but that would lead to much more expense.

Respondent said he would prefer that the matter should stand over until he was liberated in three months' time.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It may be less than that.]

Respondent: No, my lord, there is no mitigation on a fifteen months' sentence. Perhaps Mr. Justice Hopley did not think of that at the time.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Well, he can be communicated with.]

De Villiers, C.J.: No order will be made until the respondent is liberated from gaol. This is too important a matter to be decided on motion. The man says he has a claim in reconvention. He may have a claim for costs in the action. It is clearly a case which should not be decided on motion, but by action. There will, therefore, be no order on the application.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

BUCHER V. CADER AND (1905.
HASSAN. (Mar. 17th.

This was an application by Francois L. C. Boucher to have a rule nisi made absolute, calling upon the respondents, Cader and Hassan, to show cause why they should not be interdicted from paying over certain moneys to one Abdol Mahomet, until the debt due to the petitioner from Mahomet had been discharged. Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the applicant; Mr. Alexander was for the respondents.

From the affidavits, it appeared that the applicant alleged that there was a sum of £32 10s. due to him under a promissory note given by Mahomet; that Mahomet had sold certain business he had lately carried on in D'Urban-road, Mowbray, to the respondents; that respondents owed to Mahomet a balance of £93 8s. on the sale of the business. Mahomet, in his answering affidavit, now repudiated the promissory note.

De Villiers, C.J., remarked that it was a matter of daily occurrence that they had trouble with these Indians. They commenced business, and then, when they got into difficulties, they sold out, and the creditors found that their assets were gone.

Mr. Alexander submitted that the applicant's remedy was not against the respondents, but against Mahomet, to whom respondents now owed no liability.

Mr. Jones submitted that the affidavits filed on behalf of the respondents were not to be relied upon, and that the evidence was not sufficient to show that the money had been paid to Mahomet.

De Villiers, C.J.: Not a word is said by the respondents in their affidavits in regard to the more important allegation made by the petitioner in his affidavit that they had expressly promised to delay the payments in order that he (the petitioner) might get the amounts as they fell due. In the absence of any denial by them of their promise, I prefer to believe what the petitioner stated in his affidavit, and I entirely disbelieve what they state in their affidavits. It is too prevalent a thing with these Indian traders that, as soon as they are in difficulties, as soon as a summons is served upon them, they immediately find some compatriots who are prepared to purchase the property from them and take an obligation upon themselves, without really meeting the obligation towards the creditors. This appears to me to be one of those cases. If the respondents had been prepared to show that it was not such a case, I should certainly have expected from them a far fuller affidavit than they have made. They fail entirely to meet the most important allegation made by the petitioner in his affidavit. I take it that they still have the money in their hands, and that they still owe the money to the defendant Mahomet, and that being my opinion the rule must be made absolute, with costs.

PAMA V. FREMANTLE.

This was an application for an order extending the time within which an appeal might be prosecuted, the time allowed under the rules having expired on the 7th March. The matter originally came before the Magistrate's Court at Matatiele on the 20th October last, when judgment was given for the defendants. This judgment was appealed against in the Eastern Districts Court on the 7th December, and the judgment of the Court below was thereupon reversed to one of judgment for the plaintiff. The present applicant, Fremantle, desired to appeal to the Supreme Court from the decision of the Eastern Districts Court. Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the applicant; Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for the respondent.

After the affidavits had been read, and counsel had been heard in argument,

An order was granted extending the time for prosecution of the appeal until the end of the May term, costs to be costs in the cause.

BRUMMER V. ESTATE STEYN.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, on behalf of the petitioner, Barend Jacobus Brummer, for an order compelling the respondent to sign a certain transfer. The point at issue between the parties was as to the dividing line between two farms. Mr. Jones said that the respondent had sworn an affidavit, in which she put forward her version, and said that she did not desire any litigation, and left the matter to the decision of the Court.

Rule nisi granted, calling upon the respondent to show cause why an order should not be made as prayed, rule to be returnable on the 20th April.

DEVIS V. McDONALD.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved, on behalf of Leon Devis, for an order compelling respondent to disclose particulars of a claim in reconvention for the sum of £91 16s. 9d., made by the respondent in an action now pending in this Court in which the applicant was the plaintiff. Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for the respondent. The plaintiff claimed £51 11s. for salary; the defendant admitted liability for salary and certain board and lodging to the amount of £31 10s. 9d. In reconvention, however, the defendant said that the plaintiff had falsely and fraudulently claimed for amounts for personal expenses largely in excess of what he had actually spent.

Mr. De Villiers said that no dates or amounts as to the alleged overcharges were given, and that plaintiff was thereby embarrassed.

Mr. Buchanan said that there was no Rule of Court to enable such an application as this to be made. The charge of the defendant related simply to board and lodgings.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is worth while considering whether the Court should not frame rules to meet a case like the present. Cases undoubtedly arise in which, quite independently of the rules of Court, it would be advisable that the Court should have and exercise the power of ordering particulars being given. But no such rule is in existence yet. I do not say that the absence of such a rule would have justified the Court in cases where it is perfectly clear that a party is unable to plead properly owing to the vague and embarrassing nature of his opponent's pleadings or owing to the absence of details—I say a case might arise in which the Court would order particulars to be given for the purpose of enabling a party properly to plead. In the present case, however, no such application was made to the Court before the plaintiff replied to the plea. Now, having pleaded, he comes and asks for his particulars. In my opinion it is not a case in which the Court should go out of its way to assist the plaintiff, seeing that he did not himself apply to the Court by exception or otherwise before he filed his replication to the plea. It is quite true that now the plaintiff will have to be prepared, in order to meet his case, with particulars as to these expenses of personal board and lodging, but it does not seem to me to be such a very wide range for him to go over. The Court will make no order on the application, question of costs to stand over until after the trial.

MIDDLETON V. WATERCHUTE CO.

Award of arbitrator—Costs.

This was an application to have a certain award of an arbitrator made a Rule of Court, subject to an amendment of the last paragraph, so as to provide for the costs being paid by the respondents.

The applicant erected by contract the waterchute at the recent Cape Town Industrial Exhibition. The arbitrator in his award made no order as to costs.

The affidavit of the applicant, Fossey John Middleton, a builder and contractor, stated that he and the respondents subscribed to a certain deed of submission, dated the 10th February, and on the 27th February an award was made and published, pursuant to the said submission. The respondents had taken up the award and paid the costs thereof, as well as the costs of the shorthand writers' services, hire of room, etc. Deponent had substantially succeeded in the claim, and he submitted that the costs mentioned in the last paragraph of the award should have been made in his favour. He asked that the respondents should be ordered to pay the costs.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What does the deed of submission say?]

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for the applicant): The deed of submission says that the matter of costs is in the discretion of the arbitrator.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How can the Court interfere?]

Mr. Searle said he believed the Court could only interfere in a very special case. He would call his lordship's attention to the case of Wynberg Municipality v. Cape Town Council (9 Juta 412). He might shortly state the claims that were made and the amounts awarded. In the deed of submission, the whole claim of the applicant was £1,122 12s., made up of certain six items. On the other hand, the respondents claimed against the applicant £1,538, made up of five items, quite different from those of the applicant. The award of the arbitrator was for £1,026 9s., on the applicant's claim, and for £30 on the respondent's counter-claim, so that the applicant recovered a balance of £996 9s., i.e., he recovered within £130 of his whole claim.

The answering affidavit of Joseph C. Jones, secretary and managing director of the respondent company, stated that the company submitted that the award was not valid, inasmuch as the arbitrator had awarded the applicant £420 as hire of certain machinery, whereas the hire of the said machinery formed no part of the said submission. He also urged that the award was against the weight of evidence. Mr. W. P. Buchanan (for the respondents) opposed the award being made a Rule of Court, and said that they were desirous of applying for a fresh arbitration, or for the dispute between applicant and themselves to be dealt with by this Court. Counsel said that the arbitrator, in his award, stated that he had, in assessing the amount due to the plaintiff included a sum of £420 as cost of the hire of the said machinery and plant for Messrs. Cunningham and Gearing. Counsel pointed out that the machinery belonged to Cunningham and Gearing, and that the applicant had no right to the sum of £420 or any portion thereof. He urged, further, that the referee's award of bonus to the applicant was based on a miscalculation as to the contract between the parties.

Mr. Searle said that Cunningham and Gearing were really sub-contractors under the applicant, and the sum of £420 had to be paid by somebody. Clearly this matter was included in the submission, because it was part of the applicant's contract price of £1,875. The company said they preferred not to deal with Cunningham and Gearing directly, and the applicant therefore engaged Cunningham and Gearing to fix the machinery, and also hired the machinery at a certain rate.

De Villiers, C.J., observed that if the arbitrator had said nothing as to the reasons for his award, they would probably have heard nothing further about this matter.

Mr. Searle: The whole thing arises from the way the arbitrator put it.

Mr. Buchanan said that the respondent's position was that they did not want to pay for the hire of the machinery twice over.

Mr. Olive (the arbitrator) was called, and in answer to the Court, said that in the contract price of £1,875 the amount of £420 for the hire of machinery was included. The defendant company counter-claimed £420, and said that the machinery was theirs. In his award he stipulated that Messrs. Cunningham and Gearing were to be entitled to recover £420 from the applicant, and to take the machinery away.

Witness, on being questioned by Mr. Buchanan, said that as arbitrator he objected to giving details showing how his award of £1,026 in favour of the applicant was arrived at. His object in putting this clause into the award was to make it clear that the Waterchute Company would not be liable to Messrs. Cunningham and Gearing for the hire of the machinery.

Mr. Searle, on the question of costs, cited the case of Wynberg Municipality v. Town Council of Cape Town (9 Juta 412), and submitted that the applicants, having succeeded almost on the whole of their claim, were entitled to costs.

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an application to have an award made a Rule of Court, subject, however, to a condition that the award as to costs is not to stand, but that the respondents, the Waterchute Company, should be ordered to pay those costs. I am clearly of opinion, however, that as the parties have left the question of costs to the arbitrator, it requires a very clear case of impropriety on the part of the arbitrator to justify the Court in altering his award. It is true that, according to the ordinary practice of this Court, the applicant would have had his costs, considering that he recovered a very large proportion of the amount claimed by him, and that the respondents recovered a very small proportion, but still they recovered some proportion, and I am unable to say that it was such a gross error on the part of the arbitrator as to justify the Court in amending the award in the manner asked for. But the respondents again object on other grounds, the chief ground being that a sum of £420 was wrongly awarded by the arbitrator, and that the decision upon that point had not been referred to the arbitrator by the deed of submission. There is no doubt that the clause relating to this sum of £420 is exceedingly ambiguous, and there is much force in Mr. Buchanan's argument that it might be read as if it were a matter quite outside the deed of submission, and as if the amount of £420 was practically ordered to be paid twice over. On going more fully into the case, however, it is quite clear that the arbitrator simply expressed himself wrongly. He wanted to give a reason—he made a mistake by giving reasons. If he had simply satisfied himself with saying that so much was due, no question would have arisen—he wanted to make this award perfectly clear, and instead of making it clear, he made it perfectly obscure. The object, I think, was to leave no doubt upon the question as to who was to pay Cunningham and Gearing. That being the case, I consider that the objection to the £420 falls to the ground. As to the two other objections, they are really objections the Court cannot entertain. If there were no evidence here in support of the decision of the arbitrator, it might be considered a question of such gross impropriety as to justify the Court in interfering, but then there is some evidence in support of the decision of the arbitrator on both the points. The Court will not now consider it part of its duty to go into the evidence, in order to ascertain whether the decision is against the weight of evidence. The objections, therefore, in my opinion, fall to the ground, and the award should be made Rule of Court, with costs of the opposition.

Mr. Buchanan: Does your lordship allow costs of opposition against us?

[De Villiers, C.J.: Oh, yes. Of course, there would have been some costs even if there had been no opposition. The costs occasioned by the opposition are to be paid by the respondents.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

ADMISSIONS.

{ 1905.
Mar. 21st.

Mr. Roux moved for the admission of Wm. Duncan Campbell as an attorney and notary. Counsel said that the papers were in order, except that no birth certificate was attached, but it was clear that the applicant was of full age.

Application granted, oath to be taken before the R.M. of Steynsburg.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for the admission of Claud Merrington as a conveyancer.

Application granted and oath administered.

Robert Greening asked for leave to mention the matter of his suspension from the roll of attorneys, and applied for re-admission.

The Registrar informed his lordship that the application had not been set down.

Applicant: The order of suspension gave me leave to apply after the 16th March.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Yes, but that does not dispense with the necessity of setting it down.]

Applicant: I could not set it down, because to-day is not a motion day.

Mr. Searle, K.C., said that he was instructed by the Incorporated Law Society to apply for a postponement of any hearing of this application for a month. The Law Society would have to make certain inquiries in the matter, and it would be necessary to obtain some evidence from Natal. Applicant was suspended in Natal in June, 1904.

Applicant: That was in consequence of the order made by this Court. The adjournment of the hearing, my Lord, will increase my suspension to thirteen months.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I am afraid I cannot give you any special facilities. The case has not been set down for to-day, and the only available day will be the first Thursday of next term, when the application will be heard.]

Mr. Searle said that Mr. Greening had not yet paid the costs of the last application of the Law Society.

De Villiers, C.J., said he thought the applicant should first pay the costs of that application.

Mr. Greening asked if the application could be allowed to stand over, subject to his paying the costs of the last application.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Yes.]

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers mentioned the application of Mr. Fletcher for admission as an attorney of this Court.

Mr. Searle, K.C., said that the Incorporated Law Society were not at present prepared to offer any opinion with regard to the application.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I think the matter had better be set down in the ordinary way, on a date on which motions are heard. The Registrar has had no notice of this application. I would also say that I have continually had to make remarks about the Law Society not taking a definite stand. They come and cast doubts, and then leave the responsibility with the Court. If they think the man should be admitted let them raise no objection. If they think he should not be admitted then let them say so. Let the matter stand over till the first Thursday of next month.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

MOKADOM V. HASSAN. { 1905.
Mar. 21st.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved, on notice, calling on respondent to show cause why the judgment given in the trial cause on the 20th October, 1904, at the suit of the plaintiff, and by reason of the defendant's default of appearance, should not be set aside and defendant allowed to purge his default and defend the action, and why costs should not be paid by respondent. Counsel read an affidavit by Said Hassan, of Kimberley, and late of Mafeking, who said that he did not owe the plaintiff, Ismael Mokadom, the money claimed by him in the summons, and that the plaintiff had wrongly procured judgment against him. Further affidavits were read to the effect that the plaintiff had admitted having obtained judgment against the applicant in mistake.

Mr. Roux read a replying affidavit sworn by the man holding the plaintiff's power of attorney, the defendant being at present in India.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: The question is whether sufficient cause has been shown for setting aside the judgment given against the defendant. That judgment was given as far back as October last year, and now, in March, 1905, an application is made to set aside the judgment on the ground that the amount was not due. I must say that if the application had been made immediately after judgment had been given there would have been strong grounds for granting it, seeing that the statement that the £31 was in respect of a guarantee is not specifically denied. But the plaintiff does not, in his affidavit, repeat his claim for £31, and he makes the further statement that the several letters were written by him to the defendant before the summons was issued, and he got no answer to any of them. That statement is not denied by the defendant. Well, plaintiff makes further statements as to the defendant having disposed of his business and absconded from Cape Town, which statements are also not denied. Anyhow, I am not satisfied that there is sufficient cause shown, the lapse of time is so great, and, moreover, the statement as to the defendant's illness is not supported by any affidavit of a medical man. There is, therefore, not sufficient cause shown, and the application must be refused, with costs.

VOGEL V. VOGEL.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, on behalf of the petitioner, Mrs. Vogel, for leave to sue her husband, Rudolph Vogel, by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which divorce. The petitioner said her husband carried on business in partnership as a manufacturer's agent in St. George's-street, Cape Town. Respondent was now believed to be in Holland.

Leave granted to sue as prayed, citation to be returnable on the 12th June, and to be served on the defendant personally.

ESTATE RUSSELL V. RONDEBOSCH MUNICIPALITY.

This was an application upon notice of motion calling on the respondent Municipality to show cause why they should not be ordered to sanction the sale of certain property in that Municipality, on the Glendarragh Estate, belonging to the estate of the late Wm. Alfred Russell, according to the plan of sub-division submitted to them for approval, or, in the alternative, why the applicant should not be entitled to sell the same without the sanction of the Municipality.

The affidavit of Mr. Gother Mann stated that the Council refused to sanction the plan, on the ground that it did not show roads of sufficient width to satisfy them. The Council had no right to demand that the roads should be widened at the expense of the estate.

The answering affidavit of A. W. Sawkins, Mayor of Rondebosch, stated that there were two roads adjacent to the estate which the Council held to be secondary or branch roads within the meaning of their regulations. One of these was known as the Lovers' Walk. The regulations specified that such roads should be of a width of not less than 30 ft. It was because the applicants did not show roads 30 ft. wide that the Council refused to sanction the plan of sub-division.

The replying affidavit of Mr. Mann stated that the Council was trying to obtain land from the estate for the benefit of the ratepayers at large without paying for the same.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the applicant; Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the respondents.

Having heard Mr. De Villiers in argument,

De Villiers, C.J.: The 7th section of the Act 41 of 1899 makes it unlawful "for any owner of property to sell such property in subdivided portions without having first submitted the plan of such sub-division to the Council and obtained the sanction of the Council thereto." The applicants desired to sub-divide their property, and they submitted a plan of such sub-division to the Council, and now this Court is appealed to, as if it were a Court of Appeal, from the decision of the Municipal Council. The Court has never arrogated to itself the position of a Court of Appeal in such cases. The proper tribunal to decide whether the sub-division is to be allowed or not is the Council. Of course, if the Council acts improperly, if it acts illegally, or, I may say, if it acts wholly unreasonably, the Court would have the power to interfere upon general principles, quite independently of the Act, but a clear case to that effect must be made out, and certainly, in the present case, no such clear case has been made out. It may well be that, if the judges were Municipal Councillors, in this particular case they might have acted differently, but that is not the point of view from which they should regard the matter. The question is, has the Council acted within the limits of the law without such impropriety as would justify the Court in interfering? It is clear that if a person sub-divides his property for the purpose of a sale he must do so with the object of selling it to persons who intend to build upon the different lots. Therefore, the very subdivision implies a large addition to the buildings in the place, and when there is a considerable addition to the buildings the necessity arises for increasing the width of the roads. In regard to one of these roads, the Lovers' Walk, which has hitherto been 22 ft. in width, the Council now insists upon its being 30 ft. wide. The owners, of course, can avoid any interference by the Council by simply not sub-dividing, but, if they sub-divide, then they must comply with the requirements of the Municipality, and it does not seem to me by any means an unreasonable requirement, when these lots are sub-divided so as to become small lots, that a road, which up to the present has been 22 ft. wide, should be 30 ft. It does not seem to me to be so wholly unreasonable as to justify the interference of the Court. The same remark applies to the continuation of the old road. The old road is to be 30 ft., but at one portion of it the applicants propose to retain it at its former width, which is less than 30 ft. I am not prepared to say that it is such an improper requirement, or such a grossly unreasonable requirement as to justify the Court in assuming the position of a Court of Appeal from a decision of the Municipal Council. In my opinion, the application should be refused with costs. The costs, I suppose, will come out of the estate, seeing that the application is made on behalf of the estate.

WILSON AND CATHCART V. YOUNG.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an order in terms of the report of the special referee in an action in which the applicant claimed a sum of £224 10s as balance of a building contract, and also a lien upon the building, pending the payment of such sum as might be found to be due. There was no appearance for the respondent. The matter had been standing over for production of an affidavit of service upon respondents, which was now read.

Order granted in terms of the report of special referee.

Ex parte LAZARUS AND OTHERS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem for the petitioners' minor sister, Marie Lazarus, in an action arising out of certain matters relating to the estate of the late Laurence Lazarus, of Cape Town and London.

Order granted, appointing junior counsel of the plaintiffs in the action (Mr. Jones) as curator ad litem to the minor Marie.

DEUTSCHES HAUS AND CO. V. JULIE DOSE AND OTHERS.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for a rule nisi temporarily interdicting Julie Dose, widow of Louis Dose, a provision merchant, of Cape Town, and others, from disposing of the proceeds of certain policy of insurance in the Economic Life Insurance Company until the balance of an alleged debt due to the petitioners, amounting to £448, shall have been paid. cently, left the said policy of life insurance as security for a certain debt.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

De Villiers, C.J.: I see no reason for altering the view which I held at the time the application was made to me in Chambers. If the proceeds of the policy belong to the estate, in which case the applicants should make their claim in the ordinary course against the estate, the Court would, by ordering this money to be paid to the petitioners, be giving them a preference against the other creditors of the estate. If the proceeds belonged to the widow, I should be loth to hold that, because of an unguarded statement made by her to the applicant at a time when her grief must have been very recent—it is said that more than a month had elapsed, but certainly not more than six weeks.

Mr. Searle (interposing): Less than a month.

De Villiers, C.J.: Very well, I should say that is recent enough, and I consider that it is not clear to my mind that there was a binding contract made by the widow under those circumstances, by which she is bound to forego her rights in the estate to the policy and pay a sum over to the applicants, who would have no claim against her. At all events, it is a case in which she ought to have notice of the application before the Court makes an order upon her. A rule nisi might have the effect of leading the parties to suppose that the Court is of opinion that there is a prima facie case against her, but I do not think there is a prima facie case against her. Therefore, there will be no order.

DONAGHY V. ESTATE HABLUTZEL.

This was an application upon notice of motion brought by Elizabeth Sarah Donaghy, daughter of the late Hendrik Pieter Hablutzel, for an order directing the Board of Executors as executors testamentary in the estate of her father to pay out certain money. Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the applicant; Mr. Upington was for the respondents.

From the affidavits it appeared that the testator directed, by clause 3 of his will, "that for the purpose of preserving my tomb-stone and keeping the vault in order and repair, and the surroundings decent, I wish my executors to use a sum from my estate which, when invested, shall produce yearly £60, to be used and appropriated as my executors and administrators shall decide on, for the upkeep and maintenance of the vault of myself and family." Under the will two daughters were excluded from participating in the estate except as to a life interest. It was admitted that, under the clause, a sum of £159 had accrued as interest accumulated and not used. Petitioner said that the grave-yard where the vault was situated was now closed. She claimed that, as one of the heirs, she was entitled to an eighth share of the accumulations of the said sum, and also to one-eighth of such portion of the said sum as shall not be used and appropriated in the future. The Board of Executors, while not appearing to oppose the application, felt that under the terms of the will they would not be entitled to make a distribution such as the petitioner asked for, unless so directed by an order of Court.

De Villiers, C.J.: The testator apparently thought that more would be required for the up-keep and maintenance of the vault and tomb-stone of himself and family than has, in fact, been required. Since his death the up-keep has cost considerably less than £60, and the question is, who has to get the balance? Well, clearly the heirs. There is no one else who can claim it. The heirs being in the position of residuary legatees, they are entitled to any portion which lapses, and this is practically a lapse of a portion of a legacy, so that, in my opinion, the applicants would be entitled to receive so much of the amount as has not been expended by the executors. Then, as to those who have only a life interest, although that does not form part of the application, I may at once say that they would be entitled to treat the annual balance also as a part of the interest which has been accruing during the year, and to them, therefore, would be payable an eighth share each of such balance. The executors were, in my opinion, quite justified in not consenting to this application without an order of Court. But I have no hesitation now in making the order, costs to come out of the estate.

Ex parte WARNER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones said that this matter had been standing over pending a report by Mr. Stanford, the Assistant Chief Magistrate of the Transkeian Territories. The application was for leave to sell certain property of a native, the late William Rambani, in the district of Queen's Town, to his son, Edward William Rambani, and for an order directing how the proceeds should be disposed of. Mr. Stanford, in his report, said that it was possible to administer this estate according to native law, which, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, would in his opinion be the fairest way of distributing the proceeds of the sale.

Order granted in terms of Mr. Stanford's report.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

SPECIAL CASE.

MASKEW V. ESTATE MASKEW. { 1905.
 { Mar. 22nd.

Joint will—Husband and wife—
Massing of joint estate—Confirmation by survivor of joint will.

The testators, being husband and wife, made a joint will, by which the testator instituted as his heirs the testatrix and his children by her, and the testatrix instituted the testator and her children by him, and of a previous marriage, and they directed that the survivor was to remain in full and free possession of the whole of the joint estate. The testator died first, and after him his son William, who left one child, namely, the plaintiff. The testatrix made a will, revoking all former wills, except the joint will.

Held, that even if there was no such massing of the joint estate as to make the joint will binding on the survivor after adiation, the effect of the recognition by the testatrix of the joint will was to shew that she intended by her separate will to treat the first will as binding and to deal only with her after acquired property, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the share of the joint estate, which would have accrued to her father if he had survived his mother.

Held further, that under the joint will the survivor was entitled to deal with her child's portion as her own, and that it consequently forms part of the property disposed of by her separate will.

This was a special case stated by Dorothy Maskew, assisted by her mother, the widow of Wm. Henry Maskew, against the executor testamentary in the estate of the late Maria Maskew, widow of Wm. Wilson Maskew, for a determination by the Court of the rights of the plaintiff under the joint estate of William Wilson Maskew and Maria Maskew.

The special case was stated in the following terms:

1. The plaintiff is Dorothy Maskew, duly assisted and represented by Irene Ellen Maskew, widow of the late William Henry Maskew, in her capacity as mother and natural guardian.

2. The defendant is George William Steytler, in his capacity as secretary to the Colonial Orphan Chamber and as such the executor testamentary of the estate of the late Maria Maskew, widow of the late William Wilson Maskew.

3. The said William Wilson Maskew, and his wife Maria Maskew were married in community of property, and on December 8, 1887, they executed the mutual will copy whereof is annexed hereto marked "A."

4. Under the said will the testator instituted as his heirs the testatrix and his children in equal shares, and the testatrix appointed as her heirs the testator together with her children by the said marriage and by a previous marriage.

5. The testator died on December 20, 1893, leaving him surviving his widow, the said Maria Maskew, and the following children, Maria Maskew, William Henry Maskew, Francis Hortensia Vester Maskew, and Frederick Thomas Charles Maskew, and leaving the said will unrevoked.

6. The said Maria Maskew, adiated under the said will received benefits thereunder, and remained in possession of the whole of the joint estate, as it was provided in the said will that she might do.

7. Shortly after the testator's death an account of the whole joint estate was framed by the executors of the said will, no sum was therein awarded to any of the heirs, but the gross balance of the joint estate was shown therein, the survivor being stated therein to be entitled to a life interest on the said balance.

8. The said William Henry Maskew died on April 12, 1903, leaving one child, the plaintiff, surviving.

9. The testatrix, the said Maria Maskew, died on July 31, 1904, leaving her surviving two children by her first and three by her second marriage.

10. The said Maria Maskew left at her death a further will executed on June 16, 1903, in which she revoked all former testamentary dispositions save and except the aforesaid joint will, and made certain bequests to her children by both marriages, a copy of the said will is hereunto annexed marked "B."

The plaintiff contends:

11. That the said Dorothy Maskew is entitled under the said joint will to the share of the joint estate to which the said William Henry Maskew would have been entitled had he survived the testatrix.

12. That the child's portion bequeathed to the testatrix by the testator forms part of the said joint estate, and should be distributed under and in accordance with the said joint will.

The defendant contends:

13. That there is not effected any massing of the joint estate by the mutual will of the testator and testatrix.

14. That the last will of the testatrix, dated June 16, 1903, must in law govern and determine the distribution of her entire estate, including the half of the joint estate and the portion inherited by her from the testator.

15. That under her last will the testatrix has made no provision for the plaintiff.

Wherefore the parties pray for judgment in terms of their respective contentions with costs.

Mr. Searle, K.C., for plaintiff; Sir H. Juta, K.C., for defendant.

Mr. Searle said that if it were clear under this will that the two estates were massed then he submitted that the plaintiff's first contention would be substantially proved. He submitted that the intention under the first will was to give the testatrix, Mrs. Maskew, merely a usufruct. She herself seemed to have treated it as a life interest.

De Villiers, C.J. (interposing) said that as regarded the first contention he should like to hear Sir Henry Juta. The second contention seemed to be rather more doubtful, because what struck him was that the testator left Mrs. Maskew a child's portion absolutely.

Mr. Searle said that in the second will Mrs. Maskew did not purport to deal with a child's portion. She did not take a child's portion out of the joint estate, and put it away to be dealt with separately. The intention under the will, it would be gathered, was to benefit even more remote descendants in the direct line than the children of the testator and testatrix. He urged that the account and the fact that no mention was made of the child's portion in the second will would appear to support the second contention of the plaintiff.

Sir H. Juta submitted that there was no massing with regard to the William Maskew's share of the inheritance. The whole will must be read together, and in order to give it any meaning at all they must construe it to mean that Mrs. Maskew confirmed her previous will, so far as she had not altered it by the second will, and that she confirmed what she had said in the first will except so far as the dispositions in the second will were contrary to the first will. He claimed that Mrs. Maskew had the right when she made the second document to make any will she chose.

De Villiers, C.J.: According to the special case the testator's wife, Maria Maskew, adiated under the will, and she seems to have recognised—I gather that from the admission in the special case—the joint will as one binding upon her. Accordingly when she proceeded to make her separate will after the death of her husband, the very first provision in that will was: I, Maria Maskew, widow of the late William Wilson Maskew, do hereby revoke all former testamentary dispositions made by me save and except the joint will made by me and the said late William Wilson Maskew, bearing date the eighth day of December, 1887, and since lodged in the Master's Office, Cape Town." I take the fair and true meaning of this to be that she, the testatrix, now recognises that will to be binding upon her, and it is upon this basis that she proceeds to make her subsequent dispositions. It is unnecessary therefore to consider whether there has been such a massing of the joint estate as to make the joint will binding on the survivor after adiation. So far as the children are concerned, the testator and testatrix both agreed, whatever they may have disagreed about, that those children should be the heirs. The testator wished the children of his wife to be his heirs; the testatrix wished the children of her husband, that is the testator, to be her heirs. Therefore, there is, in regard to the children, a joint desire on the part of the testators to make them the heirs, and, in my opinion, that is what the testatrix intended by her will when she said that she does not revoke it, and practically confirms it. If that view of the case be correct, then it would follow, in my opinion, that the plaintiff, who is admitted to be the only daughter of one of the children of the testator, should take the share which the father was entitled to. It is true that her father died before her grandmother, his mother, but it appears to me that this was entirely a usufructuary disposition. The testatrix was intended to have the usufruct of the whole of the estate, and therefore the inheritance of the father of the plaintiff did vest in him before the death of the testators, and she therefore is entitled to step into his shoes upon his death, and to claim his share of the joint estate.

The next point is, what forms part of this joint estate; in other words, was the testatrix entitled under the will to her child's portion? In my opinion, the point is perfectly clear. The testator instituted as his heirs the testatrix and his children in equal shares. The use of the word "testatrix" would have been wholly futile, would have meant nothing, if the plaintiff's contention be correct. The Court, therefore, finds: (1) That Wm. Henry Maskew was one of the heirs of the testators, under the joint will of the testators, and that the plaintiff is entitled to the share which would have accrued to him if he had survived his mother; and (2) that the child's portion bequeathed by the testator to the testatrix forms part of the estate which she was entitled to dispose of by her subsequent will. Costs to come out of the joint estate.

STABLEFORD V. JOHNS.

Mr. Alexander moved, on behalf of William Stableford, general agent, Cape Town, for an order directing the respondent, Percy Johns, forthwith to deliver to the applicant the goods enumerated in the auctioneer's statement, annexed to his affidavit. Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for the respondent.

Mr. Buchanan took the objection that the applicant should proceed by action, and not by motion.

From the affidavits it appeared that the respondent was arrested on a certain charge, and that some negotiations took place between the applicant and respondent as to finding a bail bond. The applicant said that he undertook, on his own securities, to provide bail in the sum of £300. Subsequently a sale of the respondent's furniture took place at his house at Mowbray. The applicant said that in order to protect his own interests he bought a quantity of the goods, which would otherwise have been knocked down at very low prices. He also said that he made other disbursements on behalf of the respondent in connection with his trial before the Magistrate's Court. The respondent now refused to let him have delivery of the goods which he had bought. The respondent denied several of the allegations made by the applicant.

During the reading of the affidavits,

De Villiers, C.J. interposed, and said it was clear that the case was one in which the plaintiff should bring an action, seeing that there were so many disputed points between the parties. The Court would direct the applicant to proceed by action, notice of motion to stand for summons, and costs to abide the result.

RESSEY V. HOLLANDER.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the applicant Hollander; Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for the respondent, Ressey.

From the affidavits it appeared that the parties had carried on a panoramic show at the recent Cape Town International Exhibition. The present respondent, Ressey, alleged that the applicant had taken away certain sets of pictures to which he had no right, and, upon a representation to the Court that Ressey was about to leave for Durban, Natal, he obtained a writ of arrest, and afterwards obtained an interdict against Hollander, the writ being then suspended. The present question before the Court was as to who should pay the costs of the writ of arrest.

De Villiers, C.J.: The defendant, the present applicant, has already been released, and the only question the Court has now to decide is as to who is to pay the costs of the arrest. The affidavit made by the plaintiff for the purpose of procuring the arrest, states that "the defendant told me personally this morning he was leaving for Durban, Natal, to-day, at 4 p.m., and, in proof of his statement, I visited his boarding-house, and found all his goods packed ready to be sent off." On the other side, the defendant positively denies having made such an admission, and he denies that his goods were packed, and he produced his father to support him that there was no such packing, and his landlady, who makes an affidavit to the same effect, that the goods had not been packed, and that she had no conception of the defendant leaving. Under these circumstances, the weight of the evidence is entirely in favour of the defendant. It appears to me that the plaintiff was somewhat hasty in these proceedings. We find that not only did he obtain a writ of arrest, but he also obtained an interdict. Having discharged this double-barrelled gun at the defendant, I think, at all events, he should pay the costs of the one application, which was wholly unnecessary, and which is not supported by real facts. The writ will be discharged, with costs.

IN CHAMBERS.

MOTION.

DOWELL V. POLAND. { 1905.
Mar. 27th.

This was an application, on notice of motion, to set aside a certain writ of arrest against the applicant, Poland, on the ground that he was not indebted to the respondent in the amount claimed or any portion thereof. Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for the applicant, Arthur Poland; the respondent, George Dowell, of 4, Savings Bank Buildings, Cape Town, appeared in person.

Mr. Buchanan read the affidavit of the applicant, Dowell, on which the writ against his client was issued under date of the 24th March. The affidavit stated that the respondent was indebted to the applicant in the sum of £150, amount of money lent and advanced from time to time by him to meet respondent's bills. Deponent had reason to believe that the applicant was about to leave this colony, having booked a passage by the steamship Devon, which is due to sail for Buenos Ayres on the 26th inst. The plaintiff was unable to discover that the applicant had any other security for the said debt. Mr. Buchanan proceeded to read a lengthy affidavit by the applicant denying that he owed the respondent any money whatever. No demand had been made upon him in respect of any debt until he was served with the writ of arrest, nor had it ever previously been suggested to him that he owed the plaintiff any sum. They were formerly intimate friends, but owing to the fact that respondent had recently spoken disparagingly of him behind his back to a lady, to whom he was engaged, their relations had been strained. He had stayed with the plaintiff at various boarding houses and hotels, but it had always been as a guest of the plaintiff, whom, in return, he had assisted in his business, both in clerical work and in obtaining orders. It was his intention to proceed to Buenos Ayres with Miss Neva Carr Glynn, to whom he was engaged, with the intention of getting married there as soon as possible. He intended afterwards to return to the Colony. The plaintiff had demanded from him that he should pay his fare so that he also could proceed to South America, but witness had refused to do so and had declined to have anything further to do with him. Counsel also read supporting affidavits by Fredk. Charles Kipps and Miss Neva Carr-Glynn, of the Sass and Nelson Comedy Company.

Respondent said that he had only been served with copies of the affidavits that morning and he had had no opportunity of replying to them. He, however, made a statement to the Court, in which he undertook to pay the applicant's expenses from the day he met him. When he met him applicant was staying at the Royal Hotel, Plein-street, whence he was ejected because he could not pay his bills. Witness produced certain bills which he had since paid on behalf of the applicant and Miss Neva Carr-Glynn. There were hotel charges in connection with the Metropole Hotel, Somerset Strand. He had kept the applicant four months in Mill-street, paying his board and lodgings, also for clothing, boots, etc. Applicant did absolutely nothing in return for him; he was without occupation and was going away to South America for pleasure. The bills showed actually £75 paid for the applicant, but there was also money advanced. Witness took no promissory notes from the applicant because he did not know at that time what sort of a man he was. Applicant had told him repeatedly that he was expecting money from Home and from Johannesburg and that he would repay witness.

Cross-examined: He denied that he wanted to go to Buenos Ayres. He had never stated that he would swear Poland's life away if he did not pay his fare to Buenos Ayres nor had he threatened to shoot him. He was not animated in these proceedings by spite. On one occasion Mr. Poland and Miss Carr-Glynn had a quarrel at the dinner table and the former struck Miss Carr-Glynn in the face and knocked the soup spoon out of her mouth. Witness told him that if he did not leave the lady alone he would settle with him (applicant). Applicant then turned round and blackguarded him. He denied that he had been standing treat for the applicant. The quarrel was not occasioned by witness having made disparaging remarks about applicant behind his back. Applicant wished Miss Glynn to say a certain thing to witness in applicant's presence but she would not say it.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What do you mean?]

That I had said to Mr. Kipps that I knew more about Miss Glynn than applicant did.

Applicant, in answer to his lordship, said that he had been engaged to be married to Miss Glynn about six months.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How is it you are not married yet?]

Witness: It has been left over and left over for one reason and other.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But you take this lady away from the rest of the company?]

Witness said that Miss Glynn would be performing at the Tivoli, apart from the Sass and Nelson Company.

Answering further questions, witness said that he was intending to marry Miss Glynn in South Africa. He would not, however, get married until he returned to this country.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is Miss Glynn?]

Witness: She is a leading member of the Sass and Nelson Operatic Company. During further statements, witness said that the respondent had told him that he was making £250 a month. Witness did a good deal of work for the respondent; he obtained a considerable number of orders for clothing on his behalf. The orders were executed in England. Respondent, he considered, had sworn the affidavit out of viciousness. Witness had been under arrest since Friday.

De Villiers, C.J.: This application came before me in Chambers, but I pointed out that, according to the affidavit, there was a debt due, and defendant was about to leave the Colony, and that, therefore, an application should be made to the Registrar in the ordinary course, and upon that affidavit the Registrar was quite justified in issuing a writ of arrest, because the affidavit was apparently in order. But, on going into the facts of the case, it appears to me that that affidavit was somewhat recklessly sworn. There is a statement that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of £150, "being the amount of moneys lent and advanced from time to time by me to meet his bills." When the plaintiff is examined he is unable to prove, at all events, £150 to be due. He produces some accounts, and it is quite consistent with these accounts that the defendant's statement may be correct, that he was throughout the guest of the plaintiff. The two bills are produced, one for £7 4s. and the other for £6 14s. 3d., which are duplicates, not originals. These show that there were moneys paid by the plaintiff for the defendant. As I say, it is quite consistent with these bills that the defendant may have been the guest of the plaintiff. He swears positively that he was the guest, and, looking at all the facts of the case, I consider that the balance of the testimony is in favour of the defendant, and I must bear in mind in this connection the conduct of the plaintiff in regard to the arrest. Whatever else is in doubt in the matter, one thing is perfectly clear, that at the last moment the plaintiff was willing to forego any claims if the defendant would take him with him to South America. When the Sheriff's officer was waiting to arrest the defendant, the plaintiff came to the defendant in his room at the Kimberley Hotel, and said "Look here, what are you going to do about my going with you to South America? Am I going or not?" To this defendant replied, "I want nothing more to do with you whatever." Upon this the plaintiff said "All right, I have a gentleman downstairs who wants to see you." Plaintiff called up the Sheriff's officer, who placed the defendant under arrest. After hearing the defendant's own version of it, I am satisfied that that is really what occurred, and it appears that the plaintiff has used the Rule of Court as a means of enforcing an extremely doubtful claim. I am inclined to think that he treated the defendant throughout as his guest, and that, now that he has quarrelled with the defendant, he seeks to show by this means that there is a debt due to him from the defendant, and as a means of detaining him here for the purpose of enforcing payment of this doubtful claim. At all events, it is a process where the liberty of the subject is concerned, and the Court should not be the means of depriving any person of his liberty upon a claim of so extremely doubtful a character. For these reasons I am of opinion that the writ should be discharged. I depend upon the defendant's statement that he intends to return to this colony. I hope he will carry that out, so that the plaintiff may have an opportunity of bringing his action hereafter, not that I think he may be able to get much by that action, even should the defendant be fortunate with his speculation at Buenos Ayres in regard to cattle. I am satisfied that there is no debt owing, and, having that opinion, I think that the defendant should not be deprived of his liberty. The writ will, therefore, be discharged, costs of this application to abide the result of any action which may afterwards be brought. If such action is not brought after the return of the defendant to this colony, then in the ordinary course the defendant may apply to this Court for his costs. The writ will stand in place of a summons.

APPENDIX.

NOTE.

The Editor regrets to state that the following important judgments were received too late to follow the respective cases in this report to which they refer:—

MUNICIPALITY OF ADENDORP V. KINGSWELL.

Maasdorp, J.: It appears in this case that in November, 1855, one Adendorff, the owner of a farm in the neighbourhood of Graaff-Reinet, called "De Erf" was desirous of establishing a village on his farm. For that purpose he caused a portion of this land to be laid out by a surveyor in lots or erven, which he sold at public auction on the 20th of November, 1855. Amongst the conditions of sale were the following, which are the only ones material to the issues in this suit: "II. Every purchaser or owner of any erf shall have right to the grazing lands as hereinafter stipulated, and the said grazing lands shall be used by the owners or occupiers of "De Erf," or the future owners also. IV. The grazing land above mentioned, shall consist of all the ground, not being arable land situate on the right or western side of the Sunday River, and shall be exclusively for the use of the occupiers of "De Erf," or any of the occupiers of the ground thereof and owners of erven, and no one shall have the right to accept or allow strange cattle to graze, and every erf shall have the right to keep eight oxen and twelve sheep on the said grazing land. V. No one shall have the right to cut wood on the ground of "De Erf," or damage the growing trees in any way; owners of erven shall, however, be entitled to firewood, by which must be understood dry thorn-wood, and that only on the left or eastern side of the river, as far as the village extends." The village established in 1855 was called Adendorp. On the 5th of November, 1856, another portion of the farm was laid out in erven or lots of ground, and sold at public auction, constituting what are called in this case, the villages of Rouvierville and Retreat. The grazing rights of the erfholders in these villages were similar to those of Adendorp, but their right to firewood is expressed in the following terms: "V. Any owner shall have the right to cut wood as far as his ground or erf extends on both banks of the river, but they shall in no way damage any growing thorn trees, and no one shall cut wood, or in any way damage the trees, along the water-furrow." I have given the conditions respecting the right to firewood of the erfholders of the village of Adendorp in full, not because it is material to the issues directly, but for the light it is said to throw on the condition appertaining to Rouvierville and Retreat. It is admitted that the complaint of the former erfholders in this respect cannot be maintained, because the village of Adendorp had no right to firewood on the west bank of the river, and the operations on the part of the defendant, which was complained of, were confined to that bank only. But a comparison of the conditions has given rise to the contention that whereas the erfholders of Adendorp had no right to interfere with any growing trees, but were to be contented for firewood to take only dry thorn-wood; the erfholders of Rouvierville and Retreat, on the other hand, were entitled to cut wood, so long as they did not damage any growing thorn trees. This is almost a larger right than the plaintiff's seemed at one time to contend for, but I think it must be taken, now that it was agreed at the trial that every erfholder of Rouvierville and Retreat was entitled to cut wood other than growing thorn trees, and in the case of thorn trees they could take dry or dead wood. This right could be exercised by each owner only opposite his own erf on both banks of the river. It was contended for the defendant that the right should be strictly confined to the immediate banks of the river, and not extend inland. But it appears to me, after hearing the description of the country given by the witnesses, that a belt of trees runs along both banks of the river, wider in some parts and narrower in others, but never very wide, and I think the conditions has reference to the whole of the belt, as distinguished from the trees on other parts of the farm. These, therefore, were the grazing rights of the erfholders of Adendorp, Rouvier and Retreat, and the full rights of those of Rouvier and Retreat. A Municipality was thereafter established, embracing the three villages mentioned, called the Municipality of Adendorp. The Commissioners of that Municipality appear as plaintiffs in this case to vindicate the common rights of the inhabitants, and it is admitted by counsel for the defendant that they are entitled to take up that position, in accordance with the cases decided in this Court. In 1901 the defendant purchased the farm "De Erf," which is subject to the above-mentioned servitudes in favour of the erfholders, and he obtained transfer on the 21st day of September, 1901. His main object in the transaction was to make a profit out of the firewood growing on the land, and he says himself, "Before buying, I made a thorough inspection of the property, with a view to ascertaining whether the wood-cutting upon upon the land would recoup me for the purchase." At that time, in consequence of the restrictions imposed under Martial Law, the inhabitants of the town and district of Graaff-Reinet were hindered in their movements about the neighbourhood, and experienced great difficulty in obtaining fuel for ordinary daily use. Any person, who was allowed facilities by the military authorities in this respect, enjoyed a fair prospect of making a good thing out of the sale of firewood. Such facilities were allowed to the defendant, and he was not slow to take advantage of them. The more fuel he could place upon the Graaff-Reinet market during a time which was a close season to most of the inhabitants, the better for him. He says, "I told the woodcutters to cut all wood fit for fuel." Myburgh says, "I was employed in cutting wood for the defendant for about a year. I cut everything suitable that I came across. I cut every kind of bush, if it was suitable. In the matter of bushes, I would not cut anything under one-and-half or two inches in diameter." Cornelis Swanepoel, who was also employed by the defendant to cut wood, stated, "I was told to cut all I could find. The defendant's instructions to me were to cut right and left as you go. I was leaving young trees of about two inches in diameter, but I was told to cut them down." The wood brought into Graaff-Reinet is described by Smith, who bought it for his bakery, and says, "The defendant supplied me with all sorts of wood—plum, witgat, quarri, and others. Some of it was very thin, but we were glad to get anything at that time, as Martial Law was preventing people from coming in with the wood. It was all green wood with which I was supplied. I had never previously bought green plum-tree wood. It is very seldom cut, unless land is being cleared for sowing purposes." This gives a pretty clear idea of the instructions given by the defendant to his workmen, and of the way the work was performed. It seems to me that even if the defendant were acting wholly within his rights in what he did, it would be a very sad day for the country if any large number of farmers were to deal with their land in the way he dealt with his; and disastrous results would follow from the consequent denudation of the country. Fortunately so strong a temptation as existed in this case does not often occur. I am not surprised that Mr. Booysen, a neighbouring farmer, was so shocked when he saw the bank of the river being stripped bare, that he eagerly enquired whether no means in law could be discovered to stop the work. These remarks are only made in passing, because, if the defendant acted within his legal rights, no one has in law a right to complain, and all the Court has to ascertain is if any injury was done by the defendant to the erfholders represented by the plaintiffs for which they are entitled to redress. It was urged that the defendant was not engaged in any worthless or wanton destruction, and for my own part I must say that all that actuated the plaintiff were the commercial and financial considerations of making as large a profit as possible within the exercise of what he regarded as his legal rights. He bought the land for £225, sold about 1,000 loads of wood for something like £2,000, more than half being clear profit, and then resold the property to the Adendorp Municipality for £610, agreeing to forego half the purchase price if the Municipality eradicated the prickly on the land within 12 months. The character of these financial transactions does not affect the legal issue between the parties. The Court has now to decide if the defendant in cutting wood on the farm injured the erfholders in the rights to firewood and grazing under the conditions mentioned above. The plaintiffs complain that the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully cut down and removed all the veld bushes, thorn trees, and other trees and shrubs of every sort growing on the property in violation of the rights of the erfholders, and thereby destroyed the grazing ground thereon. The complaint of the plaintiffs is twofold, first in respect of their loss in firewood; second, in respect of the damage to the grazing. As to the former, the defendant in his plea, after stating that the erfholders at times exceeded their lawful rights in cutting wood, admits that he cut down and removed certain firewood on the west or right bank of the river in respect of which the erfholders of the villages of Rouvierville and Retreat had certain rights of cutting wood in terms of the said conditions, and in respect of any damages suffered by them in this respect he tenders the sum of £25. It was contended at the trial that this tender was not intended to be restricted to this part of the case, but in view of my decision in the case that point will not be of any importance. It was admitted at the trial that the defendant in cutting down all the trees opposite Rouvierville and Retreat acted under a misapprehension, and in ignorance of the fact that the rights attaching to these erven were larger than those belonging to Adendorp in that they extended to the opposite bank of the river. In my opinion the conditions in respect of firewood does not deprive the owner of the property from making a reasonable use of the trees growing on the banks of the river, and from cutting them down as he may from time to time require them, and even selling them as firewood if he were desirous of doing so. But he must respect the rights of the erfholders while exercising his own. They were entitled from time to time to collect dry wood, and even to cut down trees other than thorn trees, which I take to be mimosa trees. These rights must run together, and whether they are exercised reasonably is a relative question dependant always on the special circumstances of each case. But it is not difficult to decide that when the defendant laid bare the banks of the river, as he is in my opinion proved to have done, he wrongfully deprived the erfholders of substantial benefits to which under the conditions of sale they were entitled. Evidence was produced to prove that in time trees would spring up again, but this must necessarily be a process of some years, and the erfholders in the meantime suffer loss for which they have a right to compensation. That some pecuniary loss has been sustained in this respect by each of the erfholders of Rouvierville and Retreat has in my opinion been proved, and the accumulation of dry wood left after the wood-cutting by defendant has not compensated them for their loss, but on the other hand I am satisfied upon the evidence that after the manner in which the erfholders have exercised their rights in the past the annual yield of firewood under the conditions would not have been large. I cannot accept the view that the wood so obtained would have satisfied their daily requirements. The materials provided for assessing damages suffered by the erfholders of Rouvierville and Retreat through loss of firewood is extremely meagre, but it would seem that the belt of wood opposite their erven skirted the river for about 3,000 yards, and extended some distance from the banks, and during the year they collected a fair quantity of firewood, the loss of which they will experience for a number of seasons. I think £100 damages should be allowed in this respect. This is certainly not excessive, but only a rough estimate can be made upon the evidence adduced. The other branch of the case dealing with the grazing rights of all the erfholders is practically the more important of the two to the plaintiffs, but in view of the evidence produced it presents very little difficulty. There is abundant evidence to prove that the defendant in his wood-cutting operations destroyed an immense quantity of bushes and shrubs which constitute the bulk of the pasturage on the slopes of the hills. On the one hand I am of opinion that although the large trees may at certain seasons afford excellent herbage, they do not the less retain the character of firewood which the defendant was entitled to cut down in a reasonable manner; but on the other, although among the bushes or shrubs mentioned some thicker stumps may be found fit for firewood, they nevertheless were regarded by the parties and must be taken to form the grazing for stock provided for in the conditions of sale. It appeared that the erfholders would have a right to place 1,724 small stock and 1,048 head of cattle on the land, and at its best the land could not support more than 1,000 sheep and 100 head of cattle. They would therefore be entitled to the full and undiminished pasturage on the property. The defendant admits that from 250 to 300 loads of wood were cut in the kloofs and ridges. A large proportion of this must have consisted of the stumps of shrubs and bushes, of which very many would be required to make up one load, each of these stems must have carried a fair amount of foliage, and their destruction must have largely reduced the herbage on the land. I quite believe the witnesses who say that the shrubs in question, growing on the rugged stony hillsides take a considerable time to recover after being cut down. Some substantial damages must have been sustained by the erfholders through the consequent deterioration of the veld, and in this case also the loss must extend over several seasons. But here also no measure is afforded by which the damages can be nicely estimated, but when it is borne in mind what the defendant made in the sale of wood taken from this portion of the land, I am of opinion that £200 would be a reasonable sum to allow the plaintiffs in this part of the case. Judgment will be given for the plaintiffs for £300 damages with costs, the Commission declared necessary witnesses.

FOURIE AND OTHERS V. MOSTERT AND OTHERS.

Maasdorp, J.: It appears from the evidence adduced in this case that on the 12th day of November, 1881, Coenraad Josephus Fourie and his wife Martha Maria Fourie, who were married in community of property made a joint will, to which a codicil is annexed by which they bequeathed to their joint children already begotten, or still to be begotten of their marriage, and in case of predecease of one or more of them, then their lawful descendants, all the landed property belonging to their estate at their death. The heirs having the right to sell their shares or rights to one another, only so that these lands shall remain in the possession of the heirs or their lawful descendants only. Thereafter Martha Maria Fourie died, but Coenraad

Josephus Fourie is still living. He seems to have adiated under the will and codicil, and the inheritance and bequests became vested in the heirs and legatees in terms of the will and codicil. The children interested in the land bequeathed under the codicil are the plaintiffs, their sister Isabella Johanna Mostert, and the defendant Ockert Josephus Fourie. After the death of their mother, the children were permitted by their father to take possession of the land bequeathed to them in separate but undivided portions, on condition that each of them paid him an annuity of £15 in consideration of his having given them the immediate occupation of the land. The several heirs accordingly took possession of their separate portions, and remained in occupation thereof until the year 1904. On the 22nd of September of that year Ockert Fourie entered into an agreement with Winnie Annenberg, married in community of property to Hirsch Braur Annenberg, and Jacobus Petrus Mostert, two of the defendants, by which he sold to them the land inherited by him under the above-mentioned codicil for the sum of £7,900, in lieu of £1,500, of which the seller accepted land held by the purchaser under an option from one Johannes J. Smith; £350 was to be paid in cash, and £50 in value, represented by a boiler and other articles. Possession was to be taken on the 16th October, 1904, and transfer to be given as soon as possible. The purchasers also undertook to pay the annuity of £15 payable by Ockert to his father. When this purchase took place, the purchasers were not aware of the restrictions upon the sale of the property contained in the codicil. When they discovered that the sale could not go through without the consent of the other heirs, they set about obtaining it, with the result that upon the 24th of September, 1904, they became the holders of a document signed by all the heirs, in which the heirs gave their consent to the sale of the property mentioned to Winnie Annenberg and Jacobus Mostert, saying they had no desire to take over or buy the property in terms of the will of their parents. Upon the circumstances attending the execution of this document depend the issues raised between the parties in this case. The plaintiffs allege that their consent was obtained by false and fraudulent representations made by the defendant Mostert, acting for himself and his co-purchaser, Winnie Annenberg, and they pray that the said written consent may be declared null and void, and that the defendants may be ordered to deliver up to them the said document; and they also ask for an order restraining the said Ockert Josephus Fourie from passing and the other defendants from taking transfer of the property. The defendants (Mostert and Annenberg) deny that any false and fraudulent representations were made to induce the plaintiffs to give their consent to the sale. The alleged representations are set forth in the eighth paragraph of the declaration, and are the following: That the defendants had bought Ockert's share in the land for £3,050, and had sold to him the property of Smith for £2,700, leaving £350 to release Ockert from his financial embarrassments, and that Smith's farm consisted of 20 morgen arable land, 400 morgen grazing land, and a large vineyard and orchard, whereas the purchase price was in fact only £1,900, to be paid upon the terms already mentioned, and Smith's farm consisted only of about six morgen arable land and 70 morgen grazing land, and was worth no more than from £600 to £700. It appears that the farm of Smith was bought by the defendants on the 27th of September, 1904, for £850, £400 of which was to go in payment of a bond on the property, £250 to be paid in cash, and £200 by a four months' promissory note. The Divisional Council value of Smith's property was £480, and as it is not unfrequently the case, that the Divisional Council valuation is not much more than half the true value, it may be taken that £850 was a fair price for the land. The defendant Mostert said in evidence that at the time he bought Ockert's ground he considered it worth from £2,100 to £2,200. In that case the defendants obtained a property worth upwards of £2,000 for one valued at £850, a cash payment of £350 and £50 value in goods, making a total of £1,250. This was an excellent bargain for them, and the plaintiffs say it was even better than that, because Ockert's property, they say, is worth £3,000. The plaintiffs do not question the amount of the actual price given as standing at £1,900, and consequently the Court has not to go into the question whether persons who have a right of pre-emption can object to the value placed upon property forming part of the purchase price with respect to which they have to exercise their option. It is quite obvious that such persons may be defeated in their rights if the purchase price is in this manner fictitiously increased. As between the parties it must be taken that Smith's property represents £1,500 of the purchase price of Ockert's land, but, taking it at that, the defendant expected to make a very good thing out of the transaction, when, unfortunately for them, they discovered that unless they obtained the consent of the other heirs they would be disappointed in their expectations. On the other hand, it is perfectly clear that the plaintiffs were very averse to having strangers coming amongst them on to the land, and would have done everything in their power to prevent it. It is not pretended by the defendants that the plaintiffs gave up their right of pre-emption, because they were indifferent in the matter, on the contrary, Mostert admits that he had the greatest trouble to induce them to give their consent. The position was, therefore, this, the plaintiffs were anxious to keep the defendants out of the property, and there was no reason to believe that if they could have done so by buying the property for themselves at a reasonable price they would have been unwilling to do it. There is no doubt that the defendants upon their own admission had bought the property at a reasonable, if not low figure. In law they were obliged to allow the plaintiffs the option of taking the farm over at the same price, before they could take advantage of their bargain, and they must have been aware that if that option had been placed before the plaintiffs, they would in all probability have adopted the purchase. It was under these circumstances that Mostert went to the plaintiffs to obtain their consent, and it was under these circumstances that the plaintiffs say he made the false representations complained of. Now it is quite clear that the plaintiffs were entitled to be informed that they could, if they wished, take over the property for £1,900, the price actually agreed upon by the defendants, and yet the defendant Mostert admits that he never told them what the price was stipulated between them and Ockert. Mostert says the true price was not mentioned because the plaintiffs must have known what it was, but there is no evidence that they did, and I fully believe their uncontradicted statement that they did not. This finding has a damaging effect upon the rest of the defendant Mostert's evidence. The price for which the plaintiffs might obtain the property, in accordance with their rights under the codicil, was all important to them, and must have been a subject of inquiry by them. I believe the question was raised, and the price was mentioned, but not the true price. The issue raised was a very serious one, and counsel on both sides, seeing the importance of it, subjected the opposing witnesses to very severe cross-examination. This necessarily occupied a considerable time, but it throws much light upon the case, and as a result has greatly facilitated the finding of the Court upon the facts. The weight of evidence upon the side of the plaintiff, both direct and circumstantial, is so overwhelming, that I consider it unnecessary to go into a nice analysis of the conflicting testimony. One would imagine that when Mostert went to see the plaintiffs to obtain their consent to the written contract of sale, with the terms of which he would have to acquaint them, the most natural course was to take the contract with them; but this he neglected to do. Not having the document with him, the next best thing was to take Ockert, who was in his company on his way to the plaintiffs, with him, to support his application to them; but this, also, he neglected to do, the result being that he now stands unsupported by documentary or other evidence over against all the plaintiffs and several disinterested witnesses. One after another, these witnesses narrated what took place at the interviews between Mostert and the plaintiffs, and there is no doubt that, as compared with the evidence of Mostert, the probabilities are vastly in their favour. I can see no reason for doubting the credibility of Ellis, Claassen, and Stokes, who are wholly disinterested in the case, I cannot see what could have induced the plaintiffs to withdraw their consent in October, if they had given it in September, with full knowledge of all the circumstances. Nor do I believe that if they fabricated a false case in October, they could have induced men like Ellis, Claassen, and Stokes to support them in it. These are only a few of the many reasons that exist for coming to the conclusion that Mostert did, by these false representations set forth in the declaration, induce the plaintiffs to give their consent to the sale. The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to have it declared that the written consent obtained from them under those circumstances is null and void. Judgment will be given for the plaintiffs in terms of paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of the declaration, the plaintiffs being declared necessary witnesses.

CASES DECIDED IN THE SUPREME COURT, CAPE COLONY.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

MOTIONS.

Ex parte HEATLIE. { 1905.
Apr. 4th.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for a rule nisi restraining Elias Adamstein from collecting or receiving rents from the tenants of certain property known as York Buildings, Hanoverstreet, Cape Town, to be made absolute. Counsel said nothing had been said about the service and the rule was handed over to the Sheriff for service. There were affidavits from a clerk in the office of the Sheriff and from Mr. Harant, the attorney acting for the applicant, to the effect that although every effort had been made to effect personal service, they were unable to do so, although it was known that the respondent was in Cape Town.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Has he not a last known place of residence?]

Mr. Buchanan: No, my Lord, It is not known where he resides. He had a place at Richmond, but the order has been returned from there, the respondent having left for Cape Town. A copy of the rule had been served on William Henry Low, partner in the firm of Syfret, Godlonton and Low, who were acting for the respondent, but Mr. Low said he had no power to accept service and that he was not acquainted with the respondent's whereabouts, although the respondent had been in the office a few days previous. In the petition there was an allegation to the effect that an irrevocable power of attorney had been granted to Mr. Heatlie to collect the rents and there was a further allegation to the effect that the attorney had written to Mr. Heatlie withdrawing the power and Mr. Heatlie replied that he could not do so. The respondent, it appeared, was keeping out of the way in order that the rule could not be served on him. The respondent had collected rents from the tenants, but none of them knew his address. Under the circumstances the question was whether his lordship would order substituted service, or whether the service on Mr. Low would be considered sufficient, seeing that he was acting for the respondent in the matter.

De Villiers, C.J.: It would appear that the respondent is keeping out of the way, and the order will be made, but the right will be reserved to the respondent to apply for a discharge of the order. He is sure to become aware of this order being made, and then, if he can show good cause he can apply for the discharge of the order. For the present the Court will grant the order as prayed, with liberty to the respondent on good cause being shown, to apply for the discharge of the order.

Ex parte MUIRHEAD.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved on behalf of the petitioner, as trustee in the insolvent estate of William Whittaker, for an order requesting the Courts in Rhodesia to aid and be auxiliary to this Court for the purpose of recognising an order of this Court for the sequestration of the said insolvent estate. The petitioner, it appeared, had sold a certain farm belonging to the estate situate in the district of Gwelo, but he had now discovered that he could not give transfer thereof owing to the fact that the assets in the estate in Rhodesia had not been vested in petitioner as sole trustee.

De Villiers, C.J., asked counsel under what Act the application was brought?

Mr. Jones replied that the application was made under 46 and 47 Victoria (cap. 52). Aid such as was now sought was granted in the case of Hands v. Mackie and Co (14, C.T.R., 499).

De Villiers, C.J., observed that 118th section seemed to be wide enough to cover the application and an order would be granted as prayed.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

MOTIONS.

CORTESE AND WEBSTER V. { 1905.
BOND AND TUCKER. { Apr. 5th.

Mr. Gardiner moved as a matter of urgency for an order directing the respondents F. R. Bond and W. J. Tucker, to deliver to applicants possession of certain premises known as 24, Dorpstreet, Cape Town. The affidavit of one of the applicants (Mr. Cortese) stated that they entered into an agreement of purchase and sale with the respondents whereby the applicants disposed of certain engineering business with mechanical appliances, in Cape Town, to respondents. The agreement provided inter alia that the dominium in the property should not pass to the respondents until the latter had paid the last of the four instalments of the purchase price. The respondents had failed to meet the second instalment of £250. It now appeared that there were no assets in the estate of the respondents. Applicants wished to get back the premises, of which they were lessees, and carry on the business. There was an intention, it seemed, to surrender the estate of the respondents.

Mr. Gardiner (for the applicant): We wish to get back to these premises and carry on our business, subject to any rights of the creditors. Here the premises were sold under a suspensive condition. Such a condition is good in law—see Quirk's Trustees v. Assignees of Liddle (3 Juta 322).

[De Villiers, C.J.: In that case the word "sold" was used; your contract is simply that dominium shall not pass until the purchase price shall have been paid.]

I submit that the two cases are very similar.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Do you claim forfeiture?]

We do not at present; but we may do so when the trustee shall have been elected. We are fully prepared to undertake not to dispose of the plant. See also Harmer v. Rylands (4 Juta 225).

De Villiers, C.J.: As between the applicants and the respondents the applicants would seem to be entitled to an order such as is prayed for, but any such order should not prejudice the creditors of the respondents. The creditors are not before the Court and we do not know what they might urge against the permanent possession on the part of the applicants of the premises. The Court will, therefore, grant the order as prayed, without prejudice to the rights of the respondents' creditors, the applicants undertaking not to remove any of the machinery or mechanical appliances on the premises, pending a further order of the Court.

Costs against the respondents.

[Applicant's Attorney: G. Trollip; Respondents' Attorney: W. G. Coulton.]

MCMULLEN V. TRUTER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved upon notice calling upon the respondent, Truter, to show cause why a writ of arrest against the applicant should not be suspended upon payment of £3 per month and why respondent should not be ordered to pay the costs.

Mr. Lewis was for the respondent.

An affidavit by the applicant, D. John McMullen, stated that in January, 1904, a civil warrant of arrest had been issued against him, to be suspended on payment of £3 a month and £53 on the 1st April. He had paid the instalments of £3 a month but his financial position would not enable him to carry out his promise to pay £53 on the 1st of April. He found that, owing to the general stagnation of trade, he had great difficulty in obtaining his fees. He also had other creditors against his estate. His income from his practice showed a considerable falling off last month as compared with twelve months ago.

Applicant was called. In answer to the Court he said that from the beginning of October next he thought he would be able to pay higher instalments, he would not say whether it would be £53. He thought he would be able to promise, with confidence, to pay £13 a month from the 1st October.

Cross-examined: He was unable to make that offer date from the present month. There were three other demands against him. His practice was at the top of Hanover-street, adjoining the Walmer Estate, Woodstock. He had paid £900 out of the £1,400 that he had owed, so that he was still indebted in the sum of £500.

The decree was further suspended, pending the payment of £3 per month until the 1st October, from which date an additional sum of £10 to be paid each month, until the capital and costs, including costs of this application, shall have been paid.

REX V. JANSEN. } 1905.
Apr. 4th.

Medical and Pharmacy Acts—
Chemists' and druggists' assistant practising as chemist and druggist.

The appellant, who was not duly licensed as a chemist and druggist, prepared medicine, as it was his habit of doing, according to the prescription of a medical practitioner, during the temporary absence of his employer S., who was duly licensed and was the owner of the chemists' shop in which the appellant was employed.

Held, that the appellant was guilty of a contravention of the 35th section of Act 34 of 1891.

This was an appeal from the Court of the Resident Magistrate of Cape Town, the appellant having been convicted of a contravention of section 35 of Act 34 of 1891. The charge against the appellant was that on the 11th November, 1904, he did wrongfully and unlawfully, without the licence in that behalf and contrary to the provisions of section 35, Act 34, 1891, practise as a chemist and druggist, and did dispense, sell, and deliver to one John James Kelly, a detective in the urban police, a certain bottle of medicine which had been prescribed by a medical practitioner. Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Howell Jones) was for the Crown.

Mr. Schreiner said that the case was one of great importance to the medical profession, because it raised the question of whether an assistant of a duly licensed chemist may or may not dispense medicine, except under the actual eye of the chemist standing at his side, the assistant not being himself registered. Our law differs materially from the English law of 1868, section 15, under which a chemist's assistant must be himself registered. It is not so with us; and the question now raised is whether an unlicensed assistant may or may not dispense medicines save under the eye of a licensed principal. These proceedings are taken under Act 34 of 1891, section 35. With this Act must be read sections 3 and 8 of Act 7 of 1899. Sections 50 and 51 differ very much in their terms from those of the English Act. They allow an assistant to sell poisons, under certain restrictions. Surely, if he may sell poisons, he may likewise sell any other drugs. I quite admit that the principal is responsible, should the assistant, owing to the negligence of his employer, be guilty of any misfeasance. Had the employer to stand at the elbow of his employee during the whole time that the latter was engaged in making up a prescription; no doubt the employer would be directly liable. Should this conviction be upheld, every chemist must close his shop so often as he leaves it, if only for the space of five minutes. The English law, though more stringent than our own, does not go quite as far as this—Pharmaceutical Society v. Wielden (62 L.T., 727), in which, see judgment of Hawkins, L.J.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Does not the Act of 1891 make a distinction between selling poisons and practising as a chemist? The appellant is not charged with selling poisons, but with practising as a chemist.]

I contend that he was not practising.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is the meaning of "actual personal supervision"? What do you mean by "actual"?]

True and bona fide supervision. Section 45 places restrictions on the sale of poisons.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Many hardware merchants sell poisons.]

Only those named in the Act.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Arsenic is the very first named in section 46.]

A general merchant may not sell that without a certificate from the Resident Magistrate.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How does that affect you?]

I use that fact merely as an a fortiori argument.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I do not see how you can get over the word "actual" in the Act. If a chemist may be absent from his business for an hour, why may he not be absent for twenty years?]

The analogy of the case of articulated clerks would go to show that two such cases would differ very widely. The terms of the Poisons' Act show that an unqualified assistant may, under certain conditions, without the actual presence of the chemist or druggist, dispense poisons and a fortiori he need not be actually present when drugs of a non-noxious character are compounded. Bona fide and personal supervision does not necessarily mean actual presence.

[Maasdorp, J.: The English case you have cited shows that "personal supervision" means under the very eye of the licensed chemist.]

In that case the chemist would sell. The Cape Act does not go so far as the English Act. See also section 11 of Act 7 of 1899. A dentist's assistant is not on the same footing with a chemist's assistant.

[De Villiers, C.J.: A chemist's assistant may sell many things without practising as a chemist, e.g., he may sell milk and soda.]

A man does not practise simply because he makes up a prescription in his employer's absence.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How long may the employer be absent?]

The Court must judge each case on its own merits.

Mr. H. Jones (for the Crown) was not called upon.

Without calling upon Mr. Jones,

De Villiers, C.J.: There is much to be said against the policy of certain portions of the Medical and Pharmacy Act, but the Court has to deal with the question whether there has been a contravention of a certain section of the Act. I quite agree with Mr. Schreiner that the appellant could not be convicted of a contravention of the 35th section of Act 34 of 1891, unless he had practised as a chemist and druggist. His general practice was to dispense and prepare medicines, according to the prescriptions of medical practitioners, during the temporary absence of his principal, Mr. Strange, who was a duly licensed chemist and druggist. On the occasion in question he did the same thing, and, in my opinion, he practised as a chemist and druggist in the same way as a dentist's assistant, who drew or filled a tooth, would be practising as a dentist. The Magistrate was, therefore, bound to convict the appellant, unless such practising took place "under the actual personal supervision and control of some duly licensed chemist and druggist." Can the Court possibly hold that the appellant was under the actual personal supervision and control of his principal if the principal were eating his lunch at the time in his own house away from the shop? It may be hard upon the employer, and upon his assistants, and even upon the public, that the licensed chemist and druggist should have to personally supervise the compounding of the medicine, but the Legislature has so willed it, and, until the Act is amended, it must be carried out by all concerned. Much has been said about the 8th section of the subsequent Act, the Act of 1899, where it is said that every shop shall be conducted and under the bona fide and personal supervision of some registered chemist and druggist. But I cannot see that this section can be held to repeal the 35th section of the previous Act. Then the Court has been referred to the 50th section of the Act of 1891, which refers to the sale of poisons. I do not understand that in this particular case there was a sale of poison, and the defence has not been raised that under the 50th section the appellant was entitled to sell poisons. I do not wish it to be understood, that the Court thinks it is against public policy that this prohibition should exist, because we know that deaths, have happened through prescriptions, have happened through prescriptions being improperly made up. I am of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed.

REVIEW.

NTIKINCA V. NGCANI. { 1905.
Apr. 6th.

Review—Gross irregularity.

In an application by the plaintiff for review of a civil judgment of a Transkeian Magistrate on the ground of gross irregularity, it appeared that the record of a previous judgment between the parties had been sent to the Magistrate by the Chief Magistrate and had been admitted as evidence, and that the only other evidence given in the case fully supported the plea of the defendant.

Held, that even if there was some informality in the manner in which the record had been put in, the plaintiff, who had not cross-examined the defendant's witnesses and had produced no evidence in support of his own case, was not entitled to have the proceedings set aside.

This was an application calling upon the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Engcobo to show cause why a judgment which he had given in the case of Ntinku v. Ngani should not be set aside.

The applicant in the Court below had brought an action to recover £60, value of certain crops of mealies. The defendant pleaded res judicata, and further stated that the land on which the corn was growing had been duly and legally allotted to him, which allotment was confirmed by the Chief Magistrate; that defendant ploughed portion of the said ground and he grew crops thereon; that the plaintiff or his agents wrongfully ploughed up the said ground, and, although warned not to do so, he went on the said land and planted mealies. The case was dismissed, and defendant allowed his witnesses' expenses.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that he took the evidence of the defendant upon the special plea that the matter had already been settled, and found that the pleas were substantiated in every particular. The defendant had had the land duly allotted to him under proclamation. This really was a land claim, the settlement of which was provided for by Proclamation 125 of 1903.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the appellant; no appearance was entered for the respondent.

Mr. Jones submitted that the case should be sent back to the Magistrate to enable the plaintiff to lead his evidence, not on the special plea, but on the case generally.

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an application for a review of the proceedings of the Court below, on the grounds of gross irregularity. The alleged gross irregularity consists in the Magistrate having admitted a letter from the Chief Magistrate enclosing a record of a previous decision between the same parties. If there had not been evidence quite independently of this informality, this Court might have interfered. I do not wish to suggest in this case that the record which was put in was informal; there is no evidence upon it; we do not know the nature of that record, but, to all appearances, it was a correct copy of the decision of the Land Court. But I think we may leave that out of consideration, and consider whether there was sufficient evidence to justify the Magistrate in finding for the defendant. The defendant himself gave evidence in this case, and no questions were put to him in cross-examination. He states that the land in respect of which the plaintiff claims damages had first been ploughed by him (the defendant), and after he had sowed, the plaintiff came there and ploughed the land, and now he claims damages because the defendant reaped the crops. Surely the defendant was entitled to reap the crops. Not only has the plaintiff's agent or attorney not cross-examined the defendant, but he produced no evidence whatever to rebut the evidence of the defendant. Consequently, the evidence was all one way, and the Magistrate dismissed the summons. Apart altogether from the record which has been referred to, there was abundant evidence to justify the Magistrate in giving judgment. The application for review, must, therefore, be dismissed.

Town Council—Regulations.

The Town Council of Cape Town has no power to make regulations fixing the charges to be made by drivers of cabs outside the limits of the Municipality, or compelling the drivers to take fares outside such limits.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Cape Town, who had convicted the appellant, Sidney Bowers, a cab-driver, of contravening regulation 350 of the Corporation of the City of Cape Town, framed under the provisions of Act 26 of 1893, and had sentenced him to pay a fine of £2.

The appellant in the Court below was charged with contravening section 549 of the Cape Town municipal regulations in that he, being a registered driver of cab No. 271, plying for hire on the appointed stand in Adderley-street, Cape Town, did, on or about the 22nd December, 1904, wrongfully and unlawfully refuse to accept as a fare one F. G. Thompson, of Cape Town, aforesaid, or, otherwise, the said Sidney Powers did contravene section 350 of the aforesaid regulations in that upon the date and at the place aforesaid he, being a driver of the said registered cab, did wrongfully and unlawfully refuse or neglect to drive the said cab from Adderley-street to Irvington-road, Sea Point, such place being within the schedule of fares laid down by the Corporation of the city of Cape Town, when requested to do so by F. G. Thompson. The court below found the appellant guilty of the alternative charge and sentenced him to pay a fine of £2.

From the record it appeared that Mr. Thompson went to the respondent on one of the cab-ranks in Adderley-street and asked him to drive him to Sea Point by the hour. The defendant refused to go, and said that he could not be compelled to go outside the municipal regulations boundary.

Mr. Upington (for the appellant) said that the contention of the appellant was that the municipality had only jurisdiction within its own limits, that it had no authority to draw up a schedule of fares for places outside its own limits, and that it had no authority in issuing licences to drivers of hackney carriages to impose conditions on those licences which, if embodied in a regulation, would be ultra vires.

In this case it was clear that the cabman was acting on principle, and that there was nothing contumacious in his conduct. Mr. Upington was proceeding to address the court further, when their lordships interposed, and De Villiers, C.J.: The Town Council of Cape Town has very large powers under the Act, but certainly has not the power to regulate the fares of cabs plying outside the Municipality. It can only act within the limits of its own jurisdiction, and fix the rates within those limits, but it has no power to fix rates beyond. If it had the power, where is it to stop? The Town Council may then fix the fares to Paarl or Stellenbosch or Worcester. Is a cabman then to be compelled to take his fare those distances because the Town Council has chosen to make a regulation of this kind? It is clear to me that in this case the regulation is beyond the powers of the Council, and that the cabman was justified in refusing a fare who wished to take him beyond the limits of the Council's jurisdiction. Where he is asked to take a fare beyond those limits a special arrangement must be made with the cabman. I am of opinion, therefore, that the appeal should be allowed, and the conviction quashed.

Mr. Upington said that the notice of appeal also asked for costs against the Corporation.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is not usual to allow costs in criminal cases, but certainly in a case of this kind, where the prosecution is not at the suit of the Crown at all, but at the suit of a corporation, the Court has departed from the practice, and has allowed the costs. In the present case, the Town Council was so clearly wrong that I think the Court would be justified in ordering the costs of the appeal to be paid by the Town Council.

Slaughter house—Local authority —Ultra vires.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of the Cape, who had convicted the appellant of a contravention of section 2, Government Proclamation No. 278, of December 22, 1902. Mr. Alexander was for the appellant, a butcher in Somerset-road, Cape Town; Mr. Howel Jones was for the respondent.

The appellant had been charged in the Court below with having, on February 31, 1905, wrongfully and unlawfully killed or caused to be killed a certain animal, the flesh of which he intended to sell, upon premises which were not a place registered as a slaughter-house, and situate at Maitland. The premises, it appeared, were outside the Municipal limits, and situate in the district of the Cape Divisional Council. Appellant had held a licence for the premises, current for the early part of last year, until December 31, 1904. The defendant was found guilty of the charge, and fined 5s.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (April 7th).

De Villiers, C.J.: The appellant was charged before the Magistrate at Uitvlugt with having killed or caused to be killed certain animals, of which the flesh was intended for sale, on his premises, the same not being a place duly authorised as a slaughter-house by the local authorities. He was found guilty, and sentenced to a fine of 5s. Against that conviction he now appeals. The main ground upon which the appeal rests is that the regulations framed by the Governor, and upon which the Divisional Council rely, are ultra vires, and that the Governor had no power in regard to the area within which the appellant's slaughter-house is situated to authorise any Divisional Council or any local authority to fix the place where slaughter-houses are to be situated or to prevent them from being placed where the appellant chose to place them. The Governor has the power under the other section, "on the recommendation of the Medical Officer of Health or the representative of any urban authority directly concerned, to make regulations for the following purposes." The first is for regulating slaughter-houses. I need not read the rest, because the words "for regulating slaughter-houses" are, in my opinion, quite sufficient. In order properly to regulate slaughter-houses, it appears to me that the Governor should have also the power to issue regulations by which the local authority, whichever it may be—I shall consider directly which the local authority is—the Governor should have the power to authorise a local authority to approve of the places where these slaughter-houses are to be situated. There would be very little benefit in fixing the mode in which the slaughter-house should be carried on, because a butcher might choose to go into a densely-populated part, taking a small place situate between houses to erect a slaughter-house there, and that would certainly be most deleterious to the health of those concerned. In my opinion the second regulation was entirely within the powers of the Governor. The regulation is as follows: "No person shall kill, or cause to be killed, any cattle, sheep, goats or pigs, of which the flesh is intended for sale, in any place other than a slaughter-house duly authorised and approved for the purpose by the regulations of any local authority directly concerned, etc.; provided that no slaughter-house shall be authorised or approved by the local authority in any situation, where any drain, or filth from such slaughter-house may be liable to pollute any source of water supply." This proviso shows how important it is that the regulations should also embrace the question as to where a slaughter-house is to be situated. Well, it appears that the appellant has not received any authority from any body, either from the Maitland or the Woodstock Municipality, or from the Divisional Council, to erect a slaughter-house at the place where he has erected it. The question now arises which is the local authority which should give approval of that slaughter-house? It clearly is not the Maitland Board, because the premises are not situated within the jurisdiction. It does not appear that there is a Village Management Board, nor does it appear that the Governor has ever exercised the power given to him by the 13th section of the Act of 1897 to carve out a portion to be under the jurisdiction of the Divisional Council outside the Municipal limits, and declare it as an additional urban area. Then the only local authority that remains is the Divisional Council. Mr. Alexander has argued that by the Act of 1897 the 208th section of the Divisional Council Act of 1889 has been repealed. Under that section the Divisional Council was the local authority. But he has omitted to call the attention of the Court to the fact that 35th section of the Act 23 of 1897 gives very much larger powers to the Divisional Council than it had under any of the previous Acts, and, in my opinion, the 35th section of the Act 23 of 1897 is wide enough to embrace Divisional Councils. Reading that section with the second regulation of Proclamation No. 270, I am clearly of opinion that the local authority directly concerned, mentioned in the regulation, is the Divisional Council, and that body alone. It cannot be any other body, and therefore, in my opinion, the Divisional Council properly assumed the power to regulate the slaughter-houses within its jurisdiction, and to indicate places where these slaughter-houses should be allowed, as part of the regulating which was within its jurisdiction. I am of opinion, therefore, that the Magistrate was right in his judgment, and the appeal must be dismissed.

Liquor Licensing Acts—Selling to native—Permit.

The appellant, having been charged in a Magistrate's Court with having on divers days during the month of January, 1905, sold liquor to natives, who had no permit from their master, in contravention of a condition in his licence, it was proved that the natives shewed permits from their mistress, in whose service they were for the greater part in each week, and that some permits were given by an adult daughter of their mistress, but it was not clear that any of the permits was given on days on which the natives were not in service or that those given by the daughter were acted upon on any of the days mentioned in the summons.

Held, that a conviction of a contravention on each of the days specified in the summons could not be supported, and that as it would be difficult for the Court of Appeal, without some further evidence, to ascertain on which particular days there might have been a contravention, the conviction should be set aside.

This was an appeal from the judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Prince Albert, who had convicted the appellant, Jacobus le Grange, of a contravention of sections 1 and 2. Act 28 of 1898, and sentenced him to a fine of £1. The charge against the accused was that he had sold certain bottles of brandy on divers dates during January, 1905, to certain Hottentot women who were then not in possession of proper permits as required by the endorsement on his licence to retail wines and spirits. Dr. Greer was for the appellant and Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown.

Dr. Greer submitted that on the facts, as disclosed before the Magistrate, he had wrongfully convicted the accused. Sections 1 and 2 of the Act gave no Licensing Court the power to endorse any conditions on the licence short of total prohibition, and it was admitted that on this licence there was endorsed a condition that "no liquor be sold to natives as defined by the Act except they have a note from their master, or, in the case of unemployed natives, from the Magistrate or a J.P." No question arose as to the genuineness of the signatures on the notes handed in by the two women. The point turned upon the question whether Ganna Louw, a washerwoman employed on certain days of the week by a Mrs. Strip, was, properly speaking, in the service of the lady who had signed the notes. He submitted that there was no evidence whatever of any guilty intention on the part of the accused. The Magistrate also raised a point as to the signatures on the permits, but he (counsel) submitted that Bessie Strip signed the permits on behalf of her mother and with her full consent and approval.

Mr. Jones submitted that the strongest point against the accused was that with regard to these permits which were given by Miss Strip, the accused contravened the Act. There was no evidence whatever that Mrs. Strip had any knowledge whatever of the notes given to the two women by her daughter. The notes were simply signed "Strip." It was the accused's duty to satisfy himself as to the bona fides of the notes, and he had contravened the section by accepting notes which were not duly signed by the employer of these natives.

Dr. Greer argued that Miss Strip was the agent of her mother, and that the latter, in her evidence, had approved of what her daughter did. The conditions of the licence were not so stringent as to signature as his friend would have them believe, or he might have gone further and contended that Mrs. Strip had no authority to give permits at all, because the endorsement only mentioned "a note from their master."

De Villiers, C.J.: there was a general charge against the appellant of having during the month of January, 1905, contravened sections 1 and 2 of Act 28 of 1898, in that he did sell liquor at divers times to certain two native women in contravention of the following conditions endorsed on the licence, i.e., "that no liquor be sold to natives as defined by the Act, except they have a note from their master, or in case of unemployed natives, from the Magistrate or a J.P." It appears that the two women in question were natives and that they were employed from time to time by a Mrs. Strip. One of them was employed daily except Mondays, and another was continually employed but not quite so regularly, and from time to time permits were given by Mrs. Strip and her daughter to these women. It would appear that on the greater number of occasions on which permits were given, these women were in the service of Mrs. Strip, but it would also appear that on some occasions they were not in her service. That may be inferred from the evidence, although that point is not perfectly clear. But the Magistrate has found apparently that in every case in which there was a sale there was a contravention. Clearly, the Magistrate was wrong, because on the face of it, when these women were in the service of Mrs. Strip, the sales were perfectly legitimate. She was the mistress, and she or her daughter gave the permits. Now, the difficulty in the present case is to separate the illegal cases from the other. The Magistrate has found the accused generally guilty. Now that conviction is clearly wrong, and the point is now whether the Court, sitting on appeal, should endeavour to pick out from the evidence which of these cases should be separated and which should not. I think great care should be exercised in criminal cases to have it made perfectly clear as to what particular offence a person is found guilty of. In the present case, it seems to be clear that the accused has been found guilty of offences where there has been no offence at all. Considering that the Magistrate erred in convicting the appellant on the whole charge, and that it is by no means clear that there has been a contravention of the Act within the period specified in the summons, I consider that the safer course is to allow the appeal and set aside the conviction.

Public place — Shop — Abusive words.

The use of abusive words by a person in a shop towards another person, who at the time is also in the shop, does not constitute a contravention of the 10th section of Act 27 of 1882.

This was an appeal from a decision of the A.R.M. of Namaqualand, by which the appellant was fined in £2 or ordered to undergo fourteen days' imprisonment, for using threatening and abusive language with intention, and committing a breach of the peace, to one Henry Molyneux, a Field-cornet, at O'okiep.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the appellant, and Mr. Howel Jones appeared for the Crown.

The language complained of was used in the store of the Cape Copper Co., at O'okiep. When the complainant came into the store the appellant said to him: "Are you one of the crowd of scoundrels who went to the Cape Police on the raid last week? You ought to be ashamed of yourself. You are a d—rogue." Counsel said the point of the appeal was that the words complained of were used in the store and not in a public place as required by the 10th section of the Act 27 of 1882, which distinctly set out that the language must be used in a street, road, or public place, or licensed public house. Counsel submitted that the evidence showed that the words were used in the store, and, that not being a public place, the accused was entitled to an acquittal. Counsel cited Review cases, where it was held that if the language were used in a shop no conviction could be sustained.

The Chief Justice: What evidence is there that the parties were outside the store?

Mr. H. Jones: There is no evidence except the evidence that the appellant was standing for a time on the threshold of the door. Counsel then read the Magistrate's reasons, which set out that the store was open to the public daily, and he did not regard it as a private house.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is clear from the reasons read by Mr. Jones that the Magistrate regarded a shop as a public place. In one sense it is public because, presumably, the shop-keeper invites the public to enter for the purpose of buying his wares, but he is at perfect liberty at any time to close the place and turn out his customers. The 10th section of the Act makes it an offence to use any threatening, abusive, or insulting words, or behaviour, with intention to provoke a breach of the peace in any street, road, public place, or licensed public house. A licensed public house is specially mentioned. If the contention is correct that a shop is a public place, it is clear that it was not necessary to mention a licensed public house at all. In my opinion a shop does not fall within the designation, and the only other question is whether the words were used in such a way as to be addressed to or by a person in a public place. In the case of Brown, the person to whom the abusive words were addressed was in the street, and it was properly held that the words were used in a public place, because it was intended to reach the person outside. In the present case both parties were inside the shop, and, therefore, the words were not used in a street, road or public place. I think that the Court is bound to hold that the Magistrate erred, and the appeal must be allowed and the conviction quashed.

Theft—Forgery.

The appellant, being an agent employed by R. to collect a debt for him, received payment of the debt by means of a crossed cheque made in favour of R. The appellant being about to be arrested on a decree of civil imprisonment, wrote the name of R. on the back of the cheque and gave it to K., who received payment of the amount. K. devoted a few shillings towards payment of food for the appellant and kept the balance for him.

Held, that the appellant had been properly convicted of theft of the cheque and forgery of R.'s name.

This was an appeal from a conviction by the A.R.M. of Cape Town, in a case in which the accused was charged with theft, forgery and uttering a forged instrument. Mr. Burton was for the appellant, and Mr. Howel Jones appeared for the Crown.

Mr. Burton said the alleged theft was in respect of a cheque which was made payable to Radus, and it was alleged that the appellant, to whom it was sent, appropriated it, forged the name of Radus on the back and caused it to medium of one Kinsley. Counsel having read the record in the Court below, said that whatever was done by the appellant was done in a state of great excitement. He had just been arrested, and among the letters handed to him was one containing the cheque. He was entitled to receive a letter on behalf of Radus, and although Radus said he revoked that authority by a verbal communication, there was no written communication sent to the appellant's office. Assuming for the moment that he did endorse the cheque, the appellant was in any case entitled to receive it. Perhaps, in a foolish moment, when he was in a hole, he did so with the intention of merely taking his just charges out of it. There was not the slightest evidence that he intended to retain the bulk of the money. If he wrote the name it was with the intention of getting a few shillings to buy food. The Magistrate might have considered the circumstances of the case, and found that the man was merely endeavouring to get temporary assistance.

De Villiers, C.J.: The cheque was sent by Cillie in a letter addressed to the appellant, but the cheque was made out in favour of Radus or order. The applicant, on the receipt of that cheque, seems to have been in great trouble. There was a writ of civil imprisonment against him. He was about to be arrested, and in his excitement he apparently endorsed this cheque, not in his own name, but in the name of Radus. He put it into a letter addressed to Ditcher, and gave the letter to Kinsley. Kinsley went to Ditcher with this cheque and got the money from him, and he utilised portion of that money for the purpose of supplying the appellant with food while he was in gaol. It is clear from this statement of facts that the appellant had no right to the cheque, although the cheque was in a letter addressed to him. The cheque was in favour of Radus, and to the order of Radus, and the only person entitled to the cheque was Radus. The applicant in appropriating that cheque to his own use was guilty of theft, and in endorsing the name of Radus, without any authority from him, he was clearly guilty of forgery, and the forgery was committed for the purpose of enabling him to get a very small proportion of this money to get food for himself in gaol. Still the forgery was committed. It is not suggested by the appellant's counsel that he had any authority from Radus to endorse the cheque for him. On the contrary the defence is that he never endorsed it at all. There is no evidence to show that Kinsley is the man who forged the cheque. He would derive no benefit from it. The only person to derive any benefit from the cashing of the cheque was the appellant, and there seems to be no motive which would induce Kinsley to forge a cheque. The only person who could have committed this forgery is the appellant. As to the sentence, I must say I consider, under all the circumstances of the case, that the sentence was somewhat severe. The man was undoubtedly in an excited state. He was to derive little benefit from the cheque. The only benefit would be a few shillings to buy food. There are circumstances in this case which would justify the Government in considerably mitigating the sentence. That, however, is a question which the Court has not to deal with. The only question is whether the conviction is right, and in my opinion the conviction was right.

Lashes — Previous conviction —
Act 43 of 1885.

Maasdorp, J., said that, as Judge of the week, the case of Rex v. McLaughlin, which had been heard by the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Cape Town, had come before him, the accused having been charged with storebreaking with intent to steal, and with theft. Accused pleaded not guilty, but was found guilty, and sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment, with hard labour, and to receive twelve cuts of the cane. By the Act 43 of 1885, under which this case was remitted by the Attorney-General lashes or cuts could only be inflicted in case of previous convictions being proved to have taken place within three years. The only previous conviction proved in this case took place in 1889, and consequently did not come within the terms of the section. The sentence must therefore be amended by expunging the words "and to receive twelve cuts from the cane."

Provisional sentence—Lease.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence upon a lease for £396, rent due, less £15 paid on account. There was, however, still a certain sum due, and in the affidavits the defendants also set up a verbal agreement.

Mr. Searle (for the defendant): I admit that the lease on which we are sued is not the original lease.

Mr. Jones: The two leases should be read together.

[Maasdorp, J.: You sue on a liquid document, is anything required for your case beyond that?]

We wish to put in certain affidavits.

Mr. Searle: The document on which the plaintiff sues is not in Court; and, therefore, provisional sentence cannot be granted on it. Possibly there may be certain liabilities, but certainly there are none on the summons based on the document now put in.

[Maasdorp, J.: You must prove your case, Mr. Jones.]

The defendant admits his liability for a certain amount. The first lease was only held in suspension by the second lease. The first lease was to come into full force unless the terms of the second lease were complied with, and they never were complied with. I submit that judgment should be given for such amount as may be found due to us.

Provisional sentence refused, with costs.

NIGRINI V. VAN ROOYEN AND WIFE.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £491 9s. 10d., less £140 paid on account, with interest and costs.

Defendant asked for stay of execution for two months, stating that he was prepared to consent to judgment. There was sufficient property to satisfy the claim.

Order granted as prayed.

ROODT V. BOTHA.

In this matter judgment had been obtained against the first two defendants in the original motion in March last, and the action against the third defendant stood over (15, C.T.R. 235). The claim was for £254 10s., and the judgment was now sought against the third defendant, who acted as surety to the promissory note.

The affidavit of the defendant set out that he agreed to act as surety on condition that he received 270 sheep. Counsel said he was not relying now on the question of the sheep, but on the delay in excussing the principal debtors, and he contended that the suretyship had lapsed.

An answering affidavit was put in.

Mr. Alexander was for the plaintiff and Mr. Gardiner was for the defendant.

[Maasdorp, J.: You cannot press for provisional sentence.]

Mr. Alexander: Oh yes. The defendant was a surety and provisional sentence has been given against a surety. We gave him due notice. Had we gone to him before December 16th he might have objected that we had not excused the principal. He had not renounced the beneficium excussionis, and if he was not liable after December 16th he was not liable at all.

[Maasdorp, J.: If you have put a meaningless clause into your contract that is your misfortune.]

Should your lordship be against me on this point, I should like to be heard on the question of costs, as to which I refer to Vorster v. Van Wyk and Another (11 C.T.R. 386).

[Maasdorp, J.: Mr. Gardiner, have you any authority to show that a surety cannot be sued unless the principal has been excused?]

Mr. Gardiner: I have only Herding v. Le Roy (12 Juta).

Mr. Alexander (in reply): The point as to excussion of the principal has been raised only incidentally in one affidavit. It should have been pleaded specifically.

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the defendant is sued upon a promissory note made by Botha and Schoemann in favour of Mrs. Roodt, and his liability is alleged to rest upon the endorsement made by him to this note. The endorsement is to the following effect: "As surety until 16th December," signed, J. A. Botha. Now several legal points have been raised in this case as to the position of a surety where provisional sentence is claimed, but it is unnecessary to go into any of these matters, except the effect—the legal effect of the endorsement itself upon this note. The defendant consented to become surety and be liable as surety until 16th December, 1904. After that date his liability lapsed, and he is no longer liable for anything that took place between parties, which constitutes some agreement by which his liability is extended. Such matters ought to be brought before the Court in another form. The Court can only deal with the written document, and upon that document there is no liability on the part of J. A. Botha as surety or otherwise. The provisional sentence will be refused with costs.

CILLIERS V. SACON.

Mr. P. Jones was for the plaintiff and Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for the defendant. The application was for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £300. Sir H. Juta read the affidavit of the defendant, which set out that the plaintiff had purchased a piece of ground from him for £2,889, and when the plans were ready the £300 could be deducted from the purchase price.

Mr. P. Jones read a replying affidavit of the plaintiff to the effect that the defendant did not keep to the terms of the purchase made in December, 1902, and he had subsequently cancelled the sale. Possession was not given in May, 1903, as promised. The purchase had been cancelled by reason of the delay in surveying the ground.

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff sues the defendant upon a promissory note, in which the defendant promises to pay the plaintiff £300, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, on the 3rd August, 1903. The defendant sets up a defence which is contained in one paragraph of his affidavit, to the following effect: "The said Cilliers has purchased a piece of ground from me, for which he owes me the sum of £2,889." Now, if there was a debt actually due by the plaintiff to the defendant, it is in ordinary operation, and, as a set off, the defendant could bring that up as a defence against any claim by the plaintiff. But it is clear from the documents put in that the sale has taken place, and a date has not yet arrived upon which the purchase price can be claimed by the defendant. Even if this contract does go through, notwithstanding the dispute now set up by the plaintiff, the actual due date has not arrived, and consequently there is no sum of money which the defendant can set up against the legal claim of the plaintiff, and provisional sentence must be given, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.) and the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

APPEALS.

REX V. ROSSOUW.

1905.
Apr. 17th.

Trespass—Assault.

This was an appeal from the judgment of the R.M. of Springfontein, in convicting the appellant, Hermias Albertus Rossouw, of an assault upon a farmer named Andries Francois Engelbrecht, and sentencing him to a fine of £3, or one month's imprisonment with hard labour.

The appellant had been charged, along with his brother, Gideon Josias Rossouw, with assaulting the complainant by catching hold of him and throwing him to the ground. Both the accused pleaded not guilty, and the charge against Gideon was dismissed, while the appellant was found guilty.

From the record it appeared that there had been a dispute between the complainant and the accused in regard to the boundary line of a farm on which all the parties lived. Certain cattle of the accused were on the land which complainant said was his, and he went there for the purpose of impounding them, whereupon the alleged assault took place. The complainant said that he had had to pay £26 by way of medical expenses. The land on which the cattle were found was claimed by the accused under a recent survey, but the complainant said that he had not agreed to the survey, and that the land formed part of his farm. One of the witnesses, called by the complainant, said she put mustard plasters on him, and filed him with medicine, a piece of information which, Mr. Burton incidentally observed might account for the complainant's condition. The defendant's version was that the complainant was aggressor, and that no more violence was used than was necessary to prevent the complainant from impounding the horses and mules, which had been driven on the land to graze.

Mr. Burton was for the appellant, and Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown.

Mr. Burton said the affair seemed to have been a storm in a tea-cup, and the matter did not seem to be one of great importance. The appeal was raised on two grounds: (1) That the verdict is against the weight of evidence, and (2) that if appellant used any force against the complainant he did so in defending the rights of property which he claimed. Apparently both the parties claimed a piece of ground which, upon a survey, had been awarded to the appellant, and apparently, instead of going to law about the matter, they came to this stupid struggle on the day in question.

De Villiers, C.J., said it appeared that the accused commenced the trouble, because he drove horses and mules on land which had been cultivated by the complainant.

Mr. Burton said that the complainant originated the trouble, because he went on to the land which had been awarded by the surveyor to the appellant to impound his cattle on land that he had no right to.

Without calling upon Mr. Jones,

De Villiers, C.J.: The Magistrate in this case seems to have given the benefit of every doubt that could possibly arise to the accused. He seems to have allowed for a certain degree of exaggeration in the evidence given by the complainant, and accordingly he acquitted Gideon, as he was not quite satisfied that Gideon had taken part in the assault. Then as to the chief offender, Mias, the Magistrate seems not to have believed that the assault was quite so serious as the complainant had made it out to be, but after making every allowance, the Magistrate came to the conclusion that upon the evidence an assault had been committed, and I confess I do not see what other conclusion he could possibly have arrived at. Upon the evidence of the accused himself, he had no right to seize hold of the plaintiff in the way he did. I am of opinion that there is no ground for this appeal, and the appeal must be dismissed and the conviction confirmed.

PRINCE V. WEBSTER. { 1905.
Apr. 17th.

Purchase and sale—Agent—Ratification—Estoppel.

The defendant's daughter, being about to be married, ordered a wedding cake from the plaintiff and directed it to be sent to the house of the defendant. The wedding did not take place, owing to the disappearance of the bridegroom, but the cake was not returned by the defendant, and an account was sent to him by the plaintiff for the price of the cake. The defendant did not repudiate his liability, but went in search of the bridegroom. A second and third account were sent to the defendant, and it was only after receiving the third account that the defendant denied having ordered the cake. In the meantime the cake had deteriorated in quality.

Held, that although the defendant had not authorized his daughter to pledge his credit, he should, under all the circumstances, be held to have ratified her act, and therefore to be liable for the price.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of East London in an action brought by the present respondent against the appellant to recover £3 10s. for goods sold and delivered to the defendant, at his special instance and request, on or about the 9th July, 1904, viz., one wedding cake, £2 10s., and assorted cakes, £1. The Court below gave judgment for the plaintiff for the amount claimed with costs.

From the record it appeared that the goods had been delivered at the defendant's house in readiness for his daughter's marriage with one Donovan. The marriage, however, did not take place, for on the eve of the ceremony Donovan disappeared and was believed to have gone to Cape Town. Defendant, when applied to for payment of the account, said that he was hunting for the bridegroom. Plaintiff said that it was customary for the prospective father-in-law to pay for the cake, while the defendant held that Donovan should pay for it.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that the defendant should have returned the articles, instead of which he kept them until a portion went bad. The action of the defendant in keeping the cake months after Donovan had disappeared deprived the plaintiff of an opportunity of realising the value by other means.

Mr. Gardiner was for the appellant; Mr. Alexander was for the respondent.

Mr. Gardiner submitted that the allegations in the summons had been borne out. The Magistrate had not found that the defendant had bought, but that Donovan had bought. Neither did the defendant buy, nor did he authorise his daughter to pledge his credit. The Magistrate seemed to think that defendant should have returned the cake, but, in strict law, defendant could not have returned the goods, the property in the goods having passed to Donovan. The plaintiff should have sued Donovan for these goods.

Mr. Alexander submitted that the defendant was, by reason of his subsequent conduct, estopped from setting up the defence that the goods were sent to Donovan's order. It was an important circumstance in this case that the daughter did not live with her father, and that the cakes were to be delivered at her father's house. The accounts were sent at the end of each month to Prince, and not to Donovan. It would have been simple for the defendant to have explained that Donovan had gone, and offered to return the cake to Webster. It was only when the matter was brought into court that Prince set up the defence that Donovan was liable for the cakes. The defendant did not seem to have been anxious that the wedding should take place, and, in fact, objected to it, so that he would not be likely to assist in catching Donovan.

Buchanan, J.: If the bride could not catch Donovan, I doubt whether the confectioner could have done so.

Mr. Gardiner said that the wedding cake should not have gone bad in three months, because he believed it was usual to keep a portion for the first christening. Replying on the argument, Mr. Gardiner said it was true that the accounts were sent to the appellant, but they were afterwards sent on to Donovan. The plaintiff seemed to have gone on a custom that it was usual for the bride's father to pay for the cake, but that custom had not been proved. He failed to see how the law of estoppel applied in this case.

De Villiers, C.J.: The defendant's daughter was about to be married to one Donovan, and she and Donovan together went to the plaintiff's confectioner's shop and there ordered a wedding cake to be sent to the house of the defendant. The day after, the defendant's daughter thought it would be better that there should be a smaller wedding cake, and other small cakes and sweets, and asked the plaintiff to substitute these for the original wedding cake. That was agreed to, the price (£3 10s.) being the same in each case. The articles were sent to the defendant, but, unfortunately, the wedding did not come off; the bridegroom disappeared, and, after the day on which the wedding was to have taken place, the plaintiff sent an account for the cakes to the defendant. I take it from the evidence that the account must have been made out in the name of the defendant. That seems to me the fair purport of the evidence. The defendant did not at once repudiate the liability, but he endeavoured to find out the bridegroom, apparently with a view of getting him to pay the money, but by not answering the plaintiff it would appear to me that he recognised his liability. Now, this was a case of a wedding to be celebrated in the house of the defendant. His daughter was to get married. The ordinary course is for the bride's parents to be at the expense of providing the entertainment, and, in my opinion, it would require very little evidence of ratification on the part of the father under circumstances like the present to induce the Court to hold that he should be regarded as the purchaser of the cake. After the end of the next month, another account was sent to the defendant. He did not then repudiate the account, but still sought to find Donovan, and it was only after the third account had been sent that the defendant repudiated his liability. But, in the meantime, some of the cakes went bad. According to the plaintiff the defendant told him (plaintiff) that he had eaten the cakes. The daughter, however, does not agree with this; she says no cakes went bad. But, whichever statement we take, the plaintiff might have got back his cakes if he had known the defendant repudiated liability; so, at all events, some of the articles which had been delivered went bad, and the plaintiff was debarred from getting them back, because he was left under the impression at the time that the articles had been ordered by the defendant, and not by Donovan. Now, I take it there is sufficient proof of a ratification by the father of the acts of his daughter in ordering the cake to be sent to his house to justify the Court in holding that there was a contract, rendering the defendant liable to pay for the wedding cake. I am of opinion, therefore, that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

NOONAN V. MEYER. { 1905.

Purchase and sale—Stolen property—Refund of price—Eviction.

Certain cattle which the plaintiff had purchased from the defendant were claimed by one M., from whom they had been stolen, whereupon the plaintiff handed them over to M., and informed the defendant of what he had done.

Held that, upon proof by the plaintiff in an action against the defendant for a refund of the price, that as the cattle had been stolen and that the defendant would have had no valid defence to a suit at the instance of M., the plaintiff was entitled to succeed, although there had been no judicial eviction.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Kokstad in an action brought by the present respondent for the return of £25 10s. purchase price of certain cattle bought from the appellant. The Magistrate gave judgment for the plaintiff for the amount claimed with costs.

From the record in the Court below it appeared that the cattle had been sold to the respondent, Meyer, by the appellant for £25 15s. and that subsequently a question arose as to the real ownership of the animals. It was said that the animals had been stolen from the estate of one John Macdonald before they came into the possession of Noonan, who had bought them from a native. The respondent delivered up the cattle to the representatives of the estate of Macdonald upon application being made to him. Appellant said that he should not have done so especially as he (Noonan) had offered to refund to him the sum of £25 15s. if the cattle were handed back to him. The ground of the appeal was that the plaintiff should not have parted with the cattle until he had been evicted from possession.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the appellant; Mr. Gardiner was for the respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

(ur. Adu. Vult.

Postea (April 26th).

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an appeal against a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Kokstad in an action whereby the plaintiff claimed from the defendant the refund of the price of certain three head of cattle, which the plaintiff had bought from the defendant, but had subsequently returned to McDonald on discovering that they had been stolen from McDonald.

It was proved to the satisfaction of the Magistrate and of this Court that the cattle sold to the plaintiff were stolen cattle, but it is not suggested that the defendant stole them or even knew that they have been stolen. He had himself bought them from one Tsean, and it had not even been proved that Tsean was himself the thief. On behalf of the estate of McDonald, the cattle, when discovered in the plaintiff's possession, were claimed from him. If, upon this claim being made, the plaintiff had forthwith informed the defendant of the claim, and called upon him to defend any suit that might be brought by McDonald's estate for the restoration of the cattle, the burden of defending such suit would have been thrown on the defendant, and if such a suit proved successful, the plaintiff would have had a clear right to recover the purchase price, the consideration for the payment of it having wholly failed. Under the Roman law, the vendor warranted undisturbed possession, and the purchaser could not bring an action on the warranty until he had been judicially deprived of such possession. (See Code 8, 45, 3.) The plaintiff, instead of waiting until it had been decided by a Court of law that the cattle belonged to someone else than the vendor, handed them over to the true owner upon being perfectly satisfied that they had been stolen from him, and the question for decision is whether the Court below was right in holding that, by our law, a purchaser is entitled to a refund of the price if he clearly proves in the action for such refund that a suit by the owner would have established his ownership, and deprived the purchaser as well as the seller of the right to the possession of the thing sold. Groenewegen (De Leg. Abr.), in his commentary on the passage of the Code just cited, seems to regard the rule there laid down as applying only to cases in which the purchaser sought to enforce the stipulation, express or implied, for a penalty, which, under the Roman law, attached in case of eviction. He adds that as the stipulation had in his time fallen into disuse, the learned discussions of the commentators had also become useless and superfluous. Voet, on the other hand, in the Title of Evictions 21, 2, 30, and 34), treats the subtleties of the Roman Law as still in force in his time, but he admits (21, 2, 22) that if one who has suffered eviction without having given notice to his vendor can, taking up the character of the evicting party himself, assert that the latter's right was certain, and can show a manifest want of right on the part of his vendor, he is considered entitled to the same recourse against the vendor as if he had given timely notice of the suit. Among the authorities cited by Voet is Grotius (Intr. 3, 15, 4), who says that when a purchaser's title to the property is judicially interfered with, either wholly or in part, he is bound to give timely notice to the seller, who will be bound to take up the case for him; otherwise the purchaser will lose his recourse against the seller, "unless the property beyond all doubt belonged to another." Another writer cited by Voet is Van Leeuwen, who, in his Censura Forensis (1, 4, 19, 14), after saying that on failure of notice the purchaser has no recourse against his vendor, makes an exception in cases where the right of the evicting party is obvious, and it is clear that the seller had no right, or the purchaser undertakes to prove this. The difficulty of the present case arises from the fact that the plaintiff's right to the cattle has never been judicially interfered with, and that, instead of waiting for an eviction, he handed over the cattle to the true owner without the consent of his vendor. It appears to me, however, that on principle the plaintiff should not be deprived of his recourse against the defendant, provided that he could clearly establish the right of McDonald to recover the cattle. The plaintiff took a very serious risk upon himself when he delivered the cattle to the person whom he believed to be entitled to vindicate them. The safer course would have been to retain them, after giving notice to the defendant of the owner's claim, and thus to throw upon the defendant the onus of defending his right as against such owner. By himself delivering up the cattle to the owner, the plaintiff took upon himself the whole burden of proving, not only that the cattle had been stolen, but that the defendant would have had no valid defence against any suit at the instance of McDonald. But, if once the plaintiff succeeds, as he did in the Court below, in establishing such proof, it would, to my mind, be a needless formality to insist upon two actions being brought for the purpose of asserting the plaintiff's right to a refund of the purchase price. An opportunity was afforded to the defendant in the Court below of raising every defence which he would have had to any suit by McDonald for the recovery of the cattle. He has wholly failed in establishing such a defence, and there can be no valid reason why the plaintiff, after proving that a suit at the instance of McDonald must have resulted in an eviction, should not be in the same position as if an eviction had actually taken place. I am of opinion, therefore, that the Magistrate was right in giving judgment for the plaintiff, and that the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

His Lordship added that his learned brother Buchanan, who sat with him in the case, agreed in the judgment.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

DU PLESSIS V. HAUPT- { 1905.
FLBISCH. { Apr. 17th.

Promissory note — Accommodation—Consideration.

Mr. Lewis moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £1,684 9s. 4d. for value received, with interest and costs.

Mr. Searle, K.C., appeared for the defendants, and put in affidavits, which set out that when the first defendant's wife, to whom he was married in community of property, died, he and his brother, the second defendant, were appointed as co-executors testamentary in the joint estate. The plaintiff got notice that the estate was in liquidation, and that a sale would be held in April, but, owing to the continuance of a severe drought, the sale had to be deferred. The first defendant believed if he were given time all his creditors would be settled with in full. The whole of the plaintiff's claim was due by the joint estate of his wife and himself, and not by himself and the second defendant. The second defendant signed the note as an accommodation note.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff in this case sues the defendants upon a promissory note dated 29th August, by which the makers promise to pay to the plaintiff the sum of £1,684 9s. 4d. The defendants appear, and they put in affidavits, in which one of the defendants sets up the defence that the debt, for which he made the promissory note, is really a debt due upon the joint estate of himself and his wife. Even if that were so, if he takes the debt upon himself, he becomes liable upon that note whatever other parties are liable in other respects. I am not quite satisfied it is a joint debt—that it is a debt of the joint estate. There are no details set forth to prove in what respect that debt in the joint estate arose, and there seems to be some evidence that the note was made in respect of the indebtedness on account of certain moneys, which the first defendant held in trust for the plaintiff. But, however that may be, upon the face of the promissory note as it now stands, the first defendant is clearly liable, notwithstanding the allegations contained in his affidavit, which contend on behalf of the second defendant that he was only an accommodation maker of this note for the accommodation of the first defendant, and with the knowledge of the plaintiff, and that therefore he is not liable. But such a defence cannot hold in law. He accommodates the other maker, so as to further secure the plaintiff's consideration to the other party. That is sufficient, and plaintiff is entitled to recover the money from him, notwithstanding the fact that he became an accommodation party for the purpose of accommodating one of the other parties. The provisional sentence will be given with costs.

NANNUCI, LTD. V. KEATING.

Mr. Close was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Struben was for the defendant. Mr. Close moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £213 8s. 2d.

Mr. Struben put in certain affidavits, in which the defendant disputed certain accounts, and counsel submitted that the dispute could not be settled now. The defendant had interdicted the plaintiffs from receiving certain moneys from the Sisters of Nazareth in respect of a certain contract, and then the committee said that the dispute could not be settled between the parties on a motion. It was only fair to the defendant, on the allegations made, that judgment should be refused, and that the plaintiff should be ordered to go into the principal case.

Mr. Close said the note was given for specific goods, and it was on an entirely separate transaction. The interdict was granted, he understood, pending an action to be brought by another party, and the onus lay as much on his learned friend's client to bring the action as it did with his. Counsel submitted that the defendant would not be prejudiced now by the granting of provisional sentence.

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff sued the defendant on a promissory note for £213, and the defendant appears to oppose the granting of the provisional sentence on the ground that the position of the parties is now such that a promissory note upon which he is sued becomes merely an item in a general account, and consequently a separate action should not be allowed on the note. He contends that the plaintiff should be compelled to go into the whole of his account. It appears to me from the allegations contained in the affidavit of the defendant himself that this promissory note was intended to be devoted to the payment of his account for cement and tiles purchased from Frank Clarke and Co. Well, if there was such a distinct transaction, the plaintiff is entitled upon this promissory note to sue for the promissory note as being in respect of such transaction. It is contended on behalf of the defendant that there is an indebtedness to Clarke, and that the moneys that were received in discounting the note ought to have been paid for this indebtedness to Clarke, and I think he himself misconceives his position. Clarke simply acted as agent, and there is no indebtedness to Clarke. The matter now has been taken out of the hands of Clarke, and the plaintiff demanded payment of the money direct. I think this ought to be treated as a separate transaction, without producing any complication in any further case, and provisional sentence will be given for the plaintiff, with costs.

Mr. Long, for the plaintiff, moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £425, with interest and costs, and to have the property specially hypothecated declared executable.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

VAN NIEKERK V. WILL AND OTHERS. { 1905.
Apr. 17th.

Mr. Close appeared for the plaintiff, Mr. Gardiner for Will, and Mr. P. Jones for the second defendant.

Mr. Gardiner applied for a postponement of the trial sine die, on the ground that the defendant Will, who was making every effort to locate important witnesses, would be prejudiced if forced to go to trial on the date for which it was fixed.

Mr. Close pointed out that certain of his witnesses had already travelled considerably over 200 miles by postcart, and that plaintiff would be put to great expense.

The hearing was set down for Monday, 8th May, with leave reserved to the defendants to apply for a postponement, and either party to call further witnesses, costs to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte GREENING.

Mr. Alexander moved, as a matter of urgency, on behalf of the Incorporated Law Society, to have the petitioner's application, which was set down for Thursday next, postponed until June 1. Counsel said the application was on behalf of Robert Greening to be reinstated as an attorney, and the Law Society were opposing the application.

The respondent appeared in person, and said that on the 20th March he applied for re-admission as an attorney. He had been suspended in the Cape Colony and Natal for twelve months, at the instigation of the Law Society. The Law Society applied to the Right Hon. the Chief Justice for a postponement on the ground that they did not know that he had been suspended in Natal, which, as a matter of course, followed the suspension in the Cape Colony. If he did not apply in June for re-admission in Natal he would be struck off the rolls there. He was only suspended there because he was suspended here, and the Law Society had only just discovered this. The Chief Justice then told the learned counsel that he thought it would be sufficient if he gave him a postponement until the 11th April.

[Maasdorp, J.: The only question is whether you will be prejudiced.]

Respondent: I shall be finished in Natal, my lord. At present I have no means of earning a living.

Mr. Alexander pointed out that the respondent was suspended with leave to apply again. Counsel said he had an affidavit which referred to malpractices in Natal.

Respondent: I do object to the postponement, because this is an attempt to extend my punishment.

Mr. Alexander read an affidavit by the secretary of the Law Society, which set out that there was reason to believe that certain fees were still due to members of the bar here by the respondent—something between £300 and £400—and there was considerable probability that Mr. Greening had appropriated some of the money to his own use. A letter had been sent to the Attorney-General, and from his reply it appeared that any fees owing were long overdue before the respondent's insolvency, and no claims against the estate were made by members of the bar. The members of the bar felt that before they should give any information there should be an expression of opinion from the Court. A further affidavit was put in from one Nicholls, of Durban, which set out that the respondent had been struck off the roll of notaries in consequence of the disgraceful state in which he kept his protocol.

The respondent said he had no objection to members of the bar giving the names of clients and all information that lay in their power. When the Law Society obtained the previous order against him they were well primed with all the facts they had now. There was no one that could find half as bad about him as he could himself. They came up with the story about counsel's fees, but many a time he had paid them without getting anything from the clients. The secretary of the Law Society's affidavits were vague, incoherent, inconsistent, egotistical, and absurd.

Maasdorp, J.: It seems the matter must stand upon the roll where it has been placed. There is no urgency about this application. If the bar is in a position to give information which would satisfy the Court that the applicant is unfit to be reinstated, then such information would, of course, be of the utmost importance to the Court.

The Respondent: I should like a full inquiry, your lordship.

TRIAL CAUSES.

PALMER V. CAPE COLD (1905.
STORAGE AND SUPPLY CO. (Apr. 18th.
Sale and purchase—Suspensory condition.

This was an action brought by Charles Thos. Palmer, of Observatory-road, against the Cape Cold Storage and Supply Co., for the return of a horse or its value (£40), and for damages for detention in the sum of £10.

From the pleadings, it appeared that the plaintiff sold to one Robert Jenkins a certain horse, the terms being that the buyer was to pay £5 down and £1 10s. per week until the debt was discharged. It was a condition of the agreement that the sale was not to take effect, and property in the said animal was not to pass, until the last instalment had been paid. The said Jenkins paid down the sum of £5, and also paid certain instalments, but he afterwards failed to keep to the terms of the agreement between them, and in the end the plaintiff found that the animal had been sold to the defendants for the sum of £23. He demanded its return, but they refused to deliver up the animal until after pleadings had been filed, when the animal was given up. The defendants put the plaintiff to proof of damages, and prayed that the claim should be dismissed, with costs.

Dr. Rainsford was for the plaintiff; the defendants in default.

Charles Thos. Palmer (the plaintiff) said that he first saw the mare in a cart belonging to the defendant company, and ascertained that the company had bought the mare for £23. Witness at once pointed out that the animal was his property, under a hire and purchase agreement. Witness produced the agreement for the inspection of the company's manager, Mr. Elliot, and also the traveller. The former said that the agreement was not worth the paper it was written on. Witness had not at that time commenced proceedings. The horse was returned to him a month afterwards. Witness was a cartage contractor, and owing to the horse being detained, he had had to obtain another horse for his business. The animal would have been worth from 10s. to £1 a day to him.

Edward Isaac Sidney, the plaintiff's attorney, said that he offered to one of the representatives of the defendants' attorneys an inspection of the hire and purchase agreement between Jenkins and the plaintiff.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I am bound to say that these agreements are not really agreements to be encouraged, because they open the way to fraud. A man is left in possession of a horse, he enters into negotiations for a sale, and then it turns out that there is a private agreement between the parties that the ownership in the horse has not to pass. Have there been any decisions that such an agreement can be maintained?]

Dr. Rainsford said that there were several cases reported which upheld the suspensory condition. There was the case of Albertyn v. Basson (15 C.T.R. 118), decided before Mr. Justice Hopley on February 18th last. The same principle had been recognised in previous cases, including that of Wolfe v. Ritter (3 High Court, 102).

De Villiers, C.J.: In this case it is unnecessary to discuss the question of law, which might have been an interesting one if the defendants had defended the case. The defendants have admitted their liability to return the horse by actually returning it after the costs had been incurred, and I think, therefore, that they should pay the costs of the action, which is, to my mind, the only question really in dispute. There is a further claim for damages, and, in my opinion, that should not be allowed. The form of contract is one which I think should not be encouraged. It certainly opens the way to fraud. A man is left in possession of an animal as if it were his own property; there is nothing to give notice to the person with whom he deals that the animal does not belong to him. After he has sold to a bona fide purchaser, the owner comes forward and says to the purchaser, "It is my horse," and he practically claims the benefits of a pledgee without having the article pledged in his possession. Then, again, in this case it is not perfectly clear to me that any damages have been sustained. In any case, it would appear to me that a person who does buy an animal under circumstances like the present is entitled to require the clearest proof that the animal is not that of the ostensible owner before delivering it back. That was the position the defendants took, and in the present case, on the whole, I think that the plaintiff should not have, in addition to the value of the animal, and in addition to the costs of this action, any damages for detention of this horse. There will, therefore, be judgment for the plaintiff for costs of this action.

CHORITZ V. SHOOLMAN.

This was an action to recover the sum of £300 upon a certain acknowledgment of debt, with interest a tempore moræ and costs. Mr. Alexander was for the plaintiff; the defendant, Max Shoolman, did not appear.

Mr. Alexander stated that the defendant had been prosecuted for forgery of an alleged previous agreement under which it was said that plaintiff agreed to accept £50 a year. The defendant was admitted to bail, but on the day of the trial he did not appear, and the bail had been estreated. A warrant had been issued for his arrest, but Shoolman had not been found.

John H. C. van Breda, clerk at the Resident Magistrate's Court, Cape Town, produced the record in the case of Rex v. Shoolman.

Judgment was entered for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, with costs.

TRIAL CAUSES.

S.A. BIBLE UNION V. COSAY. { 1905.
Apr. 18th.

Sale and purchase—Agent.

This was an action for transfer of certain premises. The declaration set out that the plaintiff, Mr. Pienaar, was the secretary of the S.A. Bible Union, Sarah Cosay, was the defendant, both of Cape Town. Prior to and in July, 1904, certain negotiations took place between the parties for the purchase of certain property belonging to the defendant, consisting of two shops and six offices in Church-street, Cape Town. The plaintiff, on the 16th July, 1904, offered to purchase the property for £8,000, subject to certain conditions, and subject to the confirmation by the directors. The defendant accepted the said offer, subject to the conditions referred to, and on this understanding the property was bought by the plaintiff in July. The plaintiff proposed to the defendant certain terms as to the payment of rates and taxes, and as to a certain dividing wall, and that the purchase-price was to be paid on transfer. The defendant expressed dissatisfaction with certain of the conditions, but not as to the purchase price or to the mode of transfer. Plaintiff, on the 14th July, withdrew and waived all the said conditions, except the method of payment and the mode of transfer. Plaintiff was always willing to pay the purchase-price, and all expenses of transfer, but defendant refused to transfer the property to the plaintiff. Plaintiff had sustained damages to the extent of £2,000, and claimed an order for the transfer of the property.

The plea set out that the main condition required by the defendant during the negotiations, and which was the principal reason for the refusal, was that part of the purchase-money should be paid at once, and before transfer. No completed sale ever took place.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Van Zyl) was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. P. Jones) was for the defendant.

George Stephman, broker, stated that at the end of 1903 he was approached by Mrs. Cosay with regard to the sale of certain property in Church-street. Among other people, he approached the S.A. Bible Union, and after certain offers had been refused, on the 1st July witness wrote to Mr. Pienaar saying that if £9,000 were offered for the property, Mrs. Cosay's agent would induce her to accept. On the 5th July, Mr. Pienaar said that the letter had been laid before the Financial Committee, who could not see their way to offer more than £8,000. On the 6th July, Mr. Pienaar again wrote, stating that the offer would be subject to certain conditions. On the 8th July, the defendant accepted the offer, subject to the conditions referred to being satisfactory. That letter was handed to the secretary of the Bible Union, and witness was requested to draw up a draft broker's note, and he was given instructions what conditions to insert. It was set out in the note "that the property was sold for £8,000, the purchaser to pay all transfer expenses, and such to be paid to the seller up to the 1st August, all current rates and taxes for the current year to be paid to the seller, the present dividing wall to be built up to the roof; cash against delivery." The note was handed to the defendant's representative, who returned it next day, saying that he had submitted it to Mr. Partridge, who was holding Mrs. Cosay's power of attorney, and who refused to accept the note, saying that he could not accept the conditions. Subsequently, witness, with Mr. Pienaar, went to the office of Mr. Partridge, and had an interview with him.

Mr. Gardiner said if his learned friend was going to prove that a contract was made by Partridge, on Mrs. Cosay's behalf, he would object, as that was not pleaded. Partridge had disappeared, and there was no trace of him.

[Maasdorp, J.: You will have to prove that Partridge was acting for Mrs. Cosay.]

Mr. Burton pointed out that at a subsequent stage Mrs. Cosay wrote saying that the conditions would have to satisfy Mr. Partridge.

[Maasdorp, J.: I might allow an amendment of the plea.]

Mr. Gardiner pointed out there was no plea of a verbal contract with Mr. Partridge.

[Maasdorp, J.: The question is whether this contract made with Partridge should not have pleaded?]

Mr. Burton: We maintain that the contract was made by the letters of the 16th July. The only question is whether those conditions were fulfilled.

[Maasdorp, J.: Then the question is whether at this time the conditions were settled in Partridge's presence.]

They were discussed with Partridge, and notification was sent to the defendant for Partridge's decision. Counsel applied to amend his declaration to read: "The defendant either by herself or through her agent, one Partridge."

Mr. Gardiner objected to the amendment at this stage.

[Maasdorp, J.: I will note your objection.]

Witness (proceeding) said when Partridge came to the item of rates and taxes, he objected, stating that it was usual that the purchaser paid a pro rata share. He also objected to the stipulation as to the leases and the building up of the dividing wall. Nothing was said about cash against transfer. That was the usual condition. Partridge did not say that he objected to the price. Witness drew up another draft note. A letter was sent to the defendant from the Bible Union, withdrawing the conditions except the usual one, cash against delivery, and defendant replied that she could do nothing until Mr. Partridge was satisfied.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: He was aware that an offer of £10,000 had been made by the Bible Union for the property in April. He had heard that Mrs. Cosay was anxious to have some money in hand. Mr. Thomas had written, asking £1,000 deposit, which would mean before transfer. As a broker, he could see as time went on that Mrs. Thomas was getting more anxious to get the money. He was positive that Partridge did not object to cash against transfer. On Mrs. Cosay accepting the offer of £8,000, he thought the contract was made. He drew up another note to see if Thomas would accept it. He really did not know among the three, Mrs. Cosay, Thomas, and Partridge, who had the authority to act.

Bernard Pienaar, secretary of the S.A. Bible Union, stated that in 1903 the Union were anxious to buy certain property in Church-street. Some time about May or June he was approached by the broker, Mr. Stephman. On the 5th and 6th July, witness offered £8,000 subject to certain conditions being agreed upon, and the defendant accepted the £8,000, subject to the conditions being satisfactory. Thomas said that Partridge refused to allow Mrs. Cosay to sign. Witness corroborated the last witness as to what took place before Mr. Partridge. Nothing was said about "cash against transfer." He said others had come up and offered to buy the property, but he had told them that the offers could not be entertained, as the property was sold. While the transactions about £8,000 was going on there was no mention of cash down.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Partridge read the note through, but did not make any remark about the condition as to payment. Witness knew that Mrs. Cosay was in want of money some time before. He never said to his committee, before Mr. Thomas, that if they waited they would get it at their own price.

By the Court: Witness did not buy the property; when he met Mr. Partridge, he only had to report, but both witness and Mr. Partridge took it that the property was purchased.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Reginald Metcalfe, solicitor, in the office of Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller, said Mr. Thomas was in the office for some time, and acted for Mrs. Cosay.

William Thomas said he was employed by Mr. Cosay as bookkeeper. In June of last year he was anxious to get money to meet bonds on Mrs. Cosay's property. On June 14 he told Stephman and Pinnaar that he wanted £1,000. He could not say that he mentioned this later on, but he several times mentioned that he wanted money. Mrs. Cosay objected to the condition of the broker's note. Witness attended a meeting of directors of the Bible Union, and stated he was instructed to object to all the conditions. He was never authorised to accept the conditions.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: The broker's note produced was the second note. The first was a rough piece of paper. The two notes submitted to him both contained the objectionable conditions. He received a letter on July 14 withdrawing the objectionable conditions. In July he was negotiating for the sale of the whole property, and had an offer of £20,000. Of the £20,000 he considered that the portion of the property sold to the Bible Union represented £12,000. This was before the acceptance of the Bible Union's offer. After accepting of the offer, witness ceased to negotiate elsewhere. At the present time, Mrs. Cosay had a better offer for the property by £500. This offer was made within the last three months.

Sarah Cosay, defendant, said she never authorised Mr. Thomas or Mr. Partridge to conclude any sale. The main condition was money down. She wanted £2,500.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness told Partridge that she must have £1,000 at once, but if he could get £2,000, to do so. Witness asked Partridge to tell the Bible Union this. Witness told Partridge that cash against transfer was no good to her.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case; and counsel were then heard in argument on the facts.

Maasdorp, J.: "In this case the plaintiff sues the defendant for the transfer of a certain building, belonging to the defendant, which they alleged was purchased by them from the defendant for the sum of £8,000. The defendant denies that any contract was ever concluded between them, and the Court has now to decide whether such a contract of sale was made between the parties. It appears that as early as June, 1904, there were negotiations going on between the plaintiff, and the defendant, through the medium of a broker, Stephman, and at that time it was brought to the knowledge of the plaintiff that it was a matter of some importance to the defendant that she should, if the sale went through, obtain a certain amount of the purchase price on deposit forthwith, and that she could not wait the passing of transfer. It was admitted by the plaintiffs that at that time they were aware she was pressed for money, and anxious to obtain it, and with her negotiations it was a matter of importance that she should receive some cash payment at once. However, no contract was then concluded between the parties. The negotiations went on until the 5th of July, when a letter was written by the plaintiff's secretary to the broker Stephman offering to purchase the property for £8,000. After this letter was despatched the secretary sent another letter before the terms contained in the letter of the 5th could be accepted, and that letter is the important document upon which this case mainly turns. The terms of the letter are the following. It is a letter sent by Mr. Pinnaar, and addressed to Mr. Stephman—"Adverting to my letter of yesterday I have to state that my offer of £8,000 is subject to certain conditions to be agreed upon, and same to be confirmed by the Board of Directors of the Bible Union." An answer was sent to this letter by the defendant herself, in which she accepted the offer, subject to the conditions referred to being satisfactory. Now, it is quite clear that up to the 6th July no agreement of sale had been concluded between the parties, but it is also pretty clear that in Mr. Stephman's opinion such an agreement had been concluded, and I may almost say that in the declaration that opinion of his appears to have been adopted, because in the third paragraph we have the following words: "On or about the same day in July last, aforesaid, the defendant accepted the said offer, subject to the conditions referred to being satisfactory, and upon this the property was sold by the defendant to the plaintiff." Here again the plaintiff seems to anticipate matters, because there could be no sale until the agreement was concluded, and here the position taken up is that when the letter of acceptance was written on the 6th July the agreement was concluded. So far from that being the case it was necessary for the plaintiffs to submit their conditions which were to be taken into consideration by the defendant, and afterwards to reject or express satisfaction with them and conclude the sale. The conditions which the plaintiffs proposed were embodied in the broker's note, which Mr. Stephman handed to Mr. Thomas, and by him the broker's note was submitted to Mr. Partridge. Now, with reference to the position of Mr. Partridge in this case, I have come to this conclusion, that he was empowered by the defendant to carry on negotiations, and so far he had a limited power of attorney. He had no full powers to conclude an agreement with the plaintiffs for the sale of this property, but under the authority given him he had to refer back to her for final decision. The conditions contained in the broker's note were submitted to Mr. Partridge, and, Mr. Partridge having read those relating to the payment of the rents of the property, and the payment of the rates and taxes, objected to them, and some other conditions. At the foot of the broker's note appeared: "Cash against transfer." It is said he also read these words, but did not express any objection to that condition, but it was also clear that he did not in so many words accept that condition. When Mr. Pienaar left the office matters were in the position that the conditions submitted were unsatisfactory and Mr. Pienaar was told that they were unsatisfactory and would not be accepted. Mr. Partridge never told Mr. Pienaar what conditions he actually did accept. After considering the matter the plaintiff decided to withdraw a number of the conditions which were contained in this broker's note and wrote a letter to inform the defendant of this, and I will just point out here that this letter was not written to any agent but direct to Sarah Cosay and also point out that when a letter passed between defendant and plaintiff it was signed by S. Cosay, acting for herself. In this letter, written by Mr. Brand, acting on behalf of the Bible Union, they withdrew all their conditions, but the letter concludes "The only condition is cost against transfer." This is not an unconditional offer which is merely subject to the ordinary consequences of law. It is said the ordinary consequences of law is that cost would be paid against transfer, but it is here more a condition that there should be cash against transfer. After this letter is written another broker's note is drawn up, and I presume, amongst other things, this broker's note contained the condition "cash against transfer." On this second note being submitted to Thomas and Cosay the offer was again rejected. Now it is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the position was this: that the sale for £8,000 was concluded and that no conditions existed to which Mrs. Cosay could object. To that I may say that I consider this condition, "cash against transfer," an important one, and she does object to it, and did directly after the offer was submitted; but, even if it did not contain an exception when the letter of the 6th July was written, the position was this—that the parties contemplated that the bare sale for £8,000 was not sufficient, but they should meet and consider as to the terms of the payment after the purchase price, which was an important matter, and until they so met and considered their arrangements as to the sale and the purchase price, no agreement was concluded. It was suggested that the defendant contemplated the agreement as a concluded contract, and that she only withdrew from it when certain better offers were made to her, and that she did not take up a bona fide position in the matter, but merely attempted to escape from what was a binding contract. Now, there was no positive evidence that that was so, and it appears to me from the correspondence itself that the defendant did not withdraw from the negotiations. The position she took up in the last letter written for her by Mr. Thomas, was that the conditions put forward to that date were not satisfactory, but she did not withdraw from the negotiations, or terminate them, or wholly reject the provisional arrangements that she had up to that date entered into. Upon the whole of the correspondence, and the evidence submitted I have come to the conclusion that the contract to sell alleged in the declaration was never finally concluded between the parties, and that the plaintiffs are, therefore, not entitled to claim transfer of the property, and judgment will be given for the defendant with costs.

MACLEOD V. JOUBERT.

Pleading—Amendment of plea— Costs.

This was an argument on exceptions, the plaintiff taking exception to the defendant's plea on the ground that it was vague, and embarrassing in law, in that no tender was made in the prayer of the plea, although made in the body, and that certain noting charges had also been included in the tender, but not in the plea, and, further, there was irrelevant and argumentative matter in the plea. Mr. Gardiner was for the plaintiff, and Dr. Greer was for the defendant.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Maasdorp, J.: An exception is taken by the plaintiff in this case, to the plea of the defendant. It is alleged that the plea was vague, embarrassing, and inconsistent; in that it appears in one part of the plea that a certain sum is alleged to be tendered in respect of the said debt, whereas in another portion of the plea it almost appears as if that debt, in respect of which the condition is made, is absolutely denied. Then in the plea the defendant prays that the whole of the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, whereas, as a matter of fact, he had already admitted liability for a portion of it, and tendered that portion. Now, this plea seems to me, on the face of it, technically defective and not very artistically drawn, but for my own part I must admit I don't see there would have been actually an embarrassment to the plaintiff in this matter. The plaintiff would have set about proving his debt in the ordinary way, and then the Court would have considered what the balance was that was due, and whether the amount tendered was sufficient. However, when the attention of the defendant was called to the fact that the plea was excepted to as embarrassing, he suggested he should be allowed to correct this defect, and amend the plea so as to be a good and effective answer to the plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff offered to allow the amendment upon the payment of all costs in the matter. Now, it seems to me, considering the whole case, that the exception is really not a vital matter, and it is a very trivial matter. Indeed, there could have been no special costs. I see no grounds for believing that there are any special costs attached to introducing this exception in the answer to the defendant's plea, and under all the circumstances of this case, I think the amendment ought to have been allowed without the raising of any difficulty at all on the part of the plaintiff. The Court will now order that the amendments, as suggested, be allowed in the plea, and that each party pay his own costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.)]

DIVORCE.

CHRIST V. CHRIST. { 1905.
{ Apr. 19th.

This was an action brought by Margaretha Elizabeth Christ, of Cape Town, against her husband, John Christ, merchant, Cape Town, for a divorce, on the ground of his alleged adultery, or, in the alternative, for a judicial separation, on the ground of his alleged cruelty.

The plaintiff in her declaration said that she was married to the defendant in community of property at Cape Town in 1877, and that for several years past they had lived unhappily, owing to the ungovernable temper of the defendant. In the latter part of 1904 he struck her on several occasions, and caused her bodily harm. The plaintiff also alleged that in November and December last, at Cape Town, and in January at Muizenberg, the defendant committed adultery with one Minnie Zimmerman. He had struck the plaintiff with his clenched fist, and threatened to do for her, and in consequence she had been compelled to leave the house. Her daughter had also been compelled to leave the house, owing to the conduct of the defendant. Since January the defendant had contributed nothing towards their support. Plaintiff prayed for a decree of divorce against the defendant, or, alternatively, for a judicial separation a mensa et thoro, division of the joint estate, payment of a sum of money by way of alimony, alternative relief, and costs of suit.

The defendant, in his plea, denied the allegations of cruelty, and said that the differences were solely due to the plaintiff being unhappily addicted to intemperance. He denied that he had neglected to maintain or support the plaintiff or his daughter, and said that both left of their own accord. He said that his house was always open to them, and that if they returned to him, he was prepared to receive them and support them as hitherto. He also denied the allegations of adultery, and prayed that the claim be dismissed, with costs.

The replication was general.

Dr. Greer was for the plaintiff; Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Douglas Buchanan) was for the defendant.

Dr. J. B. Lester said that he had been attending the plaintiff during the past week. He saw no signs of intemperance or any indications that she was addicted to drink. He formerly attended Mrs. Christ, when her condition might have been the result of excessive indulgence in drink. That was about four or five years ago. She was in a very nervous condition, and was very irritable.

Margaretha Elizabeth Christ (the plaintiff) said she was married to the defendant in October, 1877. After the marriage they lived happily for a few years. Then the defendant started carrying on with the coloured girls; witness remonstrated, and defendant retorted that she was jealous. Defendant was very cruel towards her, and sometimes struck her. Last November Minnie Zimmerman came to stay at their house, a letter of invitation having been sent to her by witness's daughter at her husband's request. Witness saw the defendant take the girl into his room and lock the door. Witness had seen her sitting on his lap, and had also seen them kissing each other. This was protested against by witness. She told defendant that it was indecent to behave in such a manner. Defendant told her that if she did not shut up, he would give her a good sjamboking. One day the defendant danced against her, and when she told him to mind where he was going, he struck her on the nose. Witness's daughter complained that Miss Zimmerman was not fit company for her. Her father told her that he was going to have Miss Zimmerman at the house, and that she must clear out if she did not like it. Her daughter left the house, and had since been in service at Worcester. The defendant told witness that he would not support her. He had threatened to shoot her, and had kept a six-chambered revolver in his room. She left the house the following morning, about the 14th January, because she considered that her life was in danger. Witness had since had a quantity of her clothing returned to her, but the defendant still retained her jewels. It was untrue to say that her husband treated Miss Zimmerman as a child. She was over twenty years of age. Witness had told the defendant that Miss Zimmerman was more his wife than she (witness) was. Witness commenced an action against her husband four years ago, but, at the request of the defendant, she withdrew the proceedings, and her husband paid all the costs. She denied the charges of intemperance, and said that she was suffering from nervousness in consequence of the defendant's cruel treatment of her.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness had formerly taken beer, like any German would, but she denied that she had taken drink to excess. She denied that she had got drunk and used abusive language to all and sundry, and thrown things about. Her husband twice went with her to Europe, but she denied that it was so that she should undergo treatment on account of her intemperate habits. Miss Zimmerman and witness's daughter had attended the Convent School together, but witness had not encouraged the former to visit the house. Her husband always objected to their keeping company with Germans. They had scarcely any Germans visiting with them; her husband always wanted English friends. Miss Zimmerman was an orphan. It was not true that she had regularly called witness and her husband "Mammy" and "Daddy." Miss Zimmerman had not been in the habit of taking wine, but had taken whisky, because wine was not strong enough for her. One day, while they were at Muizenberg, Miss Zimmerman got drunk, and was lying on the sands in an indecent state. Witness did not see that incident, but she was told about it by her daughter. Witness had practically been a prisoner for three years. Shortly after she left the house in January, the defendant refused to let her have her clothes and jewellery.

Bertha Caroline Christ (20), daughter of the parties, said that she had seen Miss Zimmerman, who was about her own age, on her father's knee, and she had seen him kissing her. Miss Zimmerman had also gone to her father's room, but she had told witness that she had only gone there to have a drink. Miss Zimmerman and witness shared one room, and witness had had occasion to complain about her father coming into the room in the morning before they were dressed. They had a bathing-house at Muizenberg, containing two compartments. A stock of liquors was kept in both compartments. Her father entered the box just after Miss Zimmerman and witness had been bathing. Miss Zimmerman had called out to her father, and said that she was cold, and he then came in and got her a drink of whisky. Witness objected, and her father told her that she must shut up, or he would do something to her. Witness also stated that her father had treated her mother cruelly, and had used violence towards her. Her mother was not, to her knowledge, of intemperate habits.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Miss Zimmerman had often visited her parents, and had occupied the same room as witness, and, in fact, had been treated as a member of the family. It was untrue that her mother had been addicted to liquor at any time. There had long been unhappiness between her parents. Witness had always taken the side of her mother, while her elder sister had always taken her father's side.

Charles Hanna, of the Central House Private Hotel, said that the plaintiff had been staying at the house a little over two months. He had never seen her under the influence of drink.

De Villiers, C.J., said that it did not seem to him that the evidence was strong enough to support the charge of adultery.

Dr. Greer said that in that case he would rely on the alternative prayer of a judicial separation a mensa et thoro.

Evidence was called for the defence.

Dr. S. P. Impey said that he attended the plaintiff in 1901, and found that she was suffering from the effects of intemperance. She undoubtedly had a craving for drink, and was suffering from dipsomania. He considered that the defendant was indulgent towards her. He thought the drink habit might have been caused, but not aggravated by cruel treatment. Witness thought that, in addition to liquor, the plaintiff must have been addicted to a drug, probably morphia. He had noticed that she prevaricated a good deal. The first symptom of morphia was untruthfulness. Plaintiff made many charges against her husband, but, knowing the circumstances, witness did not believe the allegations. Witness had occasionally prescribed morphia for plaintiff for dyspepsia, but Mrs. Christ had had the medicine repeated without authority.

Cross-examined: Witness spoke very strongly to plaintiff about the morphia. She said she must have something, and witness prescribed a medicine for her to do away with the craving. When witness saw her last in 1901, she was not under the influence of morphia.

John Christ (the defendant), said that his wife left him in January last. There was trouble owing to witness's daughter complaining of her mother's ill-treatment, while his wife complained of the daughter. Witness saw it was better for one to leave. His daughter left some days later; witness returned from business, and found his wife had gone. He denied that he had ill-treated his wife, or that he had been intimate with Miss Zimmerman. He had kissed her—"like he would a child." Witness had never taken the girl into a room, and closed the door. He had taken her into a room two or three times to give her a drop of wine or whisky, but had not closed the door.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How old is Miss Zimmerman?]

Twenty.

And you are?

Fifty-three.

And you thought it a right thing to do to take a young girl into your room and give her whisky?

I didn't think much of it. Perhaps I did wrong in that way.

Referring to the bathing-house incident, the witness said his daughter called to him from the bathing-house to go in and dry Miss Zimmerman's hair.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Spare your daughter.]

I must tell the truth.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Your daughter called you in, you say. Very incredible.]

Witness said he opened the door, and Minnie called out, "No; don't come in."

[De Villiers, C.J.: It is nonsense. What could a daughter's object be in telling her father to do such a thing?]

Witness denied the allegations of cruelty, and said his wife was very jealous, especially when under the influence of drugs and liquor. She used to abuse the children. If the houses were all occupied, the rents would amount to £95 a month, but he was drawing only £65 rent a month from the properties, and he had to pay 5 per cent. interest on loans. The interest came to £760, and he had to pay £220 for rates and insurance. The property could not, at present, be realised to advantage. He had done practically no work for nine or ten months as a painter and decorator. The utmost witness could pay to his wife was £10 a month. He wished to keep the boys, who, he believed sided with him in the matter. He was willing to take his wife and daughter back.

By Dr. Greer: His daughter objected to Miss Zimmerman coming there, and witness told her if she objected he would stop young men coming to the house. She then said she would go, and witness told her she could do as she pleased. That was not, however, the reason why she left.

Minnie Zimmerman was called, and denied the charges of misconduct.

Llewellyn Henry Roberts, son-in-law of the parties, said that he had known the parties for six years, and he thought the unhappy relations were entirely due to Mrs. Christ's craving. She was very abusive at times. Witness had often been surprised at the defendant controlling his temper when his wife provoked him.

Mr. Burton closed his case, and counsel were heard in argument on the facts.

De Villiers, C.J., remarked that he was not inclined to order any division of the property. For the sake of the lady herself, it would be far better for her to get a fixed allowance, which should not be too great. He did not think such cruelty had been proved as would justify the Court in giving a decree if there had been any real opposition, but the defendant himself recognised that it would be impossible for himself and his wife to come together again. At the same time, he considered that the defendant's conduct had been very improper, very indecent, and very immodest with the young girl Zimmerman, whom he ought to have protected, and he was inclined to order defendant to pay all costs.

After hearing Mr. Burton,

The Court granted a decree of separation, with costs, the plaintiff to have the custody of the daughter Bertha. It was also ordered that, pending a further order of Court, on the application of either party, the defendant should pay to the plaintiff the monthly sum of £14, for the support and maintenance of herself and daughter during the minority of the daughter, and, after that, a monthly sum of £10, defendant to keep accounts of his income and expenditure until a final division of the property should take place, and to hand over to the plaintiff forthwith all her jewellery and personal belongings.

ILLIQUID CASE.

SMUTS V. BRITTON.

Mr. Rowson moved for judgment, under rule 329d, for £37 10s., for rent.
Order granted as prayed.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte JOSEPH. { 1905.
Apr. 19th.

Dr. Greer (on behalf of the respondent, the husband of the petitioner) moved for the rule nisi temporarily interdicting certain moneys lying to the respondent's credit in the Post Office Savings Bank to be discharged. The petitioner, in her original application, said that she intended to institute an action forthwith for judicial separation, but had failed to institute proceedings.

Rule discharged.

Ex parte ESTATE BLACK.

Mr. Watermeyer, on behalf of the executors testamentary under the will, Sarah Black and William Runciman, moved for an order authorising the repayment of a certain loan of £700, and to advance further sums out of the capital.

Maasdorp, J., said that the application could not be made without John M. Black, one of the heirs, being a party. He must receive notice of the application.

BOTHA V. BOTHA.

This was an application for attachment of the respondent for contempt of Court, in not obeying an order to pay alimony to the plaintiff.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the applicant. Respondent did not appear.

The matter was ordered to stand over on account of an affidavit having been filed for respondent to the effect that there had been a reconciliation.

SEALE V. DOOVEY.

Mr. Upington moved for the referee's report to be made rule of Court.

Mr. Roux (for the respondent) urged that, as the matter originally came before Mr. Justice Hopley, it would be in the interests of all concerned that the present matter should come before Mr. Justice Hopley.

Mr. Upington submitted that the matter was one that might properly be dealt with by the Court at present, and he called attention to the terms of the reference. The dispute, it seemed, related to the erection by the plaintiff of certain shops and tenements in the district of the Woodstock Municipality, at the contract price of £1,650. Certain difficulties occurred during the progress of the building operations between the builder and the Municipality. The report of the referee showed that he found that there was a balance due to the plaintiff of £191 18s. 5d., the defendant having tendered £68 odd.

Mr. Roux read an affidavit by the defendant's attorney, who submitted that the referee had placed a construction upon the contract that was contrary to law. That was in reference to the foundations and excavations. He submitted that the award should be reduced accordingly, or returned to the referee. The amount allowed by the referee for the excavations and foundations was £224.

Maasdorp, J., said that he thought Mr. Justice Hopley would shortly be back from the Circuit Courts, and in the meantime he considered that it would be better to allow the matter to stand over, to be mentioned to Mr. Justice Hopley upon his return.

SCHREIFER V. SCHREIFER.

Mr. Russell applied for the appointment of Mr. W. A. Currey, of the General Estate and Orphan Chamber, to act in the division of the joint estate. Order granted.

Ex parte GRESLEY.

Dr. Greer moved, on behalf of petitioner, as executor in the estate of George Bolton, for an order directing the Master to accept a certain distribution account and file the same. It was stated that there had been a second marriage by Bolton. The first wife had not been heard of for a period of twenty-five years, and her death had been presumed.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte ESTATE ALBERTSE.

Mr. Russell moved for leave to transfer certain property to an executor.

Maasdorp, J., said that notice must be given to the usufructuary, Magdalena Elizabeth Botha, and the matter would therefore stand over.

Ex parte MABERY.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for leave to sell certain property in the estate of petitioner and her late husband, and to apply the proceeds to the purchase of another property.

Order granted authorising the sale, the proceeds to be devoted to the purchase of a property, to be registered in the names of the children.

Ex parte D.R. CHURCH, JAMESTOWN.

Mr. Roux moved, on behalf of the petitioner, the minister of the Dutch Reformed Church, Jamestown, in the district of Aliwal North, for an order calling upon the High Sheriff to pay £1 2s. 6d. for each of certain erven set out in the schedule, or altogether a sum of £25 17s. 6d. The erven, according to the affidavit, bore by the original conditions of sale an annual tax of 5s. in favour of the D.R. Church at Jamestown, and four and a half years' taxes were claimed. It appeared that the land had been attached by the Divisional Council by reason of the non-payment of rates, that the High Sheriff had held a sale, and that a certain sum of £160 remained unclaimed in his hands.

Maasdorp, J., said notice of the application should be served upon the Sheriff, so that he might be a consenting party. The matter would stand over pending a report from the Sheriff, and then the question might arise as to whether a rule nisi should be issued. Perhaps under all the circumstances it would be best to give a rule nisi now to avoid further costs. The order of the Court, therefore, would be that a rule nisi be issued calling upon all parties interested in the properties mentioned to show cause why the sums claimed by the applicant should not be paid out of the proceeds in the hands of the Sheriff, notice to be served on the Sheriff, and rule to be published once in a newspaper circulating in Jamestown and to be returnable on the 13th May.

Postea (May 15th). The rule was made absolute.

Ex parte STROBEL.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, on behalf of petitioner, acting as father and natural guardian of his minor son, for leave to raise a further sum of £250 to complete the erection of a dwelling-house. Leave had already been given to bond the property to the extent of £250, so that the property, if the present application were granted, would be mortgaged in the sum of £500. The Divisional Council's valuation was £600.

Maasdorp, J., said that if the order were granted in the present form of the application, the minor might be saddled with a good deal of interest. He would take time to consider the form in which he would grant the order.

Postea (March 20th). Leave granted as prayed.

GARLICK V. THOMPSON.

Mr. Upton moved for an award of arbitrator to be made a rule of Court. The dispute related to a lift in premises belonging to the applicant. The arbitrator found for Mr. Thompson for £157.

but ordered him to refund £500 to the applicant, and directed the respondent to pay the costs of the arbitration.

Order made rule of Court, with costs.

RAYNER, CAWOOD AND CO. V. NORVAL.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the attachment of certain property situate in Colesberg ad fundandam jurisdictionem, and for leave to sue the respondent by edictal citation for £48 15s. 7d. Defendant was residing in the Orange River Colony.

Order granted for the attachment of the property as prayed, and leave granted to sue by edictal citation, citation to be served personally, and to be returnable on the 1st June.

Ex parte NESER.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the appointment of Mr. Thomas Percy Dawson as sole trustee in the insolvent estate of Simon Solomon. Petitioner said that he was a creditor against Solomon's estate upon a promissory note for £1,000.

Order granted, appointing Mr. Dawson as provisional trustee, with full powers of a trustee to administer the estate.

Ex parte MARAIS AND WIFE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for leave to sell certain property. The matter, he said, had previously been before the Court, and had been ordered to stand over pending further information. The petitioners were married by ante-nuptial contract, under which certain settlements were made, certain of the property was mortgaged, and there were sundry other liabilities. One Van Ardt also had a life interest in the property. The whole estate was in a most complicated and involved state. Counsel stated that the further information required by the Court had now been furnished.

Maasdorp, J., said that, before making an order, he would like to read the papers in the matter.

Postea (May 5th). Lease granted to sell the property at not less than £2 per morgen.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

JACOBSON V. GRESSE.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £163 18s. 6d., balance of account for goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

TRIAL CAUSE.

PARRY V. LANG AND { 1905.
ANOTHER. { Apr. 19th.

Sale and purchase—Brokerage—
Rectification of contract—
Misjoinder of parties.

This was an action to recover £85 for brokerage in respect of a transaction in connection with the sale of the Transvaal Hotel, Sir Lowry-road.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was a broker, of Cape Town, the first defendant until recently a licensed victualler, and the second defendant, who had been originally joined as co-defendant, was also a licensed victualler of Cape Town. The first-named defendant employed the plaintiff to find a purchaser, and in January, 1905, the first-named defendant sold the goodwill and fixtures of the Transvaal Hotel through the instrumentality of the plaintiff to the second defendant for £3,000. One of the conditions was that the first-named defendant should pay the plaintiff £85 for brokerage. Inadvertently, the words the "purchaser to pay the brokerage" instead of "vendor to pay brokerage" appeared in the note, and plaintiff claimed a rectification of the note so that the vendor should pay the brokerage. In February, 1905, the plaintiff obtained a rule nisi, acting as an interim interdict against both defendants, and he claimed against Lang £85 brokerage, with interest and costs of suit.

The plea set out that the plaintiff introduced two likely purchasers in Ginsberg and Kanterowitz. The defendant denied that he ever instructed plaintiff to find a purchaser, or that the sale to Moore, the second defendant, was effected through him. The first defendant signed the note, but informed the plaintiff that he did not effect the sale. The defendant denied that through inadvertence the words were put in the note.

Mr. Alexander for the plaintiff, and Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner) was for the defendants.

Edwin Parry, broker, said he had known Lang for upwards of two years. When he knew him first defendant was concerned in the sale of an hotel at Robertson for a friend of Lang's.

The defendant asked him in March, 1903, to call at the hotel to see if a sale could be put through, and witness said the price of £6,000 for the Transvaal Hotel was too much. Lang subsequently said Josephs had put through the sale. Moore was the last purchaser he introduced. That was in December last. In the case of Kanterowitz, broker's notes were actually made out. According to these Lang had to pay the brokerage. The sale was announced to Lang's principal creditors, and a meeting was held at Messrs. Logan's office, at which Lang was present. It was then found that Lang's statements regarding loans were incorrect. Kanterowitz was prepared and anxious to carry the sale through if Lang's representations had been correct. Witness afterwards told Lang he had another purchaser, and about December 23 he introduced Mr. Moore to Lang and to Mr. Anchutz, the manager of Sedgwick's. It was arranged that Mr. Moore should interview the creditors, and that gentleman showed witness a written option he had obtained from Lang. There was a difficulty in the matter of finance, but witness got two of the firms to transfer their loans. A meeting was arranged with Mr. Bultitude, and at that meeting witness, in the presence of Mr. Moore, discussed the matter of brokerage. Lang asked him to reduce the amount, and witness agreed to take £85. Lang said he would pay this, and Mr. Bultitude, who was present during part of the discussion, suggested that witness should make the note out. Lang, however, said he would not sign it then, but would go to witness's office. Afterwards, Lang said he would not let Mr. Moore have the billiard table or the cash registers. Witness remonstrated with him, and eventually they went to witness's office, where the note was written. They took the note to Moore, and the latter and Lang signed it.

Mr. Alexander, in putting the note in, said it was unstamped. Application had been made to the Treasury to assess the fine, but the Treasury preferred to leave it to the Court.

Continuing, the witness said that next day he altered the note, substituting "vendor." Moore pointed out the mistake to witness. He took the amended note to Lang next day, but the latter said he did not want to alter the note, but wanted witness to cancel the sale, as he had been offered £500 more. He said he would give witness £100 instead of £85 in the event of his selling to some other purchaser. Witness asked him to put this in writing, and he did so. Moore, however, refused to cancel the sale. Subsequently, Lang's attorney wrote, repudiating the amended note.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He would produce his licence for January, 1905. The note was signed at the Cafe Royal, and the only people present and interested in the matter were Lang and Moore. The broker's note was written at witness's dictation. Moore claimed the discounts, and witness filled them in. Witness did not instruct Mr. Bernard to draw up the note over the deal with Kanterowitz. He knew in the agreement that the discounts were to be given to Lang, but Lang was to pay brokerage. Lang never said to him in Ohlsson's office that he refused to pay brokerage, as there was no broker in the matter. He did say that he would refuse to pay brokerage, as witness had done him a shabby trick over another action. The premises were never advertised by witness on behalf of Lang, although Lang did authorise him to do so.

Re-examined by Mr. Alexander: On the 12th witness pointed out the mistake, but he did not write until the 16th.

Arthur Moore, proprietor of the Cafe Royal, said that he purchased the Transvaal Hotel. The first he heard of the hotel was that Parry had it in hand. Some time afterwards Parry brought Lang into the Cafe Royal, and witness, in reply to a question from Parry, said he was still prepared to buy the hotel at a price. Anchutz said there was no broker in the business, but Parry did not hear that remark. There was never any arrangement that he should pay Parry any brokerage. Witness heard a dispute between the plaintiff, Lang, and Bultitude as to the brokerage in Ohlsson's office. Parry wanted the full amount (£175), and at the finish they arrived at a compromise, Lang agreeing to pay £85. Lang also told Logan's manager that he would pay the brokerage.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Lang extended the option which witness held for a few days. In consequence of an interview with Mr. Sedgwick, witness got the option on the hotel. Mr. Sedgwick said there was to be no broker in the affair. Witness objected to the discounts not being in, and the plaintiff must have put them in while he was in the Cafe Royal, but witness did not actually see him write. When witness heard that he was a co-defendant in the case, he got an assurance from Parry that he would claim no brokerage from him. There was a dispute pending between witness and Lang over certain fixtures.

Re-examined by Mr. Alexander: He knew when the conversation took place about a broker that Parry was concerned with the affair.

By Buchanan, J.: The discounts on beer last year amounted to £67 2s.

Archibald Bultitude, manager for Ohlssons, stated that his firm were landlords of the Transvaal Hotel. Witness gave Lang notice to leave, as he was behind with his rent and beer account. Parry was the man who introduced Kanterowitz. On the final day Lang, Moore, Parry, Anchutz, or Sedgwick, and witness were present, and on that day he believed the note was signed. There was a good deal of friction between Lang and Parry, and witness induced Parry to take £85 in full settlement. Lang distinctly agreed to do that, and the matter was again confirmed in Logan's office. It was agreed that Moore was to have the discounts on the beer.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He was quite clear as to what took place. He never swore that the note was signed in his presence. Witness considered that Moore was entitled to the beer discounts. Lang objected to paying any commission.

George Frederick Brown, manager for J. D. Logan and Co., said that in December witness was pressing Lang, and witness told him he must sell the place. Several persons were introduced to Parry as buyers. Parry was the broker all through. At one meeting he heard Lang objecting to pay Parry brokerage, and heard the others urging him to pay, but he did not hear Lang consent to pay £85.

Wm. George Duncan Nicholls, managing clerk for the plaintiff, stated that shortly after he joined Parry eight months ago, there were negotiations about the Transvaal Hotel with Kanterowitz. On the 10th January Parry and Lang came into the office, and plaintiff immediately said that the business with Lang was finished, and instructed witness to write out the note. There was a discussion about cork-pullers, and a cash register, and the plaintiff said he would not be a party to Moore paying for those articles. The plaintiff said that Lang had cut him down in his brokerage to £85, and Lang said: "You are all right, Parry; you have made enough." Lang never said that he was not going to pay the brokerage.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: They had plenty of printed forms of brokers' notes in the office, but they did not put the agreement in the brokers' printed form. Witness knew nothing about the plaintiff's licence. Witness understood that the contract was completed, but still he drew up a second draft. He believed the document was drawn up on the 10th January.

Re-examined by Mr. Alexander: There was still a dispute about the billiard table and Mr. Moore was not present.

Mr. Bultitude (re-called) fixed the interview in this office, as far as he believed, at the 10th January.

Solomon Kanterowitz, builder and dealer, said he was introduced as a purchaser of the hotel, and subsequently Lang told him that Parry's man was the buyer. Lang told Parry that he would not get more than £100, and witness, at Parry's request, made a note of this.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: It must have been a day or two after the 15th December, when he saw the plaintiff and defendant.

Abraham Bernstein stated that he went with the last witness to the Transvaal Hotel, where Lang said the place was as good as sold. Lang said it was all right, it was Parry's man, and he (Parry) would get £100.

Bennie Yates, licensed victualler, of Swellendam, stated that in January he had occasion to go to the Transvaal Hotel with Isaacs, where they saw the defendant. Witness said he could put £1,200 into the hotel, and Lang produced a note, which he handed to Isaacs, and asked him if he saw anything wrong with the note. Isaacs did not see it, and Lang pointed out "purchaser to pay brokerage," instead of "seller to pay brokerage."

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Isaacs and the plaintiff were supposed to be in partnership at the time. He could not say that anything was struck out of the note.

Albert Isaacs, broker, stated he went down with Yates with an idea of selling the hotel, and Lang told him that Moore had bought it. He saw the broker's note. For the moment witness did not see the mistake. Beyond a joint transaction with Parry over the Belvedere Hotel, there was no partnership between them. Lang pointed out the mistake, "purchaser to pay brokerage."

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Parry suggested that Yates might be a purchaser of another hotel. The note that he saw was typewritten.

George Blyth stated that he heard Lang say to Parry that he had made a mistake in the note. Parry offered to alter it, but Lang would not let him. Lang said he had another man who would go £500 more, and Parry said if he could arrange with Moore that he (Parry) would not stand in his way. He heard Lang say that he would give Parry £100 if the sale with Yates went through.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He believed that sale had already gone through when the question of reselling to Yates cropped up.

Mr. Alexander closed his case.

Frederick John Christian Lang (defendant) stated that Moore came to him about the hotel about a year ago. Witness never gave the plaintiff any instructions about advertising the hotel. He did not hear Anchutz say that there was no broker in the matter. Witness saw Parry with Moore at Ohlsson's office, where the only thing discussed was the brokerage. As Mr. Sedgwick sent down the buyer, witness refused to pay brokerage altogether. He never agreed to pay any brokerage. At Logan's office, Parry again asked for his brokerage. The plaintiff said he would draw up a note and protect witness with regard to the billiard table, cash register, etc. Witness signed after they came to an agreement about the discounts on the beer. When Isaacs, Parry, and Yates were present, the place had not been sold, and witness said if Parry could get the sale through for £4,000, the plaintiff would get £100. Witness took up the position that Moore was sent to him by Sedgwick's. It was incorrect to say that all that took place on the day in question when the property had been sold. If he had had the discounts over the sale with Kanterowitz, he would have paid the brokerage.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: The plaintiff was to get nothing for all his trouble. The plaintiff had nothing to do with the transaction with Moore. Bultitude was not speaking the truth when he said witness offered £85 in settlement of the brokerage. The sale, as far as he knew, was completed between the 11th and the 15th January. Witness did not ask Parry to endeavour to break off the sale with Moore. He promised Parry £100 if the sale with Yates went through. Yates was introduced by Isaacs. Witness could not explain why he would give Parry £100 over the sale with Yates. Moore was not introduced as a buyer.

Charles Low stated that in January last he was in Ohlsson's office, when he heard the defendant tell the plaintiff that he would see him "blowed" if he paid him any brokerage, and he did not think he was entitled to it.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: He was not certain as to the date. It might have been when the lawyer's letter was sent.

John Henry Anchutz, manager for Sedgwick and Co., stated that when he was in the Cafe Royal, Moore asked him if anything was done, and witness told him to come to the office. Witness asked Moore if he was on his own, without any broker, and Moore replied in the affirmative.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: Witness did not have a private interest in the hotel with the defendant. Parry never asked Moore in witness's presence if he was still prepared to buy the Transvaal Hotel.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

Buchanan, J.: In this case there was a contract between two parties—Lang and Moore—and I cannot understand why exception was not taken to the declaration, on the ground that the plaintiff had absolutely no part in the contract, and had no legal status to come before the Court to ask for a rectification of the document. As far as this document stands, it is a contract between Lang and Moore. It was competent for either of these parties to sue the other for a rectification, but I don't see how it is possible for the plaintiff to do so. Carefully reading Mr. Bultitude's evidence, I hesitate to believe that Lang agreed to pay the plaintiff the amount of £85. Moore and Lang took no objection to the written document, and the only thing for the Court is to give absolution from the instance, with costs.

At a later stage a representative of Messrs. Walker and Jacobsohn produced the documents in question.

HARTRODT V. MCKAY { 1905.
AND CO. { Apr. 20th.

Provisional sentence — Bills of exchange — Liquid and illiquid claims.

The Court refused provisional sentence upon certain bills of exchange, where it did not clearly appear how far these bills referred to items for which credit had been given.

Mr. Burton moved for provisional sentence for £1,495 18s. 6d., upon certain bills of exchange drawn and certain bills of exchange drawn up and accepted by the defendants, which had been dishonoured. There was also an illiquid claim for £497 17s. 5d., goods sold and delivered, and disbursements made for and on behalf of the defendants. Plaintiff allowed under these heads a credit of £961 16s. 3d.

Mr. Gardiner was for the defendants.

Mr. Burton, replying to the Court, said that he did not at the present stage move for judgment on the illiquid claim.

Mr. Gardiner read an affidavit by Mr. John P. A. Bischoff, a partner in the defendant firm, who stated that they had demanded from the plaintiff a full and complete account of all transactions, but the same had never been rendered. The deponent said further there was a considerable sum due to the defendants on account of percentage of freight to which they were entitled. They said that they had never received an account showing the amount due to them by way of rebate, and that the rebate must be considerable, as their transactions must have amounted to about £12,000. They estimated that at least £250 was due to them under this head. There were also a goodly number of credit notes due to them. Defendants maintained that, if full particulars were rendered to them, the position of affairs would be very different from that alleged by the plaintiff. Under all the circumstances, the defendants prayed that the plaintiff be ordered to go into the principal case.

Mr. Burton read an affidavit by Mr. Gother Mann, of the South African Association, who stated that the association had been acting on behalf of the plaintiff. He annexed a balance-sheet handed to him by the accountant employed by the defendants. In that balance-sheet there figured a debit due to the plaintiff of £968 4s. 3d. A further affidavit by Mr. George Forrest, who held the plaintiff's power of attorney, annexed the specified account referred to in the defendant's affidavit. As to the other allegations, an answer could only be given by plaintiff from London or Hamburg.

Mr. Gardiner said that, although there were two claims, one liquid and the other illiquid, the two were very much involved one with another.

Maasdorp, J., intimated that he would first hear Mr. Burton.

Mr. Burton submitted that the fact that certain parts of the plaintiff's claim, bills of exchange had not been drawn, could not debar the plaintiff from his right to obtain provisional sentence upon the liquid documents which he now produced. If necessary, let the whole of the credit go off against the liquid claim. The defendants had given no answer to the plaintiff's claim upon the bills of exchange. The figure brought up by the defendants' accountant approximately corresponded with the amount claimed by the plaintiff.

Mr. Gardiner was not called upon.

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff in this case sues the defendants upon certain bills of exchange, and also for an illiquid claim. It appears from the documents put in that there is a large amount of indebtedness between the parties, consisting, to a large extent, of bills of exchange, and also a number of items for goods sold and delivered. For a portion of these debts credit has been given. Upon the face of the accounts these items are inextricably involved. There is a credit allowed, and upon the face of the documents it is impossible to say in respect to which items these credits have been allowed. It is stated in the affidavits that portions of the items for which credit has been given have been allocated, but it is admitted that others have not, and it is now suggested that the appropriation may be made in law in respect of the bills of exchange. What the legal effect might be if no appropriation took place would be a question of law but, as a matter of fact, such appropriation may have taken place between the parties when they entered into these transactions. It also appears that certain rebates ought to be allowed, and that such rebates might be a set-off. On the whole, I have come to the conclusion that the items of account are so involved that it is impossible to distinguish between the bills of exchange and the rest of the account. Provisional sentence will be refused, costs to be costs in the cause.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £261 11s. 2d., balance of certain money lent by the plaintiff to the defendants.

One of the defendants appeared in Court, and said he had been summoned for the debt to Mr. Steer, who drew the rent of £6 a month. Mr. Steer discovered that he could not pass the bond, and asked witness to call a meeting and explain to the congregation that the bond could not be passed. Afterwards

Mr. Steer discovered he had made a mistake in the title. The congregation agreed, in satisfaction of Mr. Steer's debt, that he should draw the rent, provided he paid the taxes. Mr. Steer agreed to this arrangement. Mr. Steer subsequently said they would have to pay interest at the rate of 6 per cent., and later at the rate of 8 per cent.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones said an appearance had been entered on behalf of the defendants, and it had been withdrawn.

[Maasdorp, J.: You owe this money?]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

KRIGE V. MALHERBE. { 1905.
Apr. 20th.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Van Zyl appeared as curator ad litem. Mr. De Villiers moved for an order declaring the defendant of unsound mind, and for the appointment of a curator to dispose of his property, in order to maintain his wife, himself and children.

The affidavit of Dr. Dodds set out that the defendant, who was confined in the Asylum, exhibited symptoms of mental unsoundness, and incapable of managing his own affairs.

Mr. Van Zyl said he had seen the defendant, and he could offer no opposition to the application.

Order granted, declaring the defendant of unsound mind. Mr. Herman J. Dempers, attorney, of Cape Town, appointed as curator bonis, with power to sell the property and pay debts, and advance moneys for the maintenance of the defendant, his wife, and children, costs to come out of the estate.

LINSCOTT V. LINSCOTT.

Mr. Gardiner was for the plaintiff and Mr. Sutton appeared as curator ad litem.

The summons called on the defendant to show cause why she should not be declared of unsound mind, and for the appointment of a curator to administer the estate.

Wm. John Dodds, medical superintendent at Valkenberg Asylum, said that the defendant was admitted on March 25 this year. The defendant was undoubtedly insane, and quite incapable of looking after herself and her property.

Examined by Mr. Sutton: There was a very fair prospect of a recovery.

Arthur Linscott, husband of the respondent, said he was married in France in 1898. The respondent was always somewhat hysterical, and since the birth of her child she got worse, and had to be detained as a lunatic. His wife had an income of about £110 a year. Witness was desirous of being appointed as curator of her person and property.

Order granted, declaring the respondent incapable of managing her own affairs, and appointing the husband, Arthur Linscott, as curator of her person and property, with power to receive the revenue from her property for the maintenance of the respondent.

Ex parte ESTATE KERDEL.

Mr. De Waal moved to make absolute a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act.

His Lordship pointed out that publication had been ordered in a Dutch newspaper. It had been published in a Dutch paper in the English language, but it was palpable that publication in the Dutch language was meant. He held that the publication was insufficient.

The return day was extended until Thursday next for proper publication.

KRIGE V. GREEF.

Mr. De Waal moved to make absolute a rule nisi, calling on respondent to return a certain mare and foal.

Rule made absolute.

BROWNE V. HAYWARD.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the applicant's (Browne's) release from civil imprisonment.

Mr. Close appeared for the respondent, and consented to suspension of the decree, pending payment of £100 out of the proceeds of certain property.

An order was made in terms of a consent paper.

Ex parte SEDGWICK AND CO.

Mr. Struben moved for an order authorising the issue of a certified copy of a certain bond to enable petitioners to institute a certain suit.

Rule nisi granted, rule to be published once in the "Cape Times," and to be returnable on the 4th May.

HARRIS BROS V. FRANKEL.

Mr. Close moved for an order of ejectment against the respondent in respect of certain premises at Seaforth, Simon's Town. Mr. Alexander was for the respondent.

Mr. Close read affidavits filed on behalf of the applicants, in which it was alleged that the respondent admitted having received notice to quit, and having agreed to leave on the 31st March.

Mr. Alexander read a replying affidavit by the respondent, Solomon Frankel, who stated that he took over the business of Messrs. J. Lipett and Co., upon payment of certain consideration, and that Messrs. Harris Bros. had granted Messrs. Lipett a two years' lease. The lease was dated the 1st May, 1904, and was subsequently confirmed by the firm by letter. Deponent said that he interviewed a member of the applicant firm, and was granted by him a verbal lease of the shop for the remainder of Messrs. Lipett's unexpired term. Upon this undertaking he had paid £28 for the goodwill of the business, and took possession in September last. Deponent had regularly paid his rent since he entered into possession. Counsel also read a supporting affidavit.

Mr. Close read an answering affidavit by Mr. Greengood, a member of the firm of Messrs. Lipett and Co., who declared that the respondent on interviewing Messrs. Harris was accepted as tenant of the shop, but only on a monthly tenancy, and he (the respondent) took the shop on this condition. Counsel also read a supporting affidavit by Mr. Wolf Harris. Mr. Close having been heard in argument on the facts, Maasdorp, J.: There is a conflict of evidence in this matter upon which the Court might have assistance if the witnesses appeared, and their testimony could be tested at the trial. Under the circumstances, the Court will now refuse the application, costs to be costs in the cause, and motion to stand as summons in the case.

Ex parte OLIVIER.

Mr. Sutton moved, on behalf of the executor testamentary in the estate of J. J. Olivier, for leave to pass certain mortgage bond to discharge liability.

Order granted.

MABERLY V. WOODSTOCK MUNICIPAL COUNCIL.

Mr. Searle, K.C., said that he appeared for the Municipal Council of Woodstock, but he understood that there was no appearance for the applicant, John Maberly. Some time ago Maberly obtained a rule nisi against the Woodstock Council, restraining them from proceeding with the purchase of a certain farm in connection with the water scheme of Oliphant's Hoek. That rule was made absolute on the 17th November, 1902. The respondent Council now applied for the interdict to be discharged, the consents which it was pointed out when the rule was made absolute were necessary to enable the Council to proceed having now been obtained. Counsel read affidavits by Mr. Smith, Town Clerk, to the effect that the Council had obtained the necessary consents of the Minister and the Governor. Mr. Searle submitted that the Council were entitled to have the rule discharged.

Maasdorp, J.: It seems that the grounds upon which the interdict was granted have now been removed, and the applicant, who obtained the interdict, does not appear to offer any opposition to the order being discharged. Under the circumstances, the Court will order that the interdict be discharged.

Mr. Searle, replying to his lordship said that the Council did not ask for costs.

Ex parte ALLY.

Mr. Pymont moved to make absolute a rule nisi calling on the Registrar of Deeds to issue a certified copy of a mortgage bond which had been destroyed in a fire in June, 1902.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte ALLY.

Mr. Pymont moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to accept a certain power of attorney signed before a notary public in Bombay, but which had not been properly attested as required on notarial deeds outside the Colony. Counsel said that the notary was on the Civil Service List in India.

Maasdorp, J., ordered that the matter be referred again to the Registrar with the fresh information to see if the Registrar had any objection to the Court granting the order.

AFRICAN MUTUAL TRUST AND ASSURANCE CO. V ABRAHAMSON.

Mr. Gutsche moved for leave to sue the respondent by edictal citation for the recovery of certain moneys due on a bond.

Application granted, with leave to attach the property, the citation to be returnable on the 1st August, personal service if possible, failing which one publication in the "Gazette" and one in a paper circulating in the Malmesbury district.

STEWART'S ESTATE V. THE MASTER. 1905.
Apr. 20th.
May 19th.

Succession duty—Secs. 1 and 15 of Act 5 of 1864—Act 4 of 1895.

S., domiciled in Scotland, died intestate in India, leaving certain movable property in this Colony, which, in virtue of a certain antenuptial contract entered into here, devolved upon certain heirs, ab intesto, who were also domiciled in Scotland. Letters of administration had been taken out here, and the Master claimed that the movable property was liable to succession duty under Sec. 1 of Act 5 of 1864.

Held, that as these heirs succeeded to a settled estate in this country under a settlement executed here, the estate was liable to succession duty.

Held further, that by Sec. 15 of Act 5 of 1864, such succession duty was to be assessed at the rate of five per cent.

This was a petition to have it declared that the moveable estates of the late Charles Stewart and his wife within this colony was not liable to succession duty.

The petition set forth that by an antenuptial contract entered into between the late Charles Stewart and his wife, Lena Stewart, in 1882, it was provided that there should be a settlement on trustees of a certain sum for the benefit of the issue of the marriage. There was only one child of the marriage—a son—who died in India, and was a domiciled Scotsman. The trust funds were taken over by applicant on his appointment as executor dative. The next-of-kin, who were heirs in the estate, ten in number, were domiciled in Scotland, and petitioner held that distribution must take place in Great Britain and succession duty paid there. The Master, however, decided to assess a succession duty of 5 per cent., and applicant now prayed for a declaration that succession duty was not payable in this colony.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., appeared for the applicant; Mr. Searle, K.C., for the Master.

Sir H. Juta: This is a question of succession duty. The deceased was in India, the heirs ab intestato in Scotland, and the property in this country. The property will be administered according to the law of Scotland. Act 5 of 1864 does not say whether the succession duty applies to the situs of the property, or to the place of death of the de cuius, or to the residence of the heir. The person liable for succession duty must be sueable for it, and I therefore argue that the heir cannot be liable unless he is in this colony. The duty must be paid by someone amenable to the jurisdiction of this Court, Sections 7 to 14 of the Act show this. As to Act 4 of 1895, before that Act was passed, succession duty had to be paid on moveables wheresoever they might be. But the situs of moveable property has nothing to do with succession duty. There is no machinery by which it can be levied.

[Maasdorp, J.: Does not property under trusteeship stand upon a different footing from other property? If pro-

erty in a certain country is accepted by a legatee, he accepts it subject to the laws of that country.]

But see Section 21 of Act 25 of 1894, whence we may say that it is not the property which pays succession duty, but the successors.

[Maasdorp, J.: The Court has ruled that the domicile of the testator settles the whole question.]

Then if a man comes here and acquires property here, but is not domiciled, no duty will be due?

[Maasdorp, J.: If the property were vested in a trustee here, would not that make the property to be legally here?]

But the ante-nuptial contract provides that the property should go to the one child on his majority or marriage. The property therefore vested in the son, only the enjoyment of it was deferred. There was no trust, and nothing for a trustee to do. The property was not tied up, and all the executor had to do was to realise it and send the proceeds to Scotland.

Mr. Searle (for the Master): An executor dative was appointed here at the request of the trustees. Section 1 of Act 5 of 1864 is practically the same as Section 2 of the English Succession Act of 1853. If this were res nova, the Court might be open to listen to arguments based on the ambiguity of the Act; but we have a number of English decisions on the matter. The only sections of our Act to which I need refer are 1 and 15. If the property to be administered is settled here it must pay duty and stands on quite a different footing from things which a man carries about with him. See Hanson on Probate and Succession, p.p. 22 to 25 and 219 to 225 and Attorney-General v. Campbell and Lyle v. Lyle therein referred to, which show that the question of the forum of administration governs the law as to duty (Hanson, p. 23).

[Maasdorp, J.: As soon as John succeeds there will no longer be any property under the trust.]

That is so.

[Maasdorp, J.: Then how do the heirs ab intestato come under the trust?]

They could not get the property without the trust. We do not charge duty on property not brought into the country.

[Maasdorp, J.: Oh yes, duty can be charged in England on moveables no matter where they may be if an Englishman be domiciled there. If a testator has disposed of property inter vivos in trust, the law of the country in which that has been done will govern the question of duty.]

Sir H. Juta (in reply): The English Act differs widely from our Act. As to the liability of moveable property to duty, see Hansen (p. 22). My whole contention is that the Acts look to the person and not to the property.

Maasdorp, J., said section 1 of Act 5 of 1864, upon the interpretation of which the decision of this matter depends is almost identical with the corresponding section in the English Succession Duty Act. The chief difference exists in the express exemption from duty of immovable property out of the Colony, but in view of the principles upon which the question is dealt with, this exemption may almost be regarded as surplusage. The English decisions upon the question raised in this case go off entirely upon general rules and first principles of law which are common not only to our law and English law, but also to the law of almost all civilised nations, and they may therefore, be taken as safe guides, if not conclusive authorities in the determination of the issue. The intestate whose succession is in question, though he died in India, was at the time of his death domiciled in Scotland, and the personal property in question, to which his heirs succeed is situate in this colony. Now, in the decided cases in England it has been clearly and finally laid down that if a person dies domiciled in England, testate or intestate, and whether or not it be necessary to have recourse to a foreign tribunal for the administration of portion of the property situate in a foreign country, and wherever the heirs may happen to be, the personal property of such person, wherever situate, is subject to English legacy duty and succession duty. Whereas, on the other hand, if under similar circumstances a person dies domiciled out of England his personal property situate in England is not liable to English legacy duty or succession duty. These decisions are based upon the rule that the personal property of a person must be taken to be where he is domiciled, upon the maxim mobilia sequuntur personam. It is quite within the power of any country to tax the property of foreigners within its jurisdiction, but such intention is not presumed unless it is clearly expressed. After the law had been settled as abovementioned by the English decisions, the case of the Attorney-General v. Campbell came before the Master of the Rolls in England, and he held accordingly that a certain fund in England passing under the provisions of the will of a testator domiciled abroad was not liable to succession duty. Upon appeal to the House of Lords it was held that this case was to be distinguished from those upon which the decision of the Master of the Rolls proceeded, in that the fund which formed the subject of the succession was a settled fund under an English settlement made by the testator, and no longer followed his domicile, but became subject to succession duty. It is contended on behalf of the Master in this case that the succession of the heirs in Scotland is in respect of a settled fund under a Colonial settlement, and that they succeed under the trusts of a marriage settlement executed in this country in respect of property situate here. The deceased John N. Stuart, who died before he attained his majority, would have become entitled to the possession of the fund upon his attaining majority, and it is agreed on both sides that the fund vested in him upon the death of his parent, and that his heirs in Scotland are entitled to succeed to it. In my opinion these heirs succeed to a settled estate in this country under a settlement executed here, and that fund is liable to succession duty. Act 4 of 1895 does not seem to me to affect this case. It having been decided that succession duty is payable, the question arises at what rate is it to be charged. It is provided by section 15 of the Act that "where the interest of any successor in any property shall, before he shall have become entitled thereto in possession, have proved by reason of death to any other successor or successors, then one duty only shall be paid in respect of such interest, and shall be due by the successor who shall first become entitled thereto (possession), but such duty shall be at the highest rate which, if every such succession had been subject to duty, would have been payable by any of them." It appears that if John Nairn had succeeded the duty would have been at the rate of 1 per cent., upon the succession of his heirs the rate is 5 per cent. The Court therefore declares that succession duty is payable in this case at the rate of 5 per cent., costs to be paid out of the estate.

DIVORCE.

REED V. REED.

1905.
Apr. 25th.

This was an action brought by August Salemon Reed, of Philip's Town, a mason, against his wife, Francina Reed, of Hanover, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, divorce, by reason of the unlawful and malicious desertion of plaintiff by defendant.

The declaration set out that the parties were married in community of property at the Dutch Reformed Mission Church, Hanover, in January, 1892. There was no issue of the marriage. Within three months of the marriage defendant unlawfully and maliciously deserted the plaintiff and had been absent from him since, although requested to return to him. Plaintiff prayed for a decree of restitution, failing which divorce, and forfeiture of defendant's half share of the property.

Mr. Van Zyl was for the plaintiff; the defendant was in default.

Mr. Van Zyl said that defendant had been barred from pleading and in consequence of the plaintiff being old and infirm leave was obtained for the Court to have his evidence taken on commission before the Civil Commissioner of Philip's Town. Counsel having read the evidence taken on commission,

A decree of restitution was granted, with costs, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 1st June, failing which rule to issue calling on the defendant to shew cause on the 15th June why an order for divorce should not be granted and why defendant should not be declared to have forfeited any rights accruing from the marriage.

Postea (June 15th). Rule absolute.

TRIAL CAUSE.

LE ROUX V. MARAIS AND OTHERS.

Prescription.

This was an action brought by Thomas Jacobus le Roux, junior, of Caledon, against Johannes Petrus Marais, of Caledon, and the Colonial Government and the Municipality of Caledon for the declaration of rights in respect of a certain strip of land, an interdict against the first defendant and also damages against him for trespass.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff and the first defendant reside at Caledon and are the registered owners of certain erven, in Millstreet, in the Municipality of Caledon, the plaintiff of erf La H, No. 15, and the said defendant of erf La H, No. 16 in the said street.

2 Between the boundaries, according to diagram of the said erven there lies a strip of land which has never been granted from the Crown, and which would appear to have been originally set apart as a road or passage, but during a period of much more than 50 years the said strip of land has been enclosed and continuously possessed and used adversely as and of right as against the other defendants by the plaintiff, and the first defendant and their predecessors in title.

3. There existed for more than 40 years and until recently upon the said strip of land a certain quince hedge which the plaintiff, the first defendant and their predecessors in title at all times recognised as the boundary between their respective properties, and the plaintiff and his predecessors in title for the period of 40 years and upwards have continuously possessed and used adversely and as of right pro domino the portion of the aforesaid strip of land bounded by the said quince hedge, and the ownership of the said portion of the said strip has been by prescription acquired as against the Colonial Government and the Municipality of Caledon and generally as against all persons whatsoever.

4. In or about the month of April 1904, the first defendant wrongfully and unlawfully in part cut down the said quince hedge, whereupon the plaintiff by his Attorneys protested against the said acts of the first defendant and threatened to bring an action for a declaration of rights and for damages.

5. Thereafter in the month of June, 1904, the first defendant by his Attorneys in consideration of a settlement of the dispute, and an abandonment by the plaintiff of his intention to bring the said action, proposed that the first defendant should recognise the said hedge as the boundary of his said erf and of that of the plaintiff, and that if the plaintiff was satisfied that he was the owner or entitled to the land on his side of the said hedge, the said hedge should for the future be viewed as the common boundary between them, and the plaintiff by his Attorneys thereafter agreed to accept the said proposal and abandoned his intention to bring the said action and settled the dispute in accordance with the said proposal.

6. Thereafter in violation of the plaintiff's rights acquired, as set forth in paragraph 3, and also in breach of the agreement so arrived at as aforesaid, the first defendant in the months of October and November, 1904, trespassed upon the plaintiff's land acquired by him by prescription as aforesaid and recognised by the said agreement as his property, and more especially in the month of November, 1904, the first defendant wrongfully and unlawfully so trespassed and placed iron standards and a wire fence on the said land on the plaintiff's side of the said quince hedge, enclosing the said hedge and a portion of the plaintiff's said land. The first defendant has caused damages to the plaintiff in the sum of £50.

7. The Colonial Government and the Municipality of Caledon are joined in this suit in order that the plaintiff's rights in respect of the said land may be declared in respect of the said land, but no costs are asked against either of these defendants who do not dispute the plaintiff's title to the said land bounded by the said quince hedge.

Wherefore the plaintiff prays for: (a) An order declaring that he is by prescription and by the agreement referred to in paragraph 5, entitled to the said land bounded by the said quince hedge, and lying between the said hedge and the erf La H. No. 15, in Mill-street, in the Municipality of Caledon; (b) An order compelling the first defendant forthwith to remove the said iron standards and wire fence and restraining him by perpetual interdict from trespassing upon the said land; (c) Judgment against the first defendant for £50 sterling by way of damages; (d) Other relief; (e) Costs of suit.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Sutton) for plaintiff. Defendants in default.

Mr. Searle said that upon these proceedings being taken the plaintiff's attorney wrote to the Colonial Government and the Caledon Municipality and now had letters from those authorities to say that they did not intend to defend the action. The first defendant had now been barred from pleading and did not enter appearance.

Buchanan, J., said that a letter had been received from the first defendant stating that the plaintiff had no right to the land in question and that he sold it to him (the writer) in 1885 upon the purchase of land on the other side. Marais added that he had been advised by his friends not to appear as the Court could not take away any ground which was marked off by a surveyor as belonging to him. He thought it would be best for the plaintiff to look into that point.

Mr. Searle said they would do so.

Evidence was called.

Johan Frederick Willem Kaupferberger, Government Land Surveyor, said he had surveyed lots 15 and 16 of the Mill-street erven and he explained the points of the plan put in.

Johannes Jacobus le Roux (the plaintiff) and others gave evidence.

At a later stage Mr. Searle produced a copy of the transfer in question.

Judgment was given for the plaintiff against all the defendants in terms of prayers (a) and (b) of the declaration, and against the first defendant (Marais) for £5 damages and costs, to include plaintiff's expenses as a necessary witness.

RAUBENHEIMER V. RAUBEN- (1905.
HEIMER.) Apr. 25th.

This was an action brought by the husband for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which divorce, by reason of alleged desertion by his wife. Mr. P. S. T. Jones was the plaintiff.

The defendant appeared, and said that she had left her husband because he had not supported her, and she did not intend to return to him because he could not support her.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to the plaintiff on or before the 15th May, failing which rule to issue calling upon her to show cause on the 15th June why a decree of divorce should not be granted, and plaintiff be declared to have custody of the minor child, a girl.

TRIAL CAUSE.

MCLEOD V. JOUBERT.

This was an action brought by William James McLeod, conveyancer, of Cape Town, formerly carrying on business as an auctioneer and general dealer at Aberdeen, against Johannes A. Joubert, farmer, Aberdeen, to recover a sum of £15 15s. 11d., alleged to be due by way of debt, with interest a tempore moræ and costs.

The plaintiff, in his declaration, alleged that a sum of £15 15s. 11d. was due to him.

The defendant, in his plea, said that he had already paid a sum of £10 in part payment of the account to Mr. Smythe, who took over the plaintiff's business. He admitted that a balance of £5 15s. 11d. was due, and made a tender accordingly.

The plaintiff, in his replication, said that the defendant gave him a certain promissory note for £26 12s. 9d., and that, taking the sum of £10 into account, there was still an amount due of not less than the amount claimed. The said sum of £10 was paid as against the promissory note.

Mr. Gardiner was for the plaintiff; Dr. Greer was for the defendant.

Maasdorp, J., ruled that the onus lay upon the defendant to prove that the payment of £10 was in respect of the open account.

Evidence having been led for the plaintiff,

Mr. Gardiner argued that the amount of £10 was paid towards partial discharge of the promissory note, and that the plaintiff had taken a proper remedy in bringing his action in this Court.

Dr. Greer contended that the balance of the evidence was in favour of the statement of the defendant, that he had paid the sum of £10 in reduction of the open account. The plaintiff, he submitted, had multiplied and piled up costs against the defendant and the Court, even if it found for the plaintiff, should not award costs to him.

Mr. Gardiner having been heard in reply,

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff in this case claims from the defendant the sum of £15 15s. 11d., being the balance of an account, the items of which are annexed in full in the plaintiff's declaration. The account consists of items of an open account and other items having reference to the indebtedness of the debtor to the plaintiff upon a promissory note, to which he had become surety. The indebtedness of the defendant upon this account runs over the years 1902 and 1903. It would appear that at the same time that this account was running the defendant also owed the plaintiff a sum of £26 12s. 9d. upon a promissory note made by him on the 15th June, 1903, which fell due on the 15th July, 1903. It seems that during August, 1903, this promissory note was partly renewed by another, for the sum of £17 19s. 3d., a payment on account having in some form been made by the defendant to the plaintiff. The circumstances under which that payment was made have really given rise to this action, and I may say the suit is largely the result of a misunderstanding between the parties. The defendant alleges that he paid a sum of £10, on the 7th August, 1903, to the agent of the plaintiff, at Aberdeen, and he says that he paid this amount and expected it to be set off against his open account, upon which he is now sued by the plaintiff. However, in August, he had an interview with the plaintiff, in which the plaintiff brought to his knowledge that a promissory note for £26 12s. 9d. was due. The plaintiff also then admitted to the defendant that he had received the sum of £10, which he suggested should be set off against that promissory note, the renewal of which it had been already agreed should be made by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff. It appears that credit was given by the plaintiff for the £10 paid by the defendant. When this suit arose, it appeared to the defendant that nowhere was an acknowledgement made of the receipt of the £10, and he consequently endeavoured to set up the payment of the £10 against the open account, and here, as I say, a misunderstanding arose between the parties. When the defendant proposed to set off that £10 against the open account he was not at the time informed by the plaintiff that he had already given him credit for the £10, and that he set it off against the promissory note, for which he had granted a renewal. If the matter had been cleared up between the parties at that time, I am sure that the case would not have proceeded any further, because the defendant would fully have understood that he had received credit for the £10. At one time the plaintiff was unwilling to admit that the payment made to Smythe, which had been made by the defendant, was a payment to himself through his agent, for which the defendant ought to receive credit, but that state of affairs was wholly altered when the plaintiff filed his replication. In the pleadings, it will be seen that what the defendant had contended for was admitted by the plaintiff. I have come to the conclusion that the money was paid for the promissory note, and that, when the defendant signed a renewal of the promissory note, he was a consenting party to the £10 being treated as in part payment of the original note. Upon the defendant receiving the replication, all the difficulties which had up to that time existed were removed, and it was consequently brought to the notice of the defendant that he had received full credit for the £10 paid by him. Under the circumstances, the £10 cannot now be set off against the account, which is annexed to the declaration, but the plaintiff is entitled to judgment upon that account. The question arises whether under the circumstances, considering the amount of the claim, the plaintiff should have his costs in this case. Now, as has been pointed out by counsel, upon the authorities cited, the Act of Parliament, in which the power of the Court in this respect is granted, does not allow the Court discretion to hold in a case like the present that a plaintiff is only entitled to Magistrate's Court costs. A further difficulty arises in my mind whether the plaintiff should not be disentitled to his costs on other grounds, because of his having at one time denied the receipt of the money. But, as I say, with respect to the costs, the Court cannot now go back upon the state of the case before the replication was served, and when the replication was served, that difficulty was removed, and, although there may have been some doubt still in the mind of the defendant, whether he had received the full credit he was entitled to, still, for that doubt he is himself only to blame. He is, no doubt, not a good business man, he was not aware that he had signed a renewal of the former promissory note, which has been clearly proved, and under the circumstances I think the difficulties under which the defendant laboured were the result of a bad memory and business incapacity, but for this the plaintiff should not suffer. Judgment will be given for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, with costs.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

BRUMMER V. ESTATE STEYN. { 1905.
Apr. 25th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the rule nisi calling upon the respondent, as executrix testamentary in her late husband's estate, to show cause why she should not sign certain papers for the sub-division of a certain farm to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute, with costs.

Ex parte ESTATE EDKINS.

Mr. Gardiner moved for leave to pay over proceeds of policy of assurance to Mrs. Edkins, and to discharge petitioner from the office of trustee. The Master's report was favourable.

Order granted in terms of Master's report.

Ex parte DATH.

Mr. Gardiner moved for leave to sell certain property. Petitioner married the widow of the late Mr. Elliott, and they had executed a mutual will, in which they appointed the children of the first marriage and any children to be born of the second marriage to be their heirs. The second marriage was without issue. Petitioner's wife had since died, petitioner was in bad health, there were certain charges to be met—£1,000 odd annually—and he desired to sell such properties as produced a low rent, and put out the proceeds on mortgage. The outgoings were a little in excess of the income from the property. Petitioner applied for an order for the appointment of Mr. G. W. Steytler to sell such properties as he thought fit. Counsel said that the Master in his report pointed out that this was not a favourable time for the sale of landed property, but he (Mr. Gardiner) contended that the interests of all concerned would be protected if a reserve price were fixed.

Maasdorp, J., said he thought it was desirable that the Court should have a report from Mr. Steytler upon the matter before any order was made. The matter would therefore stand over for further information from Mr. Steytler as to the whole matter, but especially as to which properties should be disposed of or mortgaged to meet the requirements of the case.

ERASMUS V. VAN DER MERWE.

Mr. De Waal moved for a rule nisi calling upon the respondent to show cause why a certain inheritance of £100 due to him should not be declared executable to a judgment obtained by the petitioner to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute.

MAKGOSOA V. FLAG MINI.

Mr. Alexander moved for an order of personal attachment against the respondent for contempt of Court, in failing to restore to the applicant her female child, Lily Malefani, in accordance with an order of the Court. Counsel read an affidavit by the petitioner, who stated that the respondent had failed to restore the child, and had declared his intention of not returning the child. He added that the respondent had never appeared in court. The applicant was the mother of the child, and it appeared that the respondent had obtained possession of it by a subterfuge, and was retaining it because the applicant had refused to marry him. The respondent resided at Aliwal North.

An order was granted directing the respondent to deliver the child to the Deputy-Sheriff at Aliwal North, and directing the Deputy-Sheriff to take the child from the respondent and place it in the possession of the applicant; respondent ordered to pay the costs of this application.

Maasdorp, J., said he thought that the defendant, seeing that the demand for restoration of the child had been made upon him by the applicant's agent, had not really understood that he was disobeying an order of Court in refusing to give up possession.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

TRIAL CAUSES.

KRUGER V. KRUGER. } 1905.
 } Apr. 26th.

Will — Codicil — Construction —
Bequest by implication.

A testator, by codicil to his will, bequeathed a farm to his grandson A., "upon this understanding that he shall not be able to sell the farm, but that after his death and that of his wife it shall devolve upon his eldest son." A. married his first wife after the testator's death, and after her death he was twice married. Upon the death of A., the plaintiff, being his eldest son by his first wife, took possession of the farm.

Held, in an action by A.'s widow, being his third wife, claiming a life interest in the farm, that the wife referred to in the codicil was the mother of the eldest son of A., and that the defendant, as such eldest son, was entitled to the farm after the death of his father and mother.

This was an action brought by Hester Carolina Kruger, widow of the late Abraham Lodevicus Kruger, of Steynsburg, against Jacob Petrus Kruger, for an order of eviction from the farm Morsfontein, in the district of Cradock, and also for damages.

From the pleadings it appeared that the circumstances were as follows: By the codicil to a certain will a bequest was made to a grandson called Abraham, whose widow plaintiff was. That bequest was embodied in a codicil in the following terms: To our grandson, Abraham Lodevicus Kruger, the perpetual quit-rent farm named Morsfontein, situate in the Field-cornetcy of Brak River, aforesaid, for which he shall indemnify and pay to our estate the sum of four thousand Rix dollars, also upon this understanding, that he shall not be able to sell the said farm, but that, after his death and that of his wife (it), shall devolve upon his eldest son; but, in case he should die unmarried, the said farm shall then fall back to our joint estate, which shall also take place after the death of his wife, as well as his own, in case he should die without leaving children. And that the ground and the dam, of which a separate diagram exists, and which are at present used with the farm Morsfontein, shall be regarded exactly as if the same were included in one and the same diagram and title deed, to be assumed and possessed by our two last-named legatees for always after the death of both of us; and, in case of their predecease, as hereinbefore mentioned, by their lawful descendants by representation, as free and lawful property, without the contradiction of anyone." The testator died in January, 1843, at which time the grandson Abraham was a boy about 13 years of age. Subsequently Abraham married, and by his first marriage there was born the defendant. Then Abraham married a second time, and afterwards he married a third time, and it was his widow by the third marriage who had instituted the present suit. Abraham died in October, 1904, and the plaintiff claimed that under this codicil she was entitled to remain in possession of the farm Morsfontein during her life.

The declaration further stated that the defendant, Jacob, the eldest son, had taken possession of the farm, and the plaintiff claimed that she was entitled to have possession during her life. There was also a claim for damages. The plaintiff herself was unable to come to Cape Town, and she had abandoned the claim for damages, and the question simply arose as to the construction of this codicil. The defendant, in his plea, said that the marriage was without community of goods. He dissented from the construction placed upon the will by the plaintiff, and denied the correctness of that construction. He admitted having taken possession of the farm, and that he now occupied it, but said that he was lawfully entitled to do so, and he refused to give up possession. He also said that the plaintiff voluntarily quitted the farm after the death of his (defendant's) father.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Sutton) for plaintiff. Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him J. E. R. De Villiers) for defendant.

Jacob Petrus Kruger (the defendant), said that he was the eldest son of the late Abraham Lodevicus Kruger, of Steynsburg, by the first marriage. He was now occupying the farm in question, having lived there from his eleventh or twelfth year, that was since about 1861. During his father's lifetime witness bought his father's life interest, paying about £600 for it. Upon his father's death in October, the plaintiff left the farm nine days afterwards, and went to live with her son by a previous marriage, who was at Bethulie. Witness first heard in January that she was making a claim to the farm, receiving a notice on the 27th January. The farm contained a little over 7,000 morgen. His step-mother (the plaintiff) was not quite 50 years old; witness was 55 years old. Witness had built a house on the farm.

Sir H. Juta argued that there was a bequest by implication to the plaintiff, and that it was intended that Abraham's widow, whichever she was, should enjoy the usufruct of the farm.

Mr. Searle contended that the testators only contemplated the first wife of Abraham, and that it was never intended, seeing that an eldest son had been born, that the widow by any subsequent marriages should have any enjoyment of the property. In this case they had a lady who was claiming against the eldest son of Abraham, who was several years her senior. The intention of the testators was to benefit the eldest son, and not to benefit any lady who was not the mother of the eldest son.

Sir H. Juta having been heard in reply.

De Villiers, C.J.: The farm in question was bequeathed by the testators to their grandson, Abraham Kruger, upon this understanding, that "he shall not be able to sell the farm, but that after his death and that of his wife, it shall devolve upon his eldest son." If the codicil had stopped here, I would have had no doubt whatever that it was the testator's intention to postpone the enjoyment by the eldest son until the death of his mother as well as his father. In point of fact, Abraham had three wives. The defendant in the present case was the eldest son by the first wife. The third wife was alive at the time of Abraham's death, and she now claims that she is the wife referred to and that she is entitled to remain in possession during her lifetime, excluding the defendant, who is the eldest son of the first wife. In my opinion the words "after his death and that of his wife," must be held to refer to the first wife, the mother of the eldest son. If it were otherwise, it would have been in the power of Abraham practically to oust the eldest son. In his old age he might marry a young wife, and this young wife would step in, retain the property during her lifetime, and practically oust the step-son, who would be very much older than she is herself. In the present case the step-son is only five years older, but he might have been 20 years older or more, and in that way the desire of the testators would be completely frustrated. That could never have been the intention of the testators. Therefore, in my opinion, even if a bequest could be allowed by implication, there is no such necessary implication in the present case as to justify the Court in holding that the third wife is entitled to a life interest. But, then, there is a further clause in the will, and the Court has to decide whether that further clause should in any way affect the interpretation the Court would place upon the first part of the codicil. That further clause says, "But in case he shall die unmarried, the said farm shall then fall back to our joint estate, which shall also take place after the death of his wife, as well as his own, in case he should die without leaving children." No doubt, this clause throws some doubt upon the construction the Court has placed upon the first part, but, in my opinion, the doubt is not of such a nature as to exclude the interpretation I have just referred to. It may well be that the testator desired that the eldest son should take the bequest, and thus exclude the third wife, but in that case there were no children at all. There is nothing to show that the widow of Abraham, even if not his first wife, should have a life interest. In the events which have happened the defendant was entitled, after the death of his father and mother, to the benefit of the bequest. For these reasons I think that the judgment of the Court should be for the defendant. In regard to the costs, I think defendant should have his costs, and as to his expenses as witness, under the circumstances, seeing that the claim for damages was not withdrawn until to-day, I think the defendant is entitled to his witness's expenses.

MALCOMESS AND CO. V. { 1905.
CARY. { Apr. 26th.

Misjoinder of plaintiffs—Exception—Compensation.

M. and the trustee of N.'s insolvent estate joined in an action to recover the amount of certain promissory notes made by the defendant in favour of N., and by N. endorsed before his insolvency, in favour of M., as security for certain advances made to N.

Held, that in the absence of any prejudice to the defendant from such joinder, he was not entitled to except thereto.

This was an argument upon an exception taken by the defendant to the plaintiffs' declaration. The plaintiffs, Malcomess and Co., of East London, and Peter August Reimers, in his capacity as sole trustee in the insolvent estate of the firm of H. B. Cary, of Tarkastad, brought an action against Thomas Bovey Cary, to recover a sum of £414 2s., upon certain promissory notes, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.

The declaration set out that the first plaintiff carried on business at East London and elsewhere under the style of Malcomess and Company, and the second plaintiff joined in the action in order to complete the record and assist the plaintiff, as far as need be, but he did not advance any claim on behalf of creditors in such insolvent estate, other than that of the said Malcomess and Co. to the proceeds of the promissory notes, in respect of which the defendant was sued in this matter. The two promissory notes in question were made by the defendant in February, 1903, for amounts of £265 and £149 2s. respectively, in favour of the firm of H. B. Cary, or their order, at the Standard Bank, Tarkastad. The said notes were due and payable on the 9th May, 1903, but before their maturity, they were endorsed by the firm of Cary to the Standard Bank, who took the said notes with others to hold for and on account of Malcomess and Co., the said firm of Cary having ceded, assigned, and pledged the said notes to Malcomess and Co. by way of security in respect of the liability of the latter under a guarantee to the extent of £8,000, given by Malcomess and Co. to the said bank for the amount of any overdraft of the firm of Cary. The amount of the overdraft of the firm of Cary at the said bank was £2,447, and Malcomess and Co. had been called upon to meet the said notes, which had been dishonoured.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for the exceptant and defendant in the action; Mr. McGregor was for the respondents and plaintiffs in the action.

Sir H. Juta said that the exception was to two plaintiffs suing the defendant. It was a most extraordinary proceeding for a trustee to sue together with a creditor. If the debt was due to the insolvent estate, then the trustee must sue. It was of vital importance to the defendant, because he said that there were mutual credits at the date of the insolvency, which he would be able to set off against any indebtedness on his part to the insolvent estate, and if in some manner or other this creditor Malcomess could sue, then he must sue on his own behalf. As a matter of fact, Malcomess had sued for provisional sentence on these promissory notes. Defendant opposed on certain grounds, and the Court refused provisional sentence, and ordered Malcomess to go into the principal case. Malcomess, after a time, instead of going into the principal case, paid up all the costs of provisional sentence, and then this action was instituted, in which Malcomess joined the trustee of the insolvent estate. One or other might have a right to sue, but the two could not.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Has Malcomess paid up his guarantee to the bank?]

Sir H. Juta said that he had. He would, however, draw their lordships' attention to one or two points. When his client gave the promissory notes, he was indebted to the firm of Cary, but subsequently the firm became indebted to him, and they had a regular sit-down and a settlement of accounts, in which credit was given to the firm of Cary for these very promissory notes. Malcomess was, no doubt, in a quandary, and he wanted to get the trustee to help him out of his difficulties. This money either belonged to the insolvent estate or it did not. It was a very nice way of getting out of the difficulty when you were in doubt to whom the debt was due, but he submitted that it was a counsel of perfection that that Court would not allow.

Mr. McGregor said that the object was to have it made quite clear that there might be no question of a party whose rights were affected not being before the Court. He contended that the plaintiff was quite justified in having the trustee in the insolvent estate joined with him as plaintiff.

De Villiers, C.J.: The declaration discloses the fact that Malcomess and Co. (the plaintiffs) are the legal holders of certain notes made by the defendant. That fact, no doubt, would entitle the plaintiffs to sue the defendant, but then the declaration further discloses this fact: that, although the plaintiffs are the holders of these notes, yet they took them merely as security, and the question may therefore well arise whether, seeing these notes are held merely as security, the trustee is not the person who should sue, or at all events, has such an interest in the notes as to entitle him to become a party to the suit. In order, therefore, to remove any difficulty, the trustee is joined as co-plaintiff. It certainly cannot prejudice the defendant that the trustee is so joined because every defence which would be open as against each plaintiff suing separately would be available as against the plaintiffs suing jointly. It is said that, if the trustee sued alone, the defendant could plead compensation, but if, by law, there has been compensation, the defendant could plead it, notwithstanding that Malcomess and Co. are co-plaintiffs. It is just possible that at the trial further facts may come to light, shewing that there has been a misjoinder of the plaintiffs, and, therefore, in disallowing the exception, the Court will order the costs to be costs in the cause.

BOULDER BROS. V. COLONIAL { 1905.
GOVERNMENT. { Apr. 26th.

Plea—Document relied upon in defence—Exception.

A declaration set forth the terms of a contract upon which the plaintiffs relied, and the plea, without admitting or denying that the terms of the contract had been correctly stated, alleged that the terms of the contract were contained in a certain letter addressed at a certain date to the defendants' agent, but the terms of the letter was not set out, nor was its general purport stated. An exception by the plaintiff to the plea as being embarrassing was sustained.

This was an argument on exceptions to a certain amended plea (see 15, C.T.R. 41), on the ground that the amendment raised a new defence, and that if the Court were to decide upon that exception in the plaintiffs' favour, there would be no need to have the Commission, for which the application had been made, to go to take evidence in England.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Struben), was for the excipient (plaintiffs in the action). Mr. Howel Jones was for the Colonial Government (defendants in the action.)

Sir H. Juta said that the evidence required on Commission would not be necessary if the Court took a certain view as to the construction of the contract. It was necessary that the contract should be before the Court, and the Government in its plea had referred to the contract. The Government said that the terms of the agreement were contained in a certain letter, addressed by the plaintiffs to the Agent-General on August 7, 1901, and that the letter would be produced at the trial. The point was, that the plaintiff said that the letter ought to be in, or that, if it were not, the material terms should have been set out to show the agreement, because if that were done the question of the construction of that agreement might at once be raised before the Court. The action was instituted by the plaintiffs against the Government upon a contract for the supply to the Colonial Government of certain coal, to be sent out to the Cape Colony, and the Government was to take delivery of that coal in instalments. The plaintiffs alleged that, by the agreement, the Government undertook to pay demurrage at the rate of fourpence per net registered ton per diem, in respect of sailing ships, and sixpence per diem in respect of steamers. The plaintiffs alleged that the Government did not take delivery of the coal as it was bound to do under its contract, and that, as a result, these vessels were detained. They claimed demurrage in terms of this contract. The original plea simply gave a denial as to the Government being indebted to the plaintiffs in any demurrage. The declaration had set up that the Government had paid demurrage in respect of a number of these, but refused to pay on the remainder. The plea was a denial that the Government was bound to pay any demurrage, or damages for detention. Then the Government moved the Court to amend the plea, and leave was given. By the amended plea the case which the Government now set up was that the rates of demurrage stipulated for in the charter parties of these ships was a different rate of demurrage to that laid down in that agreement between the Government and the plaintiffs, and that the Government, if it were liable for anything, was liable to the owners of the ships, and not to the plaintiffs. Now, in order to ascertain whether the Government was liable to the owners of the ships or to the plaintiffs, it would be necessary to see the terms of the agreement entered into between plaintiffs and the Government. The plaintiffs asked that that agreement of August 7 should be annexed to the plea, and he (counsel) could not see how the Government could be prejudiced by this. The point was whether the Government, if it were liable for demurrage, was liable to the plaintiffs in terms of the contract made with them, or whether it was only liable to the owners of the ships. The letter containing the contract was not before the Court, and consequently this was the first proceeding the plaintiff took. He excepted to the plea on the ground that it was vague, embarrassing, and inconsistent in law, and that the plaintiffs were prejudiced and delayed in their suit. He contended that where the defendant relied upon a document for his defence, he should put that document before the Court, and he would ask his learned friend whether he would not annex the letter, which procedure would save a great deal of time and expense.

Mr. Jones urged that the Court had the contract before it in the plaintiff's declaration, which set out at length all the terms of the contract. Government admitted all the terms of the agreement, with one exception, regarding the quality of the coal, and that not being specifically denied in the plea, it was admitted by implication. All that was necessary had been done, and there was no reason for doing anything further.

[Do Villiers, C.J.: For the convenience of the plaintiffs, and perhaps for your own convenience, if they say the insertion of the letter would save time and expense, would you not be prepared to insert the letter?]

Mr. Jones said he was not prepared to take the responsibility of attaching the letter. There was nothing, he urged, to prevent the plaintiffs putting the letter before the Court.

De Villiers, C.J.: The declaration sets out the terms of the contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant, that is, the terms as understood by the plaintiffs. Then the plea says: "As to paragraph 2, the defendant denies that it was agreed by the parties that the Welsh coal contracted for must be Merthyr coal. He says, further, that the terms of the agreement referred to in the said paragraph are contained in a certain letter addressed by the plaintiff on the 7th August, 1901, to the Agent-General of the Cape of Good Hope, and, for the greater certainty as to the terms of the agreement, he craves leave to refer to the said letter when produced at the trial in this court." It is impossible to say that this letter is not relied upon as the defence to the action, because if that letter were produced, and the terms of it were different from the terms stated in the declaration, the defendant would be entitled to have the benefit of the terms of that letter. It is therefore, right, if the plaintiffs insist upon it, that the defendant should set out generally the effect of the letter, or set out the letter in terms. Looking further into the plea, I find in the sixth paragraph the following is stated: "It was the duty of the plaintiffs, in terms of and according to the true and proper interpretation of the agreement referred to in paragraph 2, to despatch the coal to Cape Town." It is clear, then, that the defendant here relies upon the interpretation of a certain agreement, and that agreement can only be the document which is referred to. Now, how is the Court to decide upon the true and proper interpretation of that document without having that document before it? It seems to me clear that the defence is really based upon that document, and that there is a suggestion that the document, if produced, would show a different agreement from that which is disclosed in the declaration. It is, therefore, fair towards the plaintiff, in order to enable him either to except or to reply to the plea, that the true nature of the agreement contained in the letter should be set out, and, as at present advised, it would seem to me that the pleadings are embarrassing to the plaintiff, inasmuch as this letter is not set out, nor is its purport stated. The exception, will, therefore, be allowed, and the defendant be allowed to amend his plea by inserting a copy of the letter in his plea. As to the costs of this exception, I must say that, with the information at present before the Court, it is impossible to say whether the embarrassment was such as to justify allowing the costs of this argument. The exception will be allowed, the defendant will be allowed to amend his plea by inserting a copy of the letter of the 7th August, 1901, and the question of costs will be reserved.

REVIEW.

REX V. MEYER. { 1905.
Apr. 27th.

Buchanan, J., said that this case had had come before him as judge of the week, the defendant having been charged before a special Justice of the Peace at Herbertsdale, under the Master and Servants' Ordinance, "in that he wrongfully and unlawfully took his son away from Mr. P. du Preez, without giving him proper notice." The charge was laid under sub-section 2, section 7, of the Act 18, 1873. This section only applied to servants absenting themselves without lawful cause, and it did not allow a Magistrate to punish the father of a servant, who, being his son, had been allowed to return home from an indefinite hiring, for refusing to allow him to go out again. The conviction must be quashed.

BANK OF AFRICA V. { 1905.
KOENIG AND CO. { Apr. 27th.

Provisional sentence — Bill of exchange—Liquid document —Set off.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., moved for provisional sentence on eleven bills of exchange amounting to £12,921 9s., drawn by Knowles and Co., to the order of plaintiffs, upon and accepted by the defendants.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for the defendants), said that the defence was that the bills had been discharged by an arrangement come to between the Bank and Koenig.

These bills cannot now be sued upon. They have never been presented, and the summons is not correct in stating that they were all due on January 14th. That was not so. The question is one purely of fact. The application for a loan of £22,000 is very important. The bank cannot now sue on these bills. By letter dated March 3rd, the manager undertook to hold over its claims against Koenig in consideration of a commission paid by him. The commission amounted to over £200. The only question in dispute is as to whether the bills were presented to us or not. We say that they were not presented till after the issue of summons. The bills are all more than a year old, and practically are only presented now. We have paid interest to the amount of £4,000 instead of the legal interest amounting to about £1,500. If the bank can come down upon us at any moment, to what do our facilities amount? Where is our consideration for our money? The bank says it set off our £4,000 as against our bond. Possibly it may be able to sue on the bond, but I contend it cannot sue on the bills. The idea that money paid in should go against the overdraft is quite inconsistent with their own letters. The only facilities the bank gave us was a pactum de non petendo.

Sir H. Juta (for plaintiff): I do not understand the defence. Either these bills have been met or not—or they may have been novated. Last June the defendants set up the case that they had been met: they had not, and we still hold the bills and that is a very important point in a question of provisional sentence. The facilities given by the bank were, that they would retire the bills in the hands of the National Bank (£2,000) and others: in all about £6,000, and the bank also agreed not to press for payment. Our letter of March 3rd has no reference to a loan, we merely asked for 1 per cent. on defendant's liabilities for retiring these bills. His £4,000 went to pay this overdraft. I do not see that there was any novation. The consideration received by the defendant was the retiring of bills in the hands of other banks.

Mr. Searle was not heard in reply.

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiff in this case sues upon a certain number of bills made by the defendants, and prima facie they are liquid documents. But the papers which have been put in show that this is not a case which can be settled upon provisional proceeding. If the bank have any case, they must go into the principal case, either upon this summons or upon the general liability of the defendant to them. Provisional sentence will be refused, with costs. It appears to me that this is not a matter which ought to have been brought in provisional form.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved, on notice, calling on the respondent, the husband, to show cause why an order should not be granted for his attachment for contempt of Court, in not paying alimony which he was ordered to pay by the Circuit Court at Worcester.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., appeared for the respondent.

Mr. De Villiers said the matter arose out of a case heard at the Worcester Circuit Court in October last, when an order for judicial separation was made. Defendant stated that his wife and himself had resumed marital relations since the order was made. The wife admitted this, but said she had only been persuaded to accompany her husband to Cape Town on three occasions, on his promise that he would secure a house there. She was only willing to return to him on the condition that they left Worcester. He had not kept that promise.

Buchanan, J., said he was sorry for the wife, who had been too easily persuaded, but she had put herself out of Court by her act in returning after the order for judicial separation was granted.

Mr. De Villiers argued that there was no reconciliation; that there was only an attempt at reconciliation, which had fallen through, because the defendant failed to keep his promise.

Buchanan, J., said that the decree had fallen to the ground, owing to the action of the wife, and no order would be made.

The application was accordingly refused, with costs.

VAN REENEN V. ESTATE (1905.
VINK. (Apr. 27th.

Will—Fidei commissum—Grandchildren — Renunciation of fiduciary interest.

V. instituted his seven children and their children, by representation, as his heirs, but burdened the inheritance with a life interest in favour of his wife. V. having died, his widow now wished to renounce her life interest in favour of the fidei commissarii.

Held, that as it had been ascertained that no further grandchildren of V. could be born, the portions of the heirs should at once be paid out, notwithstanding the fact that V.'s widow had power to impose further fidei commissa. It was, however, ordered that the shares of the minor heirs were to be paid to the executor for their behoof.

This was an application for an order on a certain executor to pay to the three applicants their inheritance, under the will of the late Peter Joseph Vink, of Koeberg. The will bequeathed Mrs. Vink the usufruct, with a fidei commissum in favour of her children. The will made provision for the passing of the share of any children dying to their lawful descendants and gave Mrs. Vink power to encumber the share of any child with a fidei commissum. Mrs. Vink now wished to renounce her usufruct, in order that the applicants might forthwith be paid their inheritance, and the question for the Court to decide was whether this could be done under the terms of the will.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for the applicants, and Mr. Van Zyl for the executor.

After argument,

Buchanan, J.: In this case the late Mr. Vink instituted as his heirs his seven children, but he burdened the shares of the children with a fidei commissum. It was admitted on both sides that the effect of the will was to give a vested interest to the grandchildren, subject only to the life interest of the mother, and that construction is in accordance with the construction so frequently placed on such wills by this Court. The mother now is willing to renounce her life interest in the three-sevenths which is vested in the applicants, and to allow the amount to be paid out to them at once. The mother, it is true, under the will, had power to burden the shares of the applicants with a further fidei commissum, but she does not wish to exercise this power, and there is no compulsion on her to do so. The shares of the minors will remain with the executor, and will not be affected by the order that the Court will make in any way. It is clear that there can be no more grandchildren entitled to a share, and consequently the amount of the grandchildren's share can now be ascertained. That amount being vested in them, and being only subject to the life interest of the mother, and as she now waives her life interest, there is no objection to the Court ordering that the three-sevenths vested in the applicants be paid over to them. As to the costs, I think it is only fair that the costs should come out of the three-sevenths.

HEYNES, MATHEW AND CO. V. COOPER.

Sale and purchase—Goodwill—
Sub-tenancy.

This was an application upon notice of motion by Heynes, Mathew and Co., wholesale chemists, Cape Town, calling upon the respondent, John William Cooper, to show cause why he should not be ordered to give up possession to the applicants' representative of certain premises in Main-street, Malmesbury, occupied by the Malmesbury Dispensary.

The affidavit of A. H. Mathew, of the applicant firm, stated that they purchased the business in question in September, 1899, and continued the respondent in his position as manager. Subsequently, on the 27th February, 1903, the parties entered into an agreement, whereby Cooper purchased the business. The respondent, however, had fallen into arrear with the instalments of the purchase price, due to the applicants, and the applicants had now given him notice that, under clause 7 of the agreement, they now resumed possession of the business. The respondent had broken nearly every clause of the agreement. The affidavit of Mr. Cope, a representative of the applicant firm, stated that he had demanded possession of the premises from the respondent, but that the latter said that he could only give up the fixtures, and stock, and that he had no right to hand over the premises to the applicants without an order of Court.

The answering affidavit of the respondent stated that he was willing to give up the stock and fixtures, but he could not sub-let the premises, without the permission of the owners,

Messrs. Rootin, Pemberthy and Co., and he (the respondent) was merely a monthly tenant. He denied that he had broken almost every clause of the agreement. An affidavit by Mr. William Pemberthy stated that his firm only acknowledged the said Cooper as their tenant, and no one else.

A replying affidavit by Mr. A. H. Matthew was also put in.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, J.: In the agreement under which the respondent Cooper took over the business for Messrs. Heynes, Mathew and Co. there were certain conditions by which, if Cooper did not fulfil them, he agreed that Heynes, Mathew, and Co. should have the power to take possession of the business without further recourse to legal proceedings. Heynes Mathew and Co. wish to take possession of the business; Cooper will not allow them to do so, saying that the premises belong to persons who are not parties to this suit, that he is only a monthly tenant, and that he has no right to sub-let. I cannot in any way in this order bind the proprietors of the property, but as between Cooper and Heynes, Mathew and Co. he has absolutely no right. Cooper agreed to take over the business hitherto occupied and carried on by Heynes, Mathew and Co. as the Malmesbury Dispensary, and this business, occupied and carried on by Heynes, Mathew and Co., is the business which Cooper undertook by his agreement to give up if he broke the conditions of this agreement. He is bound, therefore, by his own contract, to give up possession at once. The owners of the property may have a remedy, both against Cooper and Heynes, Mathew and Co., if there is any remedy, but apparently they are not concerned in this matter between Cooper and Heynes, Mathew and Co. He must forthwith deliver up the business known as the Malmesbury Dispensary and pay the costs of this application. I think, under all the circumstances, he ought to deliver up the business within forty-eight hours.

Ex parte ARTER BROS.

Mr. Roux moved for a rule nisi calling upon the respondent to deliver up the keys, books, etc., of a certain aerated water business at Prieska to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute, with costs.

Ex parte ESTATE DE KLERCK.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved, on behalf of petitioner, the surviving spouse of the late Joseph de Klerk, of Cradock, for leave to prove by affidavit the contents of a certain will which had been destroyed by Frank Isaacs, the adopted son of the petitioner, against whom criminal proceedings had been instituted. Isaacs had pleaded guilty to the charge brought against him, but the Solicitor-General had declined to prosecute, because he did not think that the act of the youth was such as was contemplated by the section. Certain affidavits were also read in support of the application, including one by the youth Isaacs, who admitted that, in a fit of disappointment, on seeing the contents of the will, he destroyed the document. Petitioner and her late husband were married in community, and he made a joint will. Counsel asked the Court to grant a rule nisi.

Rule granted calling upon all persons interested in the estate of Joseph de Klerk to show cause why the dispositions mentioned in the petition should not be admitted by the Master as the joint will of Joseph de Klerk and his wife, rule to be published in the "Government Gazette" and the "Midland News," to be served on the brother and sister of the late Joseph de Klerk, and to be returnable on the 15th June.

Postea (June 15th). Rule absolute.

Ex parte ESTATE BRUCE.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved, on behalf of the executors testamentary in the estate Bruce, Mr. E. R. Syfret and Mrs. Clegghorn, for leave to raise a mortgage of £5,000 upon certain property, 94 and 96, Adderley-street, Cape Town. The property was valued at £17,000, and was at present leased to the second-named petitioner's husband. The property was at present unmortgaged. The heirs under the will all consented to the application, which was made on behalf of the second-named petitioner's husband. Counsel also read an affidavit by Mr. J. Bruce Clegghorn, attorney.

Order granted as prayed.

Buchanan, J., remarked that he was sorry that the heirs were not minors.

REINECKE V. OOSTHUIZEN.

Mr. Van Zyl appeared for the applicant; Mr. Searle, K.C., for the respondent.

An order was granted in terms of a consent paper.

Ex parte WARD AND FELIX.

Mr. Sutton moved for leave to the petitioners to sue in forma pauperis.

Granted, Mr. Sutton being appointed counsel. Mr. S. S. Hutton attorney.

Ex parte GROENEWALD AND WIFE

Dr. Greer moved for an order in terms of a certain notarial deed of separation. Buchanan, J., said the Court could not grant a judicial separation on motion. An action must be brought. No order was made.

Ex parte THE EXECUTRIX OF THE ESTATE OF SLIER.

Mr. Gutsche applied for leave to mortgage certain property to enable the widow to support the minor children. The Master's report was favourable.

An order was granted in terms of the Master's report.

Ex parte DU PLESSIS.

Mr. Gardiner moved for judgment for certain moneys from the estate of the late Opperman, to which the children of petitioner were entitled under the will. Petitioner asked for the payment of the shares of the major children, who consented to the order.

The Court ordered that the share of the inheritance given to the major heirs, who had consented to the application, be authorised to be paid over to the petitioner.

Ex parte VENTER.

Mr. Burton moved for an order authorising the Master to pay out certain money. The Master's report was favourable.

Order granted.

Ex parte THE CAPE TIMES, LTD.

Mr. McGregor moved for an order to have a certain election account re-opened. The petition set forth that on the 4th November, 1903, Mr. W. H. C. Klein, acting on behalf of the election agent of Mr. W. P. Schreiner, a candidate for the Parliamentary election at Caledon, gave an order for the insertion of a certain advertisement in the "Owl" newspaper. The account was rendered before the expiration of the 35 days prescribed by the Act, but it appeared to have gone astray, and could not now be paid without order of Court.

It was ordered that leave be given to pay the amount.

Ex parte THE COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for authority to the High Sheriff to pay out certain money in satisfaction of claims by the Government against a certain land syndicate.

Buchanan, J., said there had been no judgment.

Mr. Jones suggested that a rule nisi should be issued calling on respondents to show cause why the money should not be paid.

An order was granted, giving leave to sue by edictal citation, and to attach the money, the citation being made returnable on the 1st August.

Ex parte MARAIS.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for leave to mortgage certain property donated to the minor children of the petitioner for the sum of £150, for the purpose of paying for improvements made to the property. The Master recommended that authority be given subject to a sum of £20 being paid annually out of the rents towards restoring the capital.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

Ex parte LEIBBRANDT.

Mr. Rowson moved for an order to have Mary Ann Attwell, an inmate of the Valkenberg Asylum, declared of unsound mind, and to appoint a curator ad litem.

His Lordship asked counsel where the respondent's husband, Holme, was?

Mr. Rowson said that the marriage proved to be bigamous. They knew nothing as to Holme's whereabouts.

Rule granted, calling upon the respondent to show cause why an order should not be granted as prayed, Mr. Advocate J. E. R. de Villiers to be appointed as curator ad litem, and rule to be returnable on the 7th May.

Postea (May 11th).

Mr. Rowson asked leave to mention the case of Mary Ann Attwell, with a view to the appointment of a curator.

Dr. Black, medical officer at Valkenberg Asylum, said that Mary Ann Attwell was suffering from suicidal mania, and was not likely to recover. She was quite unable to manage her own affairs.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers, curator ad litem, said he had seen Miss Attwell, and was satisfied that she required to be kept under restraint.

Mr. Rowson moved that Mr. Liebrandt, an uncle of Miss Attwell, be appointed curator bonis.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved that Mr. Roos, of the Board of Executors, be appointed.

Order granted, declaring Miss Attwell of unsound mind, and appointing Mr. Roos as curator.

Ex parte TROLLIP.

Mr. Upington moved for cession of certain articles of clerkship to Mr. J. B.

Cleghorn, who would act for petitioner during his absence from the Colony on account of ill-health.

Order granted as prayed.

Scottish marriage—Married Women's Property Act—Community of property.

Husband and wife domiciled and married in Scotland prior to the passing of the Married Women's Property Act of 1882, are married in community as to movable property but not as to immovable.

Mr. Sutton moved to have a certain transfer deed of ground situate at East London amended by the description of the parties as having been married in community of property. The parties were married in Scotland, where they were domiciled, in 1877, before the passing of the Married Women's Property Act. They had since become domiciled in this colony.

Buchanan, J., said that it seemed to him that the parties were married in community so far as movable property was concerned, but without community so far as immovable property was concerned. On the authorities quoted, he was not prepared to say that this property was held in community. There would be no order.

TRIAL CAUSES.

DE KOCK V. COLONIAL { 1905.
GOVERNMENT. } Apr. 28th.
May 1st.

Fire—Railway—Negligence.

Lategan v. Colonial Government (14 C.T.R., 935) followed.

This was an action brought by Marthinus de Kock, farmer, Malmesbury, against the Colonial Government, to recover damages in the sum of £100 for injury done to his property by reason of the negligence of the Railway Department, or its servants.

From the pleadings it appeared that the plaintiff claimed £100 by way of damages caused through his grazing lands having been burned out, the grass having caught fire from coals thrown or deposited from a railway engine proceeding past his farm on its way from Cape Town to Malmesbury. On the 7th January last what was locally known as the 11 down train, was passing through plaintiff's farm to Malmesbury, when live coal was thrown out from the engine, and the plaintiff's summer grazing was destroyed. Defendants repudiated liability, and said specially that the fire and damage complained of were not in any way caused by or attributable to the acts or negligence of the driver of the engine or any other servants of the defendant.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Alexander) was for plaintiff; Mr. Howel Jones (with him Mr. Morgan Evans) was for the Government.

The plaintiff, Marthinus de Kock, said that he was a farmer at the farm Amoskuil, division of Malmesbury. The line passed through his ground. Witness had from time to time suffered from fires when railway trains had been passing. On the 7th January the train for Malmesbury passed through his farm about 10.45 a.m. Witness's farm was about three miles from Malmesbury. At the time the train passed he was on his horse, and was getting ready to go to one of his camps. He at once noticed a fire, which grew rapidly; there was a strong north wind blowing in the direction of witness's homestead. Witness immediately went to the railway line to see how the fire had been caused. He found that coal had been thrown down from the engine. One piece was by the wire fence, and about a yard from this was another piece of coal lying inside the fence. The coal was still burning, so that he was unable to handle it. He afterwards picked up the two pieces of coal (produced), and went to his homestead immediately.

By the Court: There was no other way in which the fire could have been caused except by the hot coals from the engine. There was no one by at the time he went to the spot. Witness was about 300 yards from the line, when the fire broke out, and he at once rode to the spot.

Witness (continuing) said that the fire spread in the summer grazing, and went as far as his kraal. He called up his son and some coloured helpers. It was impossible to save the summer grazing. He had great difficulty in keeping the fire from spreading to his homestead. The line was not clean; grass was growing in it. The same afternoon the train, on its return journey to town, caused another fire on his farm; the veld was burning as the train was passing. That fire was soon extinguished by his servants. He valued the hire for one summer of the grazing destroyed at £100, or even more. That was what he would have been prepared to give for such grazing.

By the Court: He had kept all his stock on his farm. He had not hired any other veld in consequence of the fire, nor had he had to buy fodder. He considered that his cattle were in poorer condition by reason of the grazing having been burnt. He had had to give the cattle more hay than would otherwise have been necessary. He calculated that about £25 worth of hay more had been consumed than would have been necessary if the grazing had not been destroyed.

Witness (in further cross-examination) said that he had received a circular from the Railway Department in reference to the measures to be taken to minimize the risk of fires along the line. He sent a reply; he did not know whether he posted it, but he was not prepared to agree to the proposals of the Department.

Mr. Jones said that the department had not had a reply from the plaintiff.

Witness (continuing) said that his land, extending 100 ft. from the fence, was very valuable. He received a further letter from the Department, stating that they took it that, if they had no reply from the plaintiff, he did not consent to the making of a fire-path 100 ft. outside the railway boundary. On the day of the fire he noticed grass growing on the railway line itself.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: He would not swear that he wrote a reply to the communications that he received from the Government. He objected to giving the Government 100 ft. of land on each side of the fence. As to the proposal of the Government to cut a 10 ft. fire-path, he did not think they would have kept such a path clean. He could not afford to give the Government 10 ft. of the ground for nothing. On the day in question he saw grass growing about a foot high on the line between the two fences. The line was not kept clean. The Department's servants were on the line almost every day.

Mr. Jones (to witness): How are you the poorer on account of this fire?

Witness: I can't say I am the poorer, but I have the damage; I have the loss.

Further cross-examined: He had about 600 or 700 morgen of good grazing ground. Much more than 25 morgen was burnt out by the fire. He had suffered damage by the previous fires, but the damage in the present case was so serious that he was obliged to bring an action. He had had to keep two men specially on his farm during certain months to look after any fires that might break out.

Re-examined: He did not consider that an 100 ft. path would be necessary if the line were kept clean.

Joseph de Kock (son of the plaintiff) spoke to the springing up of the fire immediately after the train had passed, and the extremely rapid extension of the flames. He corroborated his father's evidence on various points, and said that he valued the grazing destroyed by the fire at about £100.

By the Court: About half a camp was burnt out by the fire.

Cross-examined: He had seen burnt paper where the fire occurred.

Marthinus de Kock, jun., another son, also gave evidence.

Mr. Burg, surveyor, proved the plan put in, showing the area damaged by the fire. About 40 morgen of ground was damaged.

Cross-examined: Witness surveyed the land for the purposes of the case on April 13.

Wilhelm Hubach, baker, Malmesbury, said that on Saturday, January 7, while travelling on the main road he saw a fire on the plaintiff's farm shortly after 11 o'clock. He stopped, and went to the spot. He did not know whether the fire had started from the inside or outside the fence. The fire, he was sure, started from the railway side. There was a strong northerly wind blowing towards the homestead. During the following week he passed along the road, and saw a ganger employed by the C.G.R. engaged in burning the grass on the line opposite to the plaintiff's farm.

Cross-examined: The grass was not being burned opposite the exact place where the fire had taken place. He came to the conclusion that the fire had been caused by the railways. He took some interest in the matter, because so many of the farmers in the Malmesbury district had complained about damage done to their farms by fire.

John de Kock, farmer, Malmesbury, said he valued the grazing destroyed by the fire at £100 or more.

By the Court: He would be prepared to pay £100 for forty morgen of grazing land for one season, if he had a good deal of stock, say, about 100 head. Witness was not related to the plaintiff. Plaintiff had one of the best stock farms in the district of Malmesbury.

Cross-examined: The value of the farm was about £5,000.

Mr. Upington said that from the transfer deed it appeared that the farm contained 1,491 morgen, and the purchase price in 1893 was £2,500.

Abraham Carel Steyn, of the farm Diep River, district Malmesbury, said that he had also suffered from fires to his property caused by the railway, and so recently as the 21st March he was engaged for half a day in putting out a fire due to this cause. He considered that about £140 or £150 of damage was done to the plaintiff's veld.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Mr. Jones called

Martin Delaney, engine-driver, employed by the C.G.R., who said that he drove the 17 down train from Cape Town to Malmesbury on the 17th January. He knew nothing about a fire having occurred on the plaintiff's farm.

By the Court: He did not remember that the 17th January was a very windy day.

Witness (continuing his evidence) said that he saw fires along the line so often that he did not take any notice. It was not an impossibility that the pieces of coal (produced) would pass through the fire bars and drop underneath the engine on the line. There was a width of 20 feet on the line between the fences. It was possible that the coal produced might have been blown on to the adjoining land if there had been a very high wind.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He had had 16 years' experience as a driver, both on the main line, the Malmesbury branch, and the Sir Lowry Pass branch. He had shovelled coal into the veld formerly, but they did not do that now. He had seen places along the Malmesbury line where fires had occurred, but he was not aware that the fires had been caused by the railway. He had been called upon by the assistant locomotive superintendent to make an explanation in regard to a fire on a farm adjoining the plaintiff's. He was not aware that the man was compensated. He had remarked to the stoker, "Hello, we shall be blamed again." He, however, did not remember any other occasions when they had been blamed before.

Witness did not know that there had been demands made upon the Department by Jordaan, Loftus, and John Steyn, all of whom had been compensated. He did not know that there had been a demand by Mr. Van der Spuy for £75 damage to his veld.

Mr. Upington: Now, to be quite plain, if they had only kept the railway line clear of long grass, there would be none of these fires at all?

Witness: I cannot say.

Witness, replying to another question, said that the line was clean in some parts.

In further cross-examination witness exclaimed: How much ground do you want the railway to keep clear?

Mr. Upington: Ah, Mr. Jones will tell us that.

Witness, re-examined, said that he did not know anything about the other claims made for compensation.

Thomas Hollvan, locomotive inspector, said he had examined the engine in question, and found that it was fitted with all the latest appliances for preventing pieces of live coal getting through. The spark-arrester was of the latest type.

In cross-examination, witness said that so far as the prevention of fires was concerned, the C.G.R. engines were as good as any in the world.

Frederick Gie, fireman on the engine in question, said that they did not throw out coals on the journey. It was usual to empty the grates only at the end of the journey.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: His idea was that some of these fires were caused by the farmers, and that they tried to get money out of the Government.

William Edward Wood, ganger, C.G.R., said that on the Monday after the fire he found five burnt matches near the gate-post on plaintiff's farm. He told the plaintiff about what he had found.

Cross-examined: Witness and his under-ganger, Lindequist, would be held responsible for the fire if it were caused by the railway. He denied that he was now merely trying to "save his own skin." Witness produced the matches.

Mr. Upington: You see it is rather a pity, because there are six matches in the paper.

Witness: I can't help that; it may be five or six.

Thos. Hollvan, locomotive superintendent (recalled by Mr. Jones), stated that the engine came out of the shops on the 6th April, 1904. It was the practice with an engine of that class to shovel the ashes out at the end, of the journey, and not in the course of it.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He found out his mistake that morning as to the time when the engine went out of the shop. The first bars were not burnt. Since he gave evidence he thought that the engine was out longer than he had stated on Friday.

Christian Rindquist, a ganger, stated that a week before the fire he burnt all the dry grass on the line. The Monday after the fire witness went with the ganger Wood, who found some matches outside the fence.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He always burnt the grass right up to the fence. Sometimes he was left to do the work by himself.

John Griffiths, permanent way inspector, stated that the fire was reported to him on the Wednesday following. The next day he visited the scene of the fire, and came to the conclusion that the fire started at the hanging post of the gate. It could not have started inside the gate. The Thursday previous he inspected the line, and noticed no combustible matter by the permanent way.

Wm. George Hopkins, claims inspector, who visited the scene, said that Joseph de Koch told him that when he first saw the fire it was 160 yards north of the gate-post, and 70 ft. inside.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: During this summer he had examined fire claims for damage by fire in that neighbourhood.

Mr. Jones closed his case.

Mr. De Koch, plaintiff (recalled by His Lordship) said of the 40 morgen mentioned, about half was stubble land, which had been reaped.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Hopley, J.: In this case it is not necessary for me to consider my judgment, because the principles that should govern my judgment have been sufficiently laid down in the case of Lategan v. Colonial Government (14, C.T.R., 935), and all the Court has to do is to apply them to the circumstances of the present case. Mr. De Koch was on horseback on the morning of January 7th, and saw a fire break out just after the train has passed his farm. After telling his servants to put it out, he went at once down to the scene of the outbreak. No doubt it occurred to him that he was going to suffer considerable loss, and thought he had better go and see what caused it. He came to the conclusion that the fire started just inside the line by the fence, and he discovered just inside the railway fence a small piece of coal, and also one on his own side, still hot. I have to consider two points, and find them proved before I can give judgment for the plaintiff. The first is, was the engine the cause of the fire? and, if so, was it through the negligence of the Colonial Government, or through its servants? I believe there was no fire before the train passed, and also believe that shortly after the train passed there was a fire. There is no evidence that there was anyone on the veld who could have caused it. Then, as a matter of common-sense, I think there is no other explanation that could be adopted than that the fire was caused by the engine. It is possible, as stated by some of the witnesses, that it might happen that, owing to the slides being left open, live sparks might get out, and that would constitute neglect. It was necessary for the Colonial Government to perform with the greatest vigilance all its duties. The view I take is that the fire was caused by the engine, and there must have been neglect, because there is the evidence of Hughes that combustible material was left inside the fence, and the Railway Department must be held strictly responsible in that matter. They should have seen that their hands kept their line as clean as possible. I think, therefore, they could not escape liability. The real question is that of damages. As to the plea of contributory negligence raised by Mr. Jones as against the plaintiff, because he would not allow a firepath, the Court cannot hold that his refusing, without compensation, to have fire-paths cut in his veld on each side of the line constituted contributory negligence. As to the amount of damages, farmers of experience have stated it was excellent land, and was being preserved for summer fodder. The fodder was of excellent quality. One of the witnesses said that the cattle were poorer and might suffer from sickness. I consider justice between the parties would be done by giving judgment for the plaintiff for £30, with costs, also allowing Mr. De Koch his expenses as a material witness.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.) and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

APPLICATION.

Ex parte MARAIS. { 1905.
May 1st.

Insolvency—Provisional trustee—Practice.

In the case of an application for appointment of a provisional trustee to an insolvent estate, the Court must be informed as to the proportion of creditors who support such application.

Mr. Burton moved, as a matter of urgency, for the appointment of petitioner, who is secretary of the African Mutual Trust Co., at Malmesbury, as provisional trustee in the estate of Edward Geo. Devenish Poggenpoel, which was provisionally sequestered on April 28.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the prayer of the petitioner would be granted in the present instance, but it should be understood that the practice must be followed of informing the Court what proportion of creditors was represented by the person wishing to be appointed trustee. That had not been done by the present applicant, but it must be noted that in all such applications in the future the information must be stated in the petition.

Maasdorp, J.: The only thing you can do is to apply to the Master to appoint a curator. The order must be discharged.

This was an application by the plaintiff in the suit of Abraham N. Ackerman, calling upon the R.M. of Cape Town and the defendant in the suit, Nicolaas Smuts, to show cause why certain proceedings in the Court of the R.M. should not be reviewed and set aside on the ground that they were grossly irregular and contrary to law.

De Villiers, C.J.: When the case came on for hearing in the Magistrate's Court the Magistrate decided to postpone the further hearing until the Supreme Court had decided the question of the claim in reconvention, which had not been brought in the Magistrate's Court. Now, there is an application to this Court to set aside those proceedings on the ground of gross irregularity, and the only question to be decided is, was there such gross irregularity on the part of the Magistrate as to justify this Court in interfering? To my mind, there was nothing approaching gross irregularity. It seems to me to have been a very prudent course on the part of the Magistrate to postpone the further hearing of the case until the Supreme Court had decided the matter. There was an important question of practice in the Supreme Court involved. As to what the position of the Court would have been in such a case, it is not necessary now to decide, but, at all events, there are authorities to the effect that a plaintiff is not entitled to withdraw his claim in convention if the defendant has filed a claim in reconvention. If there had been a doubt upon the point, the Supreme Court alone could have decided that doubt. Therefore, in this case, it was a prudent course for the Magistrate to postpone the case. But there seems to me to have been another reason why the Magistrate might fairly postpone the case. There was a claim in reconvention, and we must take it that it was a bona fide claim; there was nothing to show that it was not a bona fide claim. A considerable time might elapse between the hearing of the claim in reconvention in the Supreme Court and the hearing of the case at the Magistrate's Court, and the Magistrate might have fairly said that inasmuch as the plaintiff was the cause of the difficulty inasmuch as he first proceeded in the Supreme Court and then afterwards, when the plea had been filed, removed the venue to the Magistrate's Court, he (the Magistrate) first of all wished to see what became of the claim in reconvention in the Supreme Court. It was a course which, under all the circumstances, seems to me to have been perfectly justified. On the question of costs, I am bound to say that it would have been better if the Magistrate had reserved the question of costs; but it was no gross irregularity to award costs. The application for review must be dismissed with costs.

Maasdorp, J., concurred.

DU TOIT V. KRUGER. { 1905.
May 1st.
" 4th.

Private property of enemy—
Booty—Rebel—Divesting of property—Vindicatio—Compensation.

During the recent war, the plaintiff, a British subject residing within this Colony, joined the republican forces which had invaded the district in which his farm was situated, and accompanied them to the Transvaal. During his absence the British troops entered the district and seized his goods on his farm, including a harmonium, which were sold to the defendant at public auction by order of the Military authorities.

Held, in an action for the recovery of the harmonium or its value, that if the seizure of the harmonium was contrary to the usages of modern warfare, the plaintiff should apply to the Imperial Government for compensation, but that, as it had been taken by the Military authorities during the war, with the object of acquiring the ownership thereof from a person who had joined alien enemies, the plaintiff had been divested of his ownership and was not entitled to vindicate the property.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Vryburg, in an action brought by the respondent (Kruger) to recover £43, the price of a certain harmonium, or, in the alternative, for its restoration.

From the record, it appeared that the claim of the respondent was reduced in the Court below to £20, in order to bring it within jurisdiction. Between October, 1899, and May, 1900, the respondent, a Vryburg farmer, was serving with the Republican Forces, and in his absence the military authorities seized from his home the instrument in question, during guerilla warfare in the district of Vryburg. The harmonium was afterwards sold by public auction by the military authorities, and bought by the appellant, Du Toit, a Vryburg shop assistant. The respondent returned to the Vryburg district in February, 1905, and had been tried for high treason, and disfranchised. The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that the question to be decided was whether plaintiff had been legally divested of his property, and whether it had legally vested in defendant. On the authority of the case of Jansen v. Van der Walt, he the Resident Magistrate came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had not been legally divested of his property, and that he was therefore, entitled to recover it from the defendant. Judgment was given for the plaintiff.

Mr Searle, K.C., was for the appellant; Mr. Burton was for the respondent.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he could well understand that cattle might be of use to the enemy, but he did not see how an harmonium could be of use to the enemy, unless it were to incite them to courage.

Mr. Searle said that it might be placed at the head of the army, but, even then, he was afraid the music would be rather slow. Counsel said the International authorities were agreed that booty comprised all things a soldier picked up in the course of military operations, whether such articles were of use in hostilities or not.

[Maasdorp, J.: Has it not been decided that if a soldier carries off property for his own benefit, he is guilty of theft?]

I have not seen the case.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That was a case of a rebel taking a watch from a station-master.]

There it was held that that was not done in the course of any military operations at all. It depends a great deal whether there is a disciplined force under officers. Here, everything was done regularly by the military authorities.

[Maasdorp, J.: Supposing the military took the property of a peaceful subject, and then removed it to another place and sold it, do you say that would change the ownership?]

No; the Court would then say there was not sufficient to divest the original owner. But I put this case on the ground of booty, on which the international authorities are clear.

Mr. Burton submitted that the true definition of booty was property taken in the actual progress of hostilities, in the course of action. Unless property were taken on the field of battle, so to speak, seizure of any other kind could only divest the owner when accompanied by the proper legal forms, and ceremonies required by a Court of law.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Can the Court now interfere with the acts of the military during warfare in respect of property seized from the enemy?]

Mr. Burton: I say that under the rules of international law there are certain recognised ways in which seizure and sale can take place, and that only in such ways can there be a chance of a man being divested of his property. There has been no such recognised mode of acting here as to divest the man of his ownership.

Postea (May 4th).

De Villiers, C.J.: This case has been exceedingly well argued by counsel on both sides, and the Court is in a position to give judgment without further consideration. The facts of the case are briefly as follows: During the recent war the plaintiff, who was a British subject residing in the district of Vryburg, joined the Republican forces when they invaded that district and went with them into the Transvaal. During his absence, the British troops entered the district and seized his private property on his farm, including a harmonium. The goods were brought into the town of Vryburg and were sold there at public auction by order of the military authorities, martial law being in force at the time. The defendant bought the harmonium, and is still in possession of it. After peace had been proclaimed, the plaintiff returned, when he was tried for high treason and punished with disfranchisement. The plaintiff, finding that the defendant was in possession of the harmonium, brought an action for its restoration or payment of its value, and the Court below held that the plaintiff had never been divested of his ownership, and was entitled to vindicate his property. The modern authorities, to which this Court has been referred, on the rights of capture during war do not afford much assistance for the decision of the appeal. The rules which are laid down by some writers for exempting the private property of an enemy from capture have not been so universally accepted and acted upon as to justify this Court in treating them as binding principles of law. The general theory of war is that all private property of the enemy may be taken in war, but the modern usage is not to touch private property in land without making compensation, except in certain specified cases. These exceptions, according to Halleck (2 International Law, 3rd Ed., p. 68), may be stated under three general heads: 1st, confiscations or seizures by way of penalty for military offences; 2nd, forced contributions for the support of the invading armies, or as an indemnity for the expenses of maintaining order affording protection to the conquered inhabitants; and 3rd, property taken on the field of battle, or in storming a fortress or town. None of these exceptions applies in the present case, for it has not been suggested that the harmonium and other goods of the plaintiff were seized as a penalty for any military offence committed by him, or were required for the support of the British troops, or were captured on the field of battle or in storming a fortress. I do not, however, find any authority for holding that if modern usage is not followed by an army, this or any other Court would be entitled to disregard principles of law which had been well established before modern usage sought to mitigate some of the hardships of war. For the purpose of ascertaining those principles the Court has to fall back upon rules laid down by the ancient jurists of Rome, perpetuated in the jurisprudence of the Netherlands and accepted in times past as holding good in international law. Among the national modes of acquiring property, the Roman lawyers regarded "occupancy" as the most important. If a thing which had no owner—a res nullius—was taken possession of with the object of acquiring the property therein, the person who so took it became the owner. Among goods which were regarded as nobodys property were goods belonging to the enemy during time of war. Such goods were therefore capable of being acquired by capture, and it made no difference whether they were the private property of individuals or the public property of the State. The result was that the title to property lawfully taken in war was considered as divested from the owner and transferred to the captor as soon as he acquired firm possession, provided that he took and kept the booty with the object of appropriating it to his own use. A discussion arose between the writers on International law during and after the time of Grotius as to whether such booty belonged to the State whose troops captured it, or to the individual captor, but they were all agreed that the original owner was divested of his ownership. Now, it is agreed in the present case that whatever acts were done in the taking and selling of the plaintiff's property were done by directions of the military authorities during the subsistence of the war, and at a time when the plaintiff was one of the King's enemies. He was outside the Colony, and his goods were inside, but the facts remained that his goods were the goods of an enemy, and that they were taken by the British troops in the course of actual warfare. It seems strange to an ordinary civilian that it should have been considered necessary for the due prosecution of the war to seize the man's private effects, including a musical instrument like a harmonium, but is the Court now to constitute itself as a tribunal to decide whether the capture was justifiable or not? The military authorities took the goods as booty and sold it as such, and by their acts they have, in my opinion, transferred the ownership to the person who bought the goods. The case of Johnson v. Van der Walt (13 C.T.R. 931), which has been cited in support of the Magistrate's judgment, does not, when closely examined, support the plaintiff's case. Unfortunately the head note to the report contains a statement of the law which is not justified by the facts of the case or the remarks of the learned judges who decided it. The head note is to the effect that the private property of alien enemies or even of rebels is not booty, and, if this statement of the law was correct, the judgment of the Court below would have been fully justified. But, in fact, the horse there in question had not been captured as booty but had been taken to a camp for protection. It was subsequently sold by a military officer, but there is nothing to show that he acted on behalf of the military authorities. In his judgment, Maasdorp, J., remarked that in dealing with the acquisition of property the intention is everything, and he held that, as the lawful authority had not appropriated the horse, the ownership remained with the plaintiff, as original owner, notwithstanding his rebellion. This view is entirely consistent with the principle that in order to vest the ownership of a thing in the occupant, it is necessary that his taking possession of it should have been with the view of acquiring property in it for himself. In the present case there can be no doubt whatever that the military authorities took the harmonium with the object of acquiring the ownership and sold it with the object of vesting the ownership in the purchaser. All this was done during the war and in the course of military operations. The plaintiff at the time was fighting in the ranks of an alien enemy, and, however desirable it might be that more enlightened rules of warfare should be adopted, it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that, as the law actually stands, the capture and retention of the harmonium by the military forces divested the plaintiff of his ownership. If the rules of modern warfare have not been observed by the British authorities the plaintiff would have a fair claim for compensation against the Imperial Government, but the defendant has acquired a valid title to the harmonium. The appeal must therefore be allowed with costs in this Court, and judgment entered for the defendant with costs in the Court below.

REX V. T. AND J. LOUW. { 1905.

Indecent assault—Children.

Children under the age of 7 years cannot be convicted of indecent assault.

Hopley, J.: A case has come before me from the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Malmesbury, sitting at Hopefield. He had before him two children, named Toss Louw and Jan Louw, aged six years and five years respectively, charged with indecent assault. These children were found guilty, and sentenced to be apprenticed for long terms, up to the years 1915 and 1916 respectively. Of course, these children are not guilty of the crime, being under the age of seven years, and the Magistrate ought to have known that, and simply discharged them with a caution. Probably he might have ordered their mother to give them a good whipping. The conviction must be quashed in both cases.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

COATES V. SEARLE.

Pleading—Declaration and replication.—Variation.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for the applicant, and Dr. Rainsford was for the respondent. Sir H. Juta moved, upon notice of motion to the plaintiff, to show cause why the set down of the case for the 5th May should not be discharged, and the case removed from the list, with costs. The affidavit of the defendant set out that the replication of the plaintiff was served on his attorneys on the 7th April. It was necessary that the defendant should rejoin, in view of the fact that fresh matter was introduced into the replication. The pleadings, counsel contended, were prematurely closed.

Dr. Rainsford put in the affidavit of the plaintiff's attorneys, which set forth that no new matter was introduced into the replication. An offer had been made to remove the set down if the defendant was willing to accept short notice.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Hopley, J.: In this case the declaration sets forth that on the 20th January the defendant agreed to pay to one C. C. Coates, the plaintiff, the sum of £500 as commission on a certain sale, and they say on that date, 20th January, the said C. C. Coates succeeded in selling the property for £4,500. The defendants plead that it is true that this amount of £500 is due to C. C. Coates, and they say there was a certain agreement as to what amount was paid. £100 was to be paid on the payment of one instalment of £700, and another £100 on the payment of £800, and the balance when the purchaser passed the mortgage bond for £3,000. The plaintiff sets forth in his replication what seems to me to be a fresh contract. The replication says that £100 should be paid on the 20th January, and that thereupon if that were paid the rest would become due in February, and it says that the £100 was thereafter paid on that date. But it seems to me if that were the contract it ought to have been in the declaration, and been embodied in the replication. It contains fresh matter; something that the defendant, on seeing it would have to consider and look back at his evidence, and everything that had passed, to see whether or no he could meet that replication successfully, and whether he ought to reconsider his whole position, and perhaps accede to the plaintiff's claim. It appears to me that there is new matter, and I can only put myself in the position of the defendants in such a case, and say I think to this new matter: they should have claim a right to make a rejoinder. It seems to me that the plaintiff has been premature in setting down this matter without giving the defendants a chance, especially after the defendants said they were wanted to rejoin. That being the state of affairs, as far as I can judge, it seems to me that the plaintiffs are in the wrong, and that they set the matter down prematurely, and that this application should be granted. As they acted precipitately, the logical consequence is that they must pay the costs involved.

MURRAYSBURG MUNICIPALITY V. HOLLANDER. { 1905.
May 1st.

This was an appeal from a decision of the R.M. of Murraysburg in a case in which the applicant sued for a writ of ejectment against the respondent, who was the occupier of a hut in the Municipal location. In the Court below the plaintiffs contended that the conditions of the lease had not been complied with, the respondent not having applied for a renewal at the termination of the period of lease. The respondent stated that he had tried ineffectually to get another house, and had tendered six months' rent. The Magistrate ruled that the application should have been preceded by a summons for rent. He further stated that the respondent had been a tenant for a considerable period, and had conformed to the regulations.

Dr. Greer appeared for the appellant: respondent was not represented.

Dr. Greer (for the applicant). The respondent has not even attempted to comply with the regulations by applying for a new lease on or before December 31st.

[Buchanan, J.: He applied on December 26th.]

The evidence is very contradictory, but the respondent's own statement shows that he did not ask to see the Town Clerk.

[Maasdorp, J.: Did the Magistrate find that no application was made for a new lease?]

He did not find on that point. He seems to have held that the respondent was a tenant. The whole difficulty would seem to have arisen from certain new regulations as to water. These regulations, however, the respondent never even attempted to see. I submit that the respondent was no longer a tenant after December 31st. Even had he applied for a renewal of lease, the Municipality could, in their discretion, have refused to grant it.

Buchanan, J.: There may be something behind these proceedings that the Court is not acquainted with, but as it stands the record shows that the defendant was the lessee of a certain hut in the Murraysburg Location, which he had leased for six months. The six months expired, and he did not obtain a renewal of his lease. Summons was thereupon issued for an order of ejectment. The defendant offered to renew his lease, but the Council refused to renew except on certain conditions, to which defendant objected. The Magistrate seemed to think that the conditions upon which the Municipality offered to renew the lease were conditions which were ultra vires. That question, however, is not before the Court: all we have to decide is whether the defendant was entitled to remain in possession of the hut after his lease expired on the 31st December. It is not pleaded or alleged that there is anything in the Municipal regulations to compel the Municipality to renew the lease. They did not do so, and as defendant has not shown any right to remain the Municipality are entitled to judgment. The appeal must be allowed with costs; and judgment entered in the Court below for the plaintiff for an order of ejectment, with costs.

ARMENIA V. CLAREMONT (1905.
MUNICIPALITY. (May 1st.

Public washing—Nuisance.

The Municipal regulations of C. prohibited "all washing of clothes in any public streams within the limits of the Municipality," and further ordained that "all public washing of clothes shall be done in public wash-houses." A had washed certain clothes, the property of other people, on premises whereof she was a tenant, and had thereupon be convicted by the R.M. of Wynberg of having contravened the aforesaid regulation.

Held on appeal, that in this case there had been no "public washing of clothes," and that the appeal must be allowed.

Mr. Burton appeared for the appellant; the Claremont Municipality were not represented.

This was an appeal against a decision of the Resident Magistrate at Wynberg, under the regulations of the Claremont Municipality. The Municipality summoned the defendant for a contravention of section 1, chapter 13, of the Claremont Municipal Regulations in that she did public washing at a place other than the public wash-houses, erected for that purpose. Defendant was convicted, and fined 10s. Exception was taken to the summons on the grounds that the summons did not correctly set forth what was intended to be dealt with by the regulations, that it did not disclose any offence known to law, that there was no allegation that the defendant washed clothes in a public stream or water, and that the regulation, if it were intended to interfere with the rights of citizens as to the washing of clothes on their own premises, was ultra vires. The Magistrate, in his reasons, stated that the defendant was charged with public washing in a place other than at a public wash-house, and this charge, he held, had been clearly proved.

Mr. Burton (for appellant). The appeal is brought on the ground (1) that the summons does not set forth the plaintiff's claim; (2) that the defendant was not charged with any offence known to our law; (3) that the Council's regulation under which she was charged is ultra vires. The appellant washed the clothes of other people on her own property. The regulation forbids only public washing. The appellant (I contend) did not, by washing the clothes of other people on her private property contravene the regulations. "Public Washing" means washing in public streams, or on public ground; but here there was nothing of the kind. There was no nuisance, and the appellant was summoned for committing a nuisance, but the act which constituted the alleged nuisance is not contrary to any regulation. In the event of the appeal being upheld, I ask for costs against the Municipality.

Buchanan, J.: The appellant was charged before the Magistrate with having contravened section 1, chap. 13, of the Claremont Municipal Regulations, in that she wrongfully and unlawfully did public washing at a place other than the public washhouses erected for the purpose at Claremont. The charge falls under the Municipal Regulations, which lays down that from and after the promulgation of these regulations, all washing of clothes in any public streams within the limits of the Municipality is strictly prohibited, and that from that time all public washing of clothes shall be done in public wash-houses. The question here is: Has there been any public washing of clothes? The bye-law is framed to prevent the washing of clothes in public streams, and it is very difficult to say what under these circumstances is meant by "public washing" apart from washing in a public place or in a public river but there is no regulation preventing washing on private premises. It may be competent for the Municipality to make such a regulation—I do not say that they cannot—but there is at present no such regulation. All the regulation says is that there shall be no public washing of clothes. Now, the defendant in this case washed clothes on her own premises. There was no public washing in the sense that there was washing in a public river or in a public place, and I certainly think the regulation was not intended to apply to the act committed in this instance. The appeal must be allowed, and the conviction quashed, on the ground that the evidence does not disclose the offence alleged in the summons, and as the fine has gone into the Municipal exchequer, the Municipality will be ordered to pay the costs of the appeal.

Maasdorp, J., concurred.

[Appellant's Attorney: J. Buiriski.]

DAVIES V. SCHOLTZ.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Cape Town.

From the record in the Court below it appeared the appellant sued the respondent for £150, due on an acknowledgment of debt. The defendant excepted to the Court's jurisdiction, on the ground that the document sued upon was not a liquid document, and that the amount exceeded £20. Subject to the exception being dismissed, the defendant pleaded that there had been no presentation. The document stipulated for payment of the £150 on a certain date, and interest payable every three months, and it was further provided therein that in the event of the non-payment of interest, the capital sum should become due. The defendant counter-claimed £7 for goods supplied to plaintiff, and claimed that this should be set off against the interest. The Magistrate, after hearing evidence, found for the defendant, and gave judgment for absolution from the instance, with costs. In his reasons, he stated that the document was in the nature of a promissory note, which should have been presented, and that the counter-claim operated as a set-off. The defendant had tendered the interest, and he (the Magistrate) held that the action was premature.

Dr. Greer was for the appellant; Mr. Gardiner was for the respondent.

Dr. Greer: This was not an ordinary promissory note, but a mere acknowledgement of debt, and provision was made for the payment of the debt by instalments. No presentation could be made before June 1, 1906, unless the instalments were not duly paid. We admit that they were not so paid.

Buchanan, J.: The only question is whether we have here a penal clause or not. The whole question as to penal clauses was fully discussed in Rymer v. White.

As to the set-off, there is nothing to show that the plaintiff was aware that there was any set-off claimed. The conditions prescribed in the acknowledgement of debt were not complied with.

Mr. Gardiner (for the respondent) was not called upon.

Buchanan, J.: An action is brought upon a written document, which acknowledges a debt for £150 to be due, which amount is payable on the 1st January, 1905. That date has not yet arrived. This debt bears interest to be paid every three months, and there is a condition in the agreement that if the interest is not regularly paid every three months, then the whole debt may become due and payable. Three months' interest accrued, but at that time the defendant had sold certain goods to the plaintiff, and he counter-claimed against the plaintiff for more than the amount of the interest due to him; and before the summons was issued, he wrote to the plaintiff's attorneys, saying: "I have this claim against you; I give you the details thereof, and I shall be pleased to hear from you whether you accept this as against the interest due. If you think this will prejudice my claim against you, I will send you a cheque for the interest, and sue you for the amount due to me." No reply was sent, and summons was issued. As far as the evidence shows, there is a good set-off, and not only is this the case, but there is also a tender to pay the amount of the interest. I think, in these circumstances, the Magistrate's decision that the action is premature is a sound one; that the amount is not yet due. The question of non-presentation I do not think necessary to discuss in this case; the question will go rather on the point that the interest was tendered when demanded. The appeal will therefore be dismissed, with costs.

Maasdorp, J., concurred.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

KELLY AND CO. V. HERMAN. { 1905.
May 2nd.

Partnership—Dissolution—Liability of retiring partner.

This was an action to recover the balance of the purchase price of goods sold and delivered.

The declaration set out that between 18th March, 1898, and January, 1900, the firm of B. Schocher and Co., in which the defendant was a partner, bought goods from the plaintiff to the value of £1,575 10s. 3d £1,296 18s. 6d. had been paid on account, and there was still a balance of £305 11s. 9d., which the plaintiff was entitled to claim from the defendant. The plea set out that the partnership between defendant and Schocher was dissolved on the 12th August, 1899, the deed providing that Schocher should be responsible for all debts and liabilities of the said business, and that he was to indemnify the said defendant. The plaintiff was informed of the deed of dissolution.

Mr. Percy Jones was for the plaintiffs; Mr. Close for the defendant.

Mr. Jones said that last September a commission was appointed to take evidence in the Transvaal (14. C.T.R., 638). Evidence was then given by the defendant to show that the plaintiff had released him from the liability, on the partnership account. Certain cheques were produced to support this, and application was made for an adjournment in order that plaintiff who had given his evidence on commission, should be examined in regard to these cheques. The commission was made a general one, and the evidence had been duly taken.

Counsel read the evidence taken on commission. The plaintiff denied the statement of the defendant relative to the passing of the cheques; the cheques were, he said, given in respect of money Herman advanced him on behalf of his brother, B. Herman, pending the arrival of money which plaintiff had wired for to Pietersburg, where he resided. This was upon his (plaintiff's) arrival in Cape Town from Europe. Further evidence taken on behalf of both parties was also read.

The defendant was called and supplemented his previous evidence.

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the plaintiff sues the defendant for the sum of £305 11s. 9d., which it is alleged was due from the firm of Schocher and Co., in which defendant was a partner in the year 1899. The indebtedness of the defendant is based upon the fact that Schocher has now left the country and cannot be sued jointly with him. The defendant admits that the firm of Schocher and Co. was indebted to the plaintiffs in 1899, but he alleges that in August of that year he dissolved partnership with Schocher, and acquainted the plaintiffs with the dissolution of the partnership, and they consented to the dissolution of the partnership, and thereupon the defendant was released from liability. I shall not now remark upon the legal aspect of that plea. I take it for the purpose of the defence to mean that the plaintiffs thereupon discharged the defendant from liability. The defendant having admitted that the debt was at one time in existence, the burden of proving he was released falls upon him, and it is necessary to inquire what is the evidence setting forth the circumstances of this release. The plaintiffs admit that they knew this dissolution took place in 1899, and they were also aware that the defendant was about to leave the country, but they say they never consented to his being released from his share of the debt of the partnership, but they did not press him at the time because they expected to be satisfied by the firm of Schocher and Co. after the defendant had left the country. Now I must say that the defendant's evidence upon this point is undoubtedly of a very vague and unsatisfactory description. The firm was indebted to the plaintiffs in the sum of upwards of £300, and his object, as he alleged, was to obtain a release from his credit. One would have expected, under the circumstances, that he would acquaint the creditors with all the circumstances under which the dissolution took place, and give them a full statement of the affairs of the partnership, and then enter into a clear arrangement on the basis of the position in which affairs then were. Defendant, however, says that he came down to Pietersburg and there saw the plaintiffs, and asked them "would they release him, as he wanted to go to America, and his partner was going to take over everything," and that plaintiffs said "All right; no difference." That was supposed to embrace all the negotiations that took place to lead up to such an important contract as to release the defendant from a debt of £300. He says he informed the plaintiffs that his partner was going to take over all the liabilities and assets. This statement is unsatisfactory, because Schocher did not take all of the assets, for the reason that part of the assets in cash—£200—was taken away by the defendant, but not taken dishonestly. The plaintiff's themselves were not fully informed of the position of the partners as to what took place, and everything was left in the most vague condition. The defendant necessarily should have told the plaintiffs under what circumstances he was leaving, and he says that he told the plaintiffs that Schocher had taken over all the assets. Then if he did, it was a misapprehension, but I don't say he did so. The result of the evidence is that the whole matter was not discussed in such a manner as we would expect it to be if a release were intended to be obtained and granted. The defendant then left Cape Town and nothing more was heard until 1903, when application was made to the defendant for payment, after Schocher had left. In one part of defendant's letter in reply he says: "I dissolved partnership with Schocher in December, 1899, he taking over all assets and liabilities and notice was sent to the creditors. If this is the only evidence to be put before the Court by the defendant then there was no release. He seemed to think that upon notice being sent to the creditors of the dissolution of partnership and of the fact that his partner had taken over the liability, he was necessarily released from further liability, but in this he is mistaken. I take the plea to mean, as it was alleged to mean, that the discharge was actually granted but the proof is wanting. We have therefore now such vague and unsatisfactory statements of what took place at the time this release was said to be granted that I must come to the conclusion that the defendant has failed to discharge the burden laid upon him of proving this discharge. It was contended that the long delay threw doubt on the plaintiff's case, but it was quite clear that from two to two and a half years after defendant left, the country was in such a state that that would be an excuse for not taking proceedings, and afterwards, it appeared, the plaintiff himself was not in the country; but almost immediately on his return he took proceedings against the defendant. It has not been proved that the discharge was granted and the liability continues, but it appears a portion of the indebtedness arose after the plaintiff became aware of the dissolution of partnership and to that extent the indebtedness must be reduced by the amount of £26 7s. 9d. There will be judgment for £299 3s. 11d. with costs.

TRIAL CAUSES.

HEIDOCK V. HEIDOCK.

This was an action for a decree of divorce, brought by Elizabeth Heidock against her husband, on the ground of his adultery. Mr. Roux was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default.

The plaintiff, Elizabeth Heidock, stated that she was married in community of property to the defendant at Calvinia in February, 1898. She lived with her husband at Calvinia, and was fairly happy until December, 1903, when the defendant lost his temper and threw the things out of the house, and subsequently threw the plaintiff out after the furniture. Witness then went to live with her mother, and the defendant continued to live in witness's house, and in November, 1904, he took another woman into the house. The woman, with whom he was at present living, had been delivered of a child. Plaintiff claimed a decree of divorce and a division of the joint estate and costs. The defendant was possessed of two carts and two horses.

Further evidence having been given of the adultery,

Maasdorp, J., granted a decree of divorce, with costs, the plaintiff allowed her costs as a witness. His Lordship added, if at any time it was found there was any substantial property in the estate, the plaintiff would have leave to move the Court.

FOURIE V. FOURIE AND ANOTHER.

This was an action for decree of divorce brought by Ignatius Fourie, of Uniondale, against his wife, on the ground of her adultery. The parties were married in community of property in October, 1892, at Knysna. They lived happily together until his wife met the co-defendant Jordaan, in July last. Jordaan came as a traveller from the Orange River Colony, and stayed at witness's house for some time. In the middle of August witness, his wife, and Jordaan went down to Knysna to visit his wife's parents. Witness stayed about eight days, and his wife remained longer with her people, and Jordaan stayed over also. Three weeks later witness went to bring his wife home, and he noticed that she was very indifferent towards him, and said that she would not live with him any longer. On a second occasion his wife refused to return home. All the time Jordaan was living in the district. Subsequently his wife disappeared, and he was unable to find her. A number of letters in Jordaan's handwriting came into his possession. The letters were couched in most loving terms, and addressed to witness's wife, and referred to the time when the co-respondent and the defendant would live happily as man and wife.

Mr. Burton was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default.

Evidence was led to show that the defendants' lived as man and wife.

Decree of divorce granted, and the defendant declared to have forfeited the benefits of marriage. No order as to costs.

CILLIERS V. HEINTJES.

This was an action to recover £139 8s. for rent for a certain furnished house at Gordon's Bay, which had been let by the plaintiff to the defendant. The defendant took the house on a lease for one year from May, 1904, at a rental of £16 per month, payable quarterly. In June, 1904, the defendant represented that he was unable to pay the £48 due for rent. Thereupon plaintiff waived £9 for the first three months. On the 13th of February, 1905, the plaintiff, believing that the defendant was about to remove certain articles without paying his rent, obtained an interdict restricting him from doing so (15 C.T.R., 150), but before the order was issued the furniture was removed. The defendant, in his plea, set up counter claims for £31 16s. for meals, £27 being the purchase price of certain furniture bought by the defendant and £11 12s. paid on account, and claimed £71 in reconvention for damage by reason of the plaintiff's failure to make certain alterations.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the plaintiff and the defendant was in default.

The plaintiff, Johannes Cilliers, said he let the house at £16 per month to the defendant on a year's lease, which, however, was not reduced to writing. At the end of the first quarter witness agreed, on a request from the defendant, to reduce the rent for that quarter by £9, but he did not reduce it for the whole of the year. The defendant had paid £11 12s. on account, and witness was willing to take off the £31 16s. claimed by the defendant for meals supplied to the plaintiff. On February 13 witness obtained an interdict in the Supreme Court in respect of goods in the house. Witness made no agreement as to taking over any of the goods. He believed defendant had gone to Bulawayo.

Judgment was given for plaintiff for £107 12s., being £139 8s., less £31 16s. for board, with costs, including costs of motion. The claim in reconvention was dismissed, and plaintiff's expenses as a witness were allowed.

BURROUGHS AND WATTS V CAMPBELL.

Sale and purchase—(Guarantor—
Suspensory condition—"Instalment system."

This was an action brought by Messrs. Burroughs and Watts, who are billiard-table manufacturers and general merchants, against the defendant, who resides at Middelburg, to recover from him £196 11s., being the price of a billiard table and accessories supplied to one Adam, for the payment of which it was alleged the defendant was guarantor. The declaration set forth that in October, 1903, the plaintiff firm were in treaty with one Adam, of Middelburg, to supply him with a billiard table and accessories, and to fix the same at Middelburg. A letter was written by the defendant to the firm stating that as Mr. Adam had informed him he wished to purchase a billiard table on the instalment system, he (defendant) would testify that Adam was an honest, solvent, and desirable purchaser, and he (defendant) was willing to accept responsibility, in conjunction with Mr. Adam. The table, etc., were supplied, and some time afterwards the estate of Adam was sequestrated, and no part of the purchase money was recovered therefrom. The plaintiffs now claimed payment from the defendant. In his plea the defendant denied that the letter amounted to an undertaking or guarantee, and said that at the time he wrote it he did not intend, and plaintiffs knew he did not intend, to give any such undertaking or guarantee as alleged in the declaration. He merely intended to say that Adam was an honest, solvent, and desirable purchaser. Even if the letter was a guarantee, he pleaded that it was given subject to a condition precedent that the table should be supplied on the instalment system, by which term it was meant that the property remained in the lessor, and that in default of payment of an instalment the lessor should resume possession, the lessee forfeiting all instalments paid. Instead of that, the plaintiffs had sold the table outright, by reason of which the defendant was unable to get the table from the insolvent estate. Exception was taken to the paragraph of the plea which set forth that when he wrote the letter defendant did not intend to give any undertaking or guarantee.

Mr. Burton was for the plaintiffs; Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers for the defendant.

Mr. De Villiers said he did not intend to rely on the defence raised in that paragraph, and would agree to its being struck out.

Aubrey Joseph O'Mant, manager of the plaintiff company in Cape Town, produced correspondence between Adam and the company in relation to the purchasing of the billiard table. There were no verbal communications between them; everything was done by letter. The first letter was written by Adam, in which he expressed his desire to purchase a table, for which he offered to pay on ninety days' terms. The company replied offering to supply a table on these terms, providing Adam furnished them with a reference. Subsequently Adam wrote enclosing a letter from Campbell, and asking for an extension of a month. Enclosed in that letter was the defendant's guarantee upon which the case was based. The company thereupon agreed to extend the period. A promissory note was sent to Adam, with a request to get defendant's signature. Adam had gone insolvent, and there was no dividend from his estate to concurrent creditors. If an article were sold on the instalment system, it passed out of the hands of the vendor, and it was paid for by two or more instalments. In witness's business the instalment system and the hire purchase system were quite distinct. If an article were sold on the hire purchase system, the goods remained the property of the seller until payment was made. Witness put in one of the forms used in the case of a hire purchase arrangement, which was called an agreement of lease, and which stipulated for the payment of rent. In the case of a hire purchase contract, the firm did not require security, as the property remained vested in them.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: In his letter of guarantee, the defendant said: "I understand Adam wishes to be supplied with a billiard table on the instalment system." The firm did not claim the billiard table from the insolvent estate, inasmuch as they had sold it outright.

George Forrest, manager for R. Muller, music dealer, Cape Town, gave evidence as to the nature of hire purchase contracts. The hire purchase contract was in the form of a lease, which terminated on payment of the full value. Until full payment was made, the article remained the property of the seller. Security was not demanded. It was a practice of witness's firm to give credit when it was inconvenient for the purchaser to pay at once, and in such cases, security was required with few exceptions. Witness had no knowledge of an "instalment system."

Mr. Burton closed his case.

John Campbell, the defendant, gave evidence. He said he gave Adam the letter referred to in consequence of Adam saying Burroughes and Watts wanted a letter of reference. Adam did not show him any of the correspondence with the plaintiffs. Witness wrote the letter intending to be security if the goods were supplied on the instalment system. He regarded the instalment system as meaning that until all instalments were paid the articles did not become the property of the purchaser.

Morris Rosen, proprietor of Rosen's warehouse, said instead of advertising "hire system," the words "instalment" and "deferred" were used, but they all meant the same thing. In respect of anything sold out-and-out, witness did not consider that it had anything to do with the "instalment system."

Mr. De Villiers closed his case, and counsel were then heard in argument on the facts.

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiffs in this case sue for the recovery of £196 upon what is said to be a written guarantee for the purchase price of a billiard table supplied by the plaintiffs to one Adam. It appears that the billiard table was sold by the plaintiffs, who carried on business at Port Elizabeth, to Adam, who resided at Middelburg, on condition that the plaintiffs erected this billiard table at Middelburg, and included all these incidental expenses in the purchase price. The plaintiffs carried out their agreement, and supplied the table, and thereupon Adam became indebted in the sum of £196. But it appears now that the estate of Adam has been sequestrated as insolvent, and the plaintiffs consequently say that they are entitled to sue the defendant as surety for the amount upon the guarantee. In order to ascertain the rights of the parties in this case, it will be necessary very narrowly to construe the terms of this written guarantee. It is as follows: "I have known Mr. H. Adam for some time, and I understand he wishes to be supplied with a billiard table on the instalment system. I consider you are quite safe in doing this, if you can agree as to price, and I am willing to accept responsibility for this in conjunction with the said Mr. Adam." Now, I think it must be taken to be quite clear that this is not an unconditional guarantee by Campbell for the payment of the purchase price of the billiard table. There are certain conditions attached to this document, and they seem to be to the following effect: Campbell undertakes to accept a joint responsibility with Adam for the price of this table in case it is supplied to Adam by the plaintiffs on the instalment system. I consider that a material condition of the contract entered into by Campbell. He was aware that Adam contemplated buying a billiard table, and if his allegation contained in this letter is taken to be true, then he was aware that Adam contemplated purchasing the billiard table on the instalment system. He consequently tells the plaintiffs that they would be perfectly safe in supplying a billiard table to Adam on the instalment system, and that if they did so he was prepared to become responsible jointly with Adam for the payment of the price. It is necessary consequently for the Court to construe what was meant by the words "instalment system." The question arises whether these words have acquired such a technical meaning in the trade, and with persons carrying on business, as it was here carried on between the plaintiffs and Adam that they must be taken to bear that meaning in a contract of this kind between the parties to such an agreement. Oral evidence was called with the object, on the one side, of proving that the words have acquired a technical meaning which they must necessarily bear in a contract of this kind, and be binding upon the contracting parties, and, on the other side, to disprove the fact that this technical meaning has been established. Now, I think it has not been clearly established by the evidence adduced in this case—however it might be if further evidence could have been adduced—that the words have such a general acceptance that they must be taken now to have a technical meaning, known to all parties who carried on this class of business. It is alleged on the part of the defendant that the words "instalment system" necessarily meant "hire purchase system," and he has called a witness—Mr. Rosen—who says that in his business, when he speaks of the "instalment system," he intended to convey the meaning "hire purchase system." On the other hand, we have Mr. Forrest, who is also conversant with this class of business, and carries on a large business in the sale of pianos, and who says he himself has never regarded the term "instalment system" as necessarily identical with "hire purchase system." In fact, he himself never applies the words "instalment system," but "hire purchase system." If you take these two witnesses, the result of their evidence is that the words "instalment system" have not acquired in the trade generally the meaning of the words "hire purchase system." Therefore the Court has to construe the words as they appear in the contract, and if we take the ordinary and natural meaning of the words, they would simply seem to signify that the contract should be made upon a system by which payments are necessarily made by instalments. And the question arises whether "instalment system" must be taken to refer to a form of contract in systematic use for payments by instalments. Now, there is no evidence before the Court as to the existence of any special system called the "instalment system," which is applied to contracts of this kind, and, in my mind, it was not merely intended by the use of these words that the contract should be simply by payment of instalments. Under the circumstances, if the Court cannot construe the ordinary words of this contract as establishing a clear condition under this contract, the Court would have to hold that the contract is, in its terms, void, but I do not think we are quite driven to that position, because the question further arises whether these terms were not understood between the parties themselves, when they entered into the contract, to bear a special meaning, and if, as between the parties themselves, it could be proved that it bore a special meaning, then the contract would be upheld. When we look at the evidence for the purpose of ascertaining whether the parties are agreed as to the meaning of these words, we find, on the part of the defendant, a statement that he intended the words to mean the hire purchase system. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, state that they never contemplated that the words should bear that meaning. Well, if words were used upon which the Court cannot fix any technical meaning or ordinary meaning binding on the parties, and it is impossible to ascertain that the parties themselves agreed upon the meaning of the words, then the result will be that no mutual consent upon the contract between the parties has been established. Then there is another feature in the case which ought to be looked at, and that is, that it was clearly intended by Campbell that a contract should be entered into between plaintiffs and Adam upon the instalment system, and I take it that thereby was meant that a contract was to be entered into which was to set forth the mode in which payments were to be made by instalments from time to time, and that, when a contract in these terms was concluded between Adam and the plaintiffs, that contract was then to be submitted to the defendant, who was to signify his acceptance thereof. And I quite accept the view taken by the defendant that, after expressing his willingness in this document to accept responsibility, he all along expected that some form of contract would be submitted to him upon which he would, conjointly with Adam, signify his responsibility. We find that the mere contract of sale was not considered sufficient so far as Adam was concerned, because a promissory note was sent to him to sign. It was clearly contemplated that there should be some document submitted to Campbell for his signature before the contract was completed. Therefore, this is clear: that no contract was entered into upon any system which could in any form of words be described as the instalment system which was contemplated by Campbell, and his responsibility under this guarantee therefore does not arise. Judgment must be given for the defendant, with costs.

TRIAL CAUSE.

ROSENBERG V. CAPE TOWN	{	1905.
HEBREW CONGREGATION.		May 2nd.
		" 11th.
		June 6th.

Architect's plans — Fees — Estimate of cost.

This was an action brought by Max Rosenberg, architect, Cape Town, against the secretary of the Cape Town Hebrew Congregation to recover a sum of £50 alleged to be due as premium award for certain plans.

The declaration set out that in December, 1902, the congregation, through the defendant, offered to the plaintiff, among other architects, that if he would prepare and furnish the congregation with plans for the erection of a synagogue at the top of the Government Avenue, Cape Town, in accordance with certain particulars set out in annexure marked "A," and if the plan prepared by him should be adjudged by the adjudicator appointed by such congregation to be the best plan the congregation would pay to him £50 as a prize. The particulars stipulated, inter alia, were that the cost of the building should be £20,000. Plaintiff accepted the said offer, and prepared plans complying in every respect with the particulars set out in the annexure. In March, 1903, the adjudicator adjudged his plans to be the best furnished, and awarded him first prize. The defendant, however, wrongfully and unlawfully refused to pay the sum of £50, the amount of the prize, and plaintiff claimed that sum, with interest and costs.

Defendant, in his plea, did not admit that the plans submitted by the plaintiff complied with the particulars in all respects, he admitted having refused to pay the plaintiff the sum of £50 as a prize, and said that the plaintiff had failed to satisfy the adjudicator, or the said congregation, that the said building could be erected for a sum of £20,000 or thereabouts. He prayed that the claim might be dismissed. The defendant, for a claim in reconvention, said that the plaintiff promised a donation of £50 to the said congregation, which he had not yet paid, and that he also owed a sum of £14 17s. 6d., due from him as a member and seatholder of the congregation. The defendant claimed from the plaintiff payment of the sums of £50 and £14 17s. 6d. respectively, with interest and costs.

The plaintiff, in his replication, denied that it was a condition precedent to paying the said prize to produce a bona fide tender from a reliable builder to the effect that, should it be decided to erect the said building, he would be prepared to do the work for £20,000, and guarantee to abide by his tender. While denying that the defendant was entitled to insist upon such a condition, he obtained a bona fide tender from a builder to erect the building within the price stipulated. For a plea to the claim in reconvention, he said that as to the donation of £50, the congregation had disclosed no ground in law to support such a claim, and that the claim was irrelevant and embarrassing, and he prayed that the paragraph should be struck out. He also said that the synagogue now being erected was not being erected in accordance with the said particulars. He admitted that he owed £14 17s. 6d. to the defendant, and tendered that sum.

Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. Lewis) for plaintiff. Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington) for defendant.

Max Rosenberg (the plaintiff) said that with the plans he submitted a report, in which he estimated that the cost of buildings, based on figures actually obtained from the latest builders' tenders, with a deduction for tower, would be £20,012 10s. He did not take out quantities and specifications for the building; his fee for that work would be £500. He looked at the prices of tenders in his office, Mr. Gilham actually working out the estimate. Witness also saw Mr. F. B. Smith about the estimate. Witness subsequently received a letter from the congregation stating that they did not consider any of the designs to be suitable, and that none of the authors had any claim upon them. They had decided not to build on the designs submitted. They would, however, be prepared to pay out the premiums if the authors could obtain a bona fide tender of £20,000, or at any rate within ten per cent., from a reliable builder to the effect that he would be prepared to carry out the work for the sum of £22,000. Further correspondence took place in which the secretary of the congregation intimated that if the author of the design would obtain a bona fide tender from a responsible builder of £22,000 they would be prepared to award the premium. He would not have been able to obtain a tender from a builder if the building were not to be erected. He could not have got a guarantee tender on the rough specifications put in.

Mr. Gardiner read a lengthy report by the adjudicator (Mr. Howard, Public Works Department), from which it appeared that he did not consider that either of the two premiated designs could be carried out for £20,000 or any approach thereto. He suggested that the plaintiff should be asked to invite tenders by public competition. He had his doubts as to whether any of the designs which he had premiated, except that of "Peace" (awarded fourth position) could be carried out for the sum of £20,000, or anything near it. Mr. Howard added that the best course would be to invite fresh designs upon a properly-prepared schedule of instructions. Mr. Howard's estimate of the cost of carrying out the designs premiated was as follows: First, £27,000; second, £28,000; third, £26,000; fourth, £21,000.

Witness (continuing) said that he had been delayed in bringing his action through various causes, one being that he had understood that the congregation were considering the matter, and that he had hoped they would come to reason. Witness had a tender prepared by Mr. McGregor, dated the 6th January, 1904, tendering to erect the Synagogue for £19,500. This he placed in the hands of his attorneys. On the 18th February, 1902, he sent a letter tendering a donation of £50 towards the proposed new Synagogue. He was a member of the congregation at the time. He made the offer at the time the first competitions were put out, and in which he did not participate. His donation was to be for a Synagogue at the top of the Avenue. The Synagogue had not been built at Hope Mill, top of Government Avenue. The building had been put up in the middle of the Avenue. Witness did not approve of the scheme which had been carried out. He did not think that, financially, it was as sound as the first scheme. He considered that the building would have looked much better at Hope Mill, instead of on the present site. Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: His Attorney, he believed, did not send in the tender he obtained to the Cape Town Hebrew Congregation. His attorney told him that they were negotiating with the attorneys for the other side, Messrs Van Zyl and Buissinne.

By the Court: He had thought that, after the very unfair way in which he had been treated, the congregation would never claim the donation from him.

Charles Gilham, quantity surveyor, said that he was in the employ of the plaintiff when the latter sent in designs for the Synagogue. He prepared the rough estimate under the plaintiff's supervision, and got out the prices from tenders they had in the office at the time. He considered that the price set out of a little over £20,000 was a fair price.

Frederick B. Smith, builder, said that he was the contractor for the erection of the University Buildings. In January, 1903, he saw the designs and rough estimate for the Synagogue prepared by the plaintiff. Witness considered that the amount that he made up of under £20,000 was quite satisfactory.

Cross-examined: Witness did not recollect having gone through the plaintiff's approximate estimate of cost. The only way to test the prices was to get a tender, and witness was inclined to think that he gave a tender in writing.

Re-examined: From memory now he could not say what prices he actually took at the time.

Edward Simpkin, architect, who erected among other large buildings that of the Harbour Board, stated that he carried off the prize on the first occasion when he submitted £13,000.

Cross-examined: Witness was one of the architects Mr. Rosenberg objected to, although he got the prize.

Edward Austin Cook, architect, stated that in his opinion, in February or March, 1903, the price would have been generally satisfactory. It was impossible to give anything but a rough estimate on a competition. The fall in prices from February, 1903, to February, 1904, was only in the cheaper material.

Cross-examined: Witness had very little experience of the stone work in this country, and he would not care to give an opinion on it.

Charles Rutherford, builder, who erected the present Civil Service Club and the Royal Hotel, stated that he saw Mr. Rosenberg's estimate, and he considered the prices somewhat high. If the quantities were right the building could have been erected for £20,000 in February, 1903.

Cross-examined: Labour was just the same now as it was a couple of years ago. Materials, on the whole, were about 15 per cent. cheaper. The lower class of labour might have dropped a little in price.

James McGregor, builder, who tendered in January, 1904, for the building of the Synagogue for £19,500, stated that he went on the competitive plans, and the rough specification by Mr. Rosenberg. In February, 1905, he reckoned the job could have been done for £19,500.

Cross-examined: He was asked to give a tender for January, 1904. The price fell a little from February, 1903.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

Adolph Howard, who held an appointment under the Government since 1891, stated he was asked to act as assessor in this matter, and he considered the figures too low. Witness cubed the building, and arrived at a fair price. He considered that on the designs it would require £27,000 to erect the building. The building might be erected now for £22,000. There had been a very substantial drop since February, 1903, as he knew from the Government tenders that went through his hands. Witness dictated the letter setting out on a bona fide tender from a builder that the building would be erected for the price mentioned the prize would be awarded, and although the committee did not intend using any of the designs, if they reconsidered their decision the builder would be bound by his tender. He was not satisfied that any of the competitors were entitled to the prize if they did not have a guarantee that the building could be erected for the price stated. The prize was only to be awarded on a satisfactory tender that the building could be erected for £22,000.

Cross-examined: The premium offered was a very small one. He did not contemplate that a man sending in a design should take proper specifications. Witness thought that Rosenberg should have a tender from a builder. He never thought that Rosenberg was not to mention to the builder that the committee were not going to erect the building. If a builder was paid he would tender for a building, even if there was no chance of getting the job. He never contemplated what Rosenberg might have to pay the builders. Witness would have told the builder that there was no chance of getting the contract, and still there would be a chance that the builder might under such conditions give a guarantee tender. Witness thought that Rosenberg might have a builder with his eyes open that would lose over the contract with a view of getting his name up. He took the general price of 9d. per foot in cubing the building, and that was a comparatively low price.

Leopold Jacobi, defendant, as secretary of the committee, stated that all the letters he wrote were with the approval of the committee. The second prize was awarded on the production of a tender. The price quoted was £28,000, but the winner of the second prize, Mr. Ransom, produced a tender for £20,000.

[Hopley, J.: There was no guarantee with this tender.]

Witness: No, my lord; we took it in good faith.

Witness (continuing) said that he heard nothing about the matter from Rosenberg from September, 1903, to October, 1904. There were several reasons why the site in the Gardens was preferred.

Cross-examined: It was understood that if the first prize winner did not satisfy them with a tender, the money was to go to the second prize winner; but Mr. Ransom did not get the £50, neither did the third prize winner get any surplus, as it was thought that the plaintiff would still send in a tender. When they were in the thick of the fight with the plaintiff, they still thought that they would get the donation of £50 from Mr. Rosenberg towards the building of the Synagogue. He would not say that it was on the faith of the plaintiff's donation the building of the Synagogue was undertaken.

[Hopley, J.: I suppose you are still keeping a seat for him if he cares to come there?]

Witness: Yes, my lord.

Witness (continuing) said it was not necessary for the Building Fund Committee to send collectors for the money. Rosenberg was not the only person who had failed to pay up. At a meeting at which some sixty persons were present, ten objected to the change of the site and thirty-four voted for it.

Thomas Howard, of Messrs. Howard and Scott, stated that in March, 1903, labour and material were at the highest they ever were in Cape Town. In January, 1904, there was a substantial fall, in the price of material in particular. Witness had gone into Mr. Rosenberg's prices very carefully, and he was positive that the prices did not touch anything like what prevailed at the time. The matter could never really have been seriously taken into consideration. At that time witness was getting £19 for steel girders, whereas Mr. Rosenberg put them down at £13. Witness went into the whole thing, and doing it on five per cent. profit, as witness's firm had done for a place of worship in Kimberley, the lowest would be £27,000.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: You were the contractor for the City Hall; what was the contract originally?—£96,000.

What is it now?—It may run into £160,000.

It may run into £200,000?—Oh, no. Our tender for the City Hall was based on the prices six years ago.

Proceeding, under cross-examination, witness asserted that Mr. Rosenberg's specification was merely an apology. A certain quality of iron girders could have been put in for £14, but he would be sorry to put them in a place of that description. In the early stage, March, 1903, he would have calculated £31,000 for the job. The skilled man to-day knew that there were plenty of men waiting on his job, and his work was consequently 20 per cent. better.

Re-examined: The war had a great deal to do with the building of the City Hall. The contract had to be entirely altered.

Edmund James Sherwood, architect and quantity surveyor, stated that he had gone through Mr. Rosenberg's estimate, and taking the quantities given him, he totalled up £31,587. The largest increase over the plaintiff's prices was in the stone-work.

Cross-examined: The cubing up was a very good old system, if you knew how to do it. The prices he quoted he made up yesterday, but he was well acquainted with the quotations prevailing at the time. It was absurd to think of £22,000.

John Drake, builder and contractor, reckoned £31,500 for the building, without the tower, in March, 1903. The building could not now be built for £22,000. There was a fall of about 12 per cent. in prices from March, 1903, to February, 1904. Witness was building Carlton Buildings in March, 1903, for which he got 8s. 3d. for the stone walls.

Cross-examined: He put the iron at £18 10s., fixed.

By Hopley, J.: Painting and plastering were omitted from the estimates. The contingency of £1,000 could not have included those items, as contingency was only put down after every conceivable item had been covered.

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (June 6th).

Hopley, J., in giving judgment, held that the plaintiff had done all things necessary to entitle him to the award of £50. for his design, and judgment would be for that amount for the plaintiff in convention, and for £64 7s. 6d. for the plaintiffs in reconvention, the defendants in convention to pay the costs of the action.

CLOETE V. DIPRAEM.

{ 1905.
May 2nd.
.. 4th.

Mr. Upington moved as a matter of urgency for the arrest of the respondent, against whom numerous applications had been made and judgment obtained for £647 7s. 1d. See 15 C.T.R. 69, 92, 114 and 178. The plaintiff was a solicitor, practising at Lady Grey, Aliwal North, and when return of nulla bona was made, the plaintiff proceeded to execute against two plots of land on the Wynberg Flats. The respondent had also debts outstanding to the amount of £331, and the movable property realized £75. The defendant had handed the promissory notes on the above debts to his wife, who sent them to Lady Grey, and the bank manager refused to give them up, as they were the property of Mrs. Dipraem. There was information now (said counsel) that the defendant, who had absconded to the Orange River Colony, intended to return to Lady Grey on May 15, and so come within the jurisdiction of the Court. Counsel now applied for an order on the Sheriff to arrest him when he crossed the border. Counsel urged that the Court had power to deal with a man of this sort, who deliberately evaded justice.

[Hopley, J.: People have done that before by simply clearing over the border and looking at their creditors, and sometimes shaking hands with them.]

Mr. Upington said he felt there was a difficulty in regard to the application, but, at the same time, he would submit that the Court had power to prevent its orders from becoming mere nullity. Here was a distinct allegation upon oath that the defendant was coming over the border. He might come over once a week.

[Hopley, J.: No doubt it is very annoying to Mr. Cloete.]

Mr. Upington: The question, my lord, I submit, is whether under the general jurisdiction the Court has not the power to deal with such a state of affairs.

[Hopley, J.: If you can bring me any authority, I shall be only too willing to help you.]

Mr. Upington: I submit it is really contempt of the order of Court.

[Hopley, J.: Surely you can stop his coming across the border by a writ of civil imprisonment.]

Mr. Upington: But, my lord, we can't serve the notice upon him. He is not now within the jurisdiction. Counsel said that the respondent changed his residence from day to day.

The matter was ordered to stand over until to-morrow to give counsel time to find if possible any authority for the order.

Postea (May 4th).

Mr. Upington cited Hill and Paddon v. Borchardt (2, H.C., 253), Van der Linden (3-4-1), Voet (2-4-22).

Order granted attaching the defendant, pending an action for civil imprisonment to be instituted forthwith by the plaintiff, and a rule nisi granted interdicting the manager of the bank at Lady Grey from parting with the notes or the proceeds thereof, pending an application upon notice to the defendant, and Mrs. Dipraem to show cause why the said notes or the proceeds should not be taken in execution of the judgment of this Court, with leave to telegraph.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDOOP and a Special Jury.]

VAN ZYL V. WARNER. { 1905.
May 3rd.

Fire—Negligence—Damages.

This was an action to recover £1,000 damages for certain trees destroyed by fire last March. The plaintiff, Mr. C. H. van Zyl, of Sea Point, was the owner of a large property of about fifty acres in extent on the Kloof-road and Victoria-road, at Botany Bay. Towards the Kloof-road, on sloping ground, a plantation was planted about ten years ago, at a good deal of expense. The property was surveyed and laid out in lots, but the only portion of it that was sold was that to the defendant, Robert Charles Warner. On Saturday, May 4, while a stiff southeaster was blowing, there was a bush fire coming up from the Camp's Bay side, high on the mountain. About five o'clock in the afternoon the defendant, who was on the spot, being apprehensive of his own premises, set fire to the plaintiff's grass in the plantation, in spite of warnings not to do so. Within fifteen minutes about a thousand trees were destroyed, as well as the hedges. The defendant denied that he was warned not to do so, but admitted that he did set fire to the grass, and tendered £250 damages. The damage was much greater.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner), was for the plaintiff; Mr. Upington (with him Mr. P. S. T. Jones) was for the defendant.

W. Versfeld, Government surveyor, who prepared the plans, stated that the distance from the point the bush fire actually reached to the defendant's house was about 800 feet. The area of the fire was about two morgen.

Casper H. van Zyl (the plaintiff) stated that he bought the property in 1882. It was a very remote place and difficult to grow trees in, as the soil was sandy. Cottages were built on the ground in 1894. Previous to that time he had planted trees. During the last ten years he had gone to a deal of trouble to get the trees to grow. The first, second, and third years half the trees died, and he replanted them. About a couple of years ago part of the property was sold to Warner for £2,500. Before witness went to England he would not have sold the lots under £250 each, and now he would not take less than £500 each. He wanted to maintain the status of the district, and so restrictions were put in the conditions of sale. Witness was on the plantation after the fire, and found the trees destroyed in seven lots. The trees would never grow again; he would have to replant them. In all, there were about a thousand trees burnt. The trees could not be planted again under £100. It would take ten years at least to bring the trees to the same growth. It would take over £60 a year to pay for the labour, and £100 for water for ten years. None of the burnt trees were under seven years of age. He had sustained more than £1,000 damages by this fire.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: It was a great hobby of his to plant trees. Immediately after the fire he claimed £1,000 damages, and accused the defendant of maliciously burning the plantation, but witness would not now say it was malicious. The defendant said he had set fire to it, and that he did not think the fire would spread. The fire got into another part of the plantation. Warner did not discuss the question of compensation at all. He did not know that Mr. Pillans was an authority on forest trees. The trees witness planted were valuable trees.

Mr. Upington, in further cross-examination, put it to witness that Mr. Warner had a very nice house on the ground.

Witness: Yes, the nicest house at Sea Point.

Mr. Upington: But there is no stable; he cannot have a stable on the ground?

Witness: He has got a stable on my ground, for which he pays nothing. He does not pay a sixpence for it.

Cross-examination continued: The purchase price of Mr. Warner's lot with the house was £2,500. The house cost witness £1,750 to build in 1899.

Mr. Upington: The price of property has gone up very considerably then?

Witness: Yes, property did go up, but it has gone down again.

I mean the price of property was high then, when the defendant bought in 1903, as compared with 1899?—Yes.

Further cross-examined: Witness held a mortgage on the defendant's property to the amount of £2,000. He considered that the property was worth at least £3,000.

Mr. Upington: Is it your case that you have been damaged to the extent of £1,144 and more by the destruction of 750 to 1,000 gum trees?

Witness: Yes, and there is the depreciation of the land. The land has diminished in value at least £150 a lot.

You don't want to have both the value of the trees and the depreciation of the land?—I take it as a whole.

Witness, replying further to Mr. Upington, said that he based his damages on the depreciation of the property, and what it would cost to put the property again into a similar state.

Mr. Upington: I put it to you that for £210 a nurseryman is prepared to replant that ground and maintain it for three years?

Witness: If he plants, as a tree should be planted, I should take him at once. Many people do not know how to plant. They simply dump it into the ground, and say: "The Lord must do the rest."

Richard Bremner, superintendent of Mr. Van Zyl's property at Botany Bay, said he supervised the plantation on the mountain side, and the one burnt out. On the 4th March he saw what seemed to be a small fire at the back of the houses at Clifton. Afterwards he saw smoke rising in the air. He went up to Mr. Saunders's estate. Witness's cottage was about 75 yards from the defendant's place. Mr. Warner told him that he would set fire to the field down below. Witness told him he must do nothing of the kind, and that he had enough to look after with the fire on the mountain. Witness walked away with the defendant's coachman, and on chancing to look round he saw the field on fire, and Mr. Warner standing by. Witness at once sent down the defendant's man, and told him to ask Mr. Warner to put out the fire at once. The other fire was about 1,000 yards from Mr. Van Zyl's property at that time.

Cross-examined: Mr. Shaw was present when witness spoke to the defendant. Witness denied that he was in a "blue funk." There was a tremendous cloud of smoke rising towards the Lion's Head. The fire travelled from Clifton towards Sea Point; a south-easter was blowing. Witness was sure that he told Mr. Warner that he must not set fire to the grass. Witness had never seen a flowering gum in the Peninsula, except on Mr. Van Zyl's property.

Henry Wepener, farrier, Sea Point, said he heard Mr. Warner say to Mr. Bremner that he would set fire down below at the spot close to his house. Mr. Bremner said that he (defendant) must do no such thing. They then turned to go up the mountain, and Mr. Warner said, "All right, Bremner, I will look after the lower part." When they returned the lower part had been burnt out.

Fred Fox said that he rented a billiard saloon in Cape Town, and lived at Sea Point. He corroborated substantially the evidence given by Bremner as to the conversation that the latter had with the defendant. Witness said that the remark made by defendant struck him as very peculiar, because he could not see any need to set fire to the part down below.

Pete, a Kafir, said he went down to the lower place, where the fire was burning, and asked defendant who had caused the fire. Mr. Warner said "Go to —."

Hugh Ross Sharpe said that he lived at a cottage near the plantation. He saw Mr. Warner just outside his own fence with his hose watering his ground to prevent the fire, which he had just lighted in the plantation, spreading to his property. Witness asked him what he meant by lighting the plantation, and Mr. Warner said that he wanted to save his property. Witness then said, "What about my house?" and the defendant rejoined, "I can't help that; when my place is all right, I will come and help you." The defendant was not trying to put out the fire. The fire scorched the gable of witness's house. He saw no reason whatever why the defendant should have set light to the plantation. He should say that the plaintiff's property had suffered to the extent of quite £100 a plot.

Cross-examined: Witness was a tailor. Witness saw the beginning of the fire, but he never saw the defendant trying to extinguish the flames with a bush. He did not see a Kafir go up to the defendant. Witness had had no quarrel with the defendant. Mr. Warner was watering about 6 feet outside his own fence.

Pieter Johannes Zoutendyk, of the firm of Stamper and Zoutendyk, auctioneers, said that he was acquainted with the plaintiff's property at Botany Bay. He estimated that the value of the lots before the fire was £400 a lot, while to-day it was £300 a lot; in other words, that the lots had depreciated £100 each in consequence of the fire.

Cross-examined: He had not sold lots in the neighbourhood of the plaintiff's property; the ground was not level, and it was some distance from town. No property had been sold by auction in the particular vicinity of plaintiff's estate. The Fresnaye Estate was about 200 yards from the plaintiff's property.

Mr. Upington: Mr. Behr, I believe, sold that estate?

Witness: Well, we all had a finger in the pie.

Further cross-examined: There were no sellers to-day at the price that buyers were willing to pay. There had not been many forced sales, except in District 6. There had been very few residential properties forced into the market. He had a very successful sale on Tuesday afternoon at the Grove Estate, Claremont. He sold lots on that estate at £150 a lot twelve months ago, and on Tuesday the lots made £285 a lot.

Mr. Upington: In your opinion, the land market is "booming"?

Witness: No, it is not by any means.

However, in that part of Claremont?— Well, it did yesterday afternoon.

Witness, in further cross-examination, referred in appreciative terms to Mr. Warner's property, and was proceeding to refer to the beautiful view and so forth, when

Mr. Upington interposed with the remark: We are not going to compete with you, you know, Mr. Zoutendyk.

Witness, replying to further questions, said that Mr. Van Zyl had turned a desert into a park, and he had often admired that gentleman's enterprise. Witness was answering further questions, when

Mr. Upington observed: We did not get you here to tell us platitudes, Mr. Zoutendyk; you must credit even counsel with a certain amount of common-sense.

Gerhard Hendrick Moller, auctioneer and sworn appraiser, said he took the value of the ten lots to-day to be about £150 a lot. In 1903 and 1904 he valued the ground at £300 a lot.

[Maasdorp, J.: Now, what would be the value of the ground to-day if the trees were still on it?]

Witness: That would be hard for me to say, because I have not much idea about trees and their value.

Answering a further question by his lordship, witness said that, according to the times, he would say that the ground would now be worth £200 to £250 a lot if the trees had still been standing.

Gideon Brand van Zyl (son of the plaintiff) said he did not consider the conditions of sale to be onerous. Similar conditions were used on the Orangezicht Estate, and also an estate at the top of Mill-street, Gardens. Witness had had offers of £400 a lot within the past year. He had had no offers since the fire. The plans for the defendant's house were passed in 1901, and the building was erected in 1902. The sale to the defendant took place in 1903.

Samuel Woodhouse, gardener and florist, Cape Town, said that the burnt trees would be of no use in the future. He estimated that it would take £500 to replant the trees, and put everything in order for a period of twelve months. His estimate for all expenses of replanting, retying, restaking, watering, and so forth, would be for a period of ten years £1,550. He had made the estimate on the basis of 1,000 trees.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness denied that he had put the figure too high. He could get the same results from tree-planting in Cape Town in two years as he could get in seven years in Sea Point.

William Henry Higgo, chief forester, employed by the Cape Town City Council, said he considered that £1,000 of damage had been done to Mr. Van Zyl's property. He considered that the difference in the rate of growth between the Cape Town side of the mountain and the Sea Point side was as four years to six.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Mr. Upington said that he did not propose to lead evidence on the whole of the circumstances of this matter, but to confine himself entirely to what the damage was. It appeared to him that the sole issue to go before the jury was "How much."

His Lordship assented.

Mr. Upington then called evidence.

Eustace Pillans, horticultural assistant in the Agricultural Department, said he found that about 700 trees were burnt on the plaintiff's ground, but he did not include in his count any trees which had not been singed or destroyed, and which stood in the Kloof. There was only a small number of scarlet flowering gums on the ground; he should say that nothing like 150 had been growing on the ground. He thought £150 would be sufficient to replant the 700 gum trees and keep them for twelve months—good, strong trees in tins, such trees as they could get from Tokai.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Witness did not think the trees would require much watering after the first twelve months. His gospel of tree-planting was rather different to some people's. Witness's estimate of 700 trees did not include partially-scorched trees, which had since revived. He would not call the box thorn "a tree"; it might be placed in the Government's catalogue, but he scarcely thought it would be called a tree.

Mr. Searle: You put down in your estimate the excavating of the holes at fourpence per hole. I suppose that would be by convict labour?

Witness: Oh, no.

Further cross-examined, witness said that he allowed in his estimate £70 for loss of trees until the new trees were grown. He had not included anything in his estimate for supervision for the first year.

Re-examined: Witness thought that in four or five years they could get the place back again to its old state. He considered that 10s. a week would be a fair allowance for a man to water the trees.

Joseph William Matthews, florist, Cape Town, said that he found about 730 trees damaged or destroyed on the plaintiff's ground. He had tendered to Mr. Warner to replant 1,000 trees, and look after the trees for a period of two years, for £180. That amount did not include the cost of water. He was prepared to repeat the tender to Mr. Van Zyl.

Cross-examined: Witness had been mostly engaged in laying out gardens; he had not had charge of any plantation.

Charles P. Behr, auctioneer, Cape Town, said that he thought it was impossible to value the ground as building lots. He took the seven lots as a whole to be of the value of £525. Taking the whole ground, he thought the value would be enhanced if the trees were standing. As building lots, he considered the ground would not be of any more value because of the trees. He had taken the plots at 80 feet by 90 feet.

Cross-examined: He had deducted 40 feet from the lots for a road.

Mr. Searle: But there is no road.

Witness: I was told that there was.

By the Court: Taking the ground as a whole, the trees would make a difference in the value of £100.

Joseph Fock, valuator, said that three years ago he was valuer for the Sea Point Council, and he valued the house where Mr. Warner now resided, and the whole of the eleven lots of ground, at £2,500. He had valued the land that day (Wednesday) for the purposes of the present case. He valued the ground as building lots at £775—three lots at £150 each, three at £100 each, and one (in the ravine) at £25. The trees were a nuisance really, if they were going to build.

Cross-examined: He had taken the value on the basis of what the lots would fetch at public auction.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Counsel having addressed the jury,

Maasdorp, J., summed up on the facts.

The jury, without leaving the box, intimated that they found for the plaintiff for damages in the sum of £250, the amount tendered.

Judgment was entered for the plaintiff for £250, defendant to pay costs to date of plea, and plaintiff to pay costs subsequently incurred.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte THE TOWN COUN- } 1905.
CIL OF RIVERSDALE. { May 4th.

Mr. Sutton moved for an order amending the description of certain property in a rule which was issued under the Derelict Lands Act.

Application granted, and an order granted for the sale of these properties, the rule to be advertised as before and returnable on the 8th June.

Ex parte CAPE GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS.

Mr. Howel Jones moved to make absolute a rule granted under the Derelict Lands Act.

Rule made absolute, to the extent of the land specified in the consent paper.

OBREE V. MASTERTON.

This was the return day of a rule nisi calling on the defendant to show cause why he shall not be sued in forma pauperis for a full statement of the petitioner's affairs.

The affidavit of Thomas Masterton, who was the assignee of the estate, set out that the creditors agreed to accept 15s. in the £, and the balance was to go to the maintenance of the petitioner's wife and himself. The respondent was always willing to give the applicant every facility of examining the affairs of the estate. The respondent would gladly welcome an action, but he feared that the applicant, who was unable to pay, would mulct him in heavy costs. The respondent was quite prepared to submit everything to an accountant appointed by the Court.

Mr. Roux was for the applicant, and Mr. Gardiner was for the respondent.

Mr. Roux said he was instructed to consent to the Court appointing an accountant. The replying affidavit of the petitioner set out that the defendant had persistently refused to allow deponent to examine the books. Counsel asked that the petitioner be allowed to be present when the books were examined.

An order was granted appointing Mr. Maynard Nash as referee to go into the books, to see what, if anything, was due to the applicant, the referee's fees to be paid out of the balance in the possession of the respondent.

VAN ROOYAN V. FELE.

This was the return day of a rule nisi ordering the respondent not to part with two cattle, and authorising the Deputy-Sheriff to get possession of the cattle pending an action to recover them from the respondent, who wrongfully took them into his possession. Counsel now applied for an order compelling the respondent to immediately restore the animals to the applicant.

Mr. Struben was for the applicant, and Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the respondent.

Buchanan, J., said it would be better to let the Magistrate of Uniondale settle the question.

It was ordered that an action be brought by the applicant in the Court of the Resident Magistrate of Uniondale, to declare the ownership of the cattle, and upon such judgment the Deputy-Sheriff to restore the cattle to the right owner, the costs to follow the result.

BOSIKI V. WHYTE.

This was an application for an order on the respondent compelling him to deliver up certain documents, in order that transfer might be passed of a certain farm in East Griqualand.

Mr. Pyemont was for the applicant, and Mr. Roux was for the respondent.

Order granted as prayed, the respondent to forthwith deliver up to the applicant the title-deeds in his possession, and to pay the costs of the motion.

Ex parte WILLEMSE.

This was the return day of a rule nisi calling on the respondent to show cause why he should not be ejected from certain premises at Stellenbosch, and counsel now moved to make the rule absolute.

Mr. Roux for applicant; Mr. Gardiner for respondent.

Rule made absolute, with costs.

RATNER AND SIMAN V. RECARDO.

This was an application to make absolute a rule restraining one Moskovitch from paying out certain money pending an action to be brought by the petitioners for the commission as brokerage on the sale of certain premises in Primrose-street. Affidavits were put in to the effect that the respondent would leave the country as soon as the balance of the purchase price was paid him. The replying affidavit of the respondent stated that he never gave the applicants any instructions to sell the property, and that he had no intention of leaving the country.

Mr. Gardiner was for the applicant and Mr. Sutton for the respondent.

Buchanan, J.: Without expressing any opinion as to the merits of the case, the order will be discharged, with leave to sue for the costs in the action.

TABLE BAY HARBOUR BOARD V. LIQUIDATORS COLEMAN AND CO.

This was an application to have a certain matter referred to arbitration, and it came before the Court because the respondents could not agree to the deed of submission.

Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the applicants, the liquidators of A. J. Coleman and Co., and Mr. Close was for the respondents.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, J., I cannot make an order compelling the respondents to go to arbitration. As to the costs, they will stand over for the decision of the case.

Ex parte THE KUILS RIVER PUBLIC SCHOOL.

This was an application to make absolute a rule enabling the petitioners, the committee or board of management of the public school, to pass transfer of the school property to the Consistory of the Dutch Reformed Church at Kuils River. The Registrar of Deeds refused to pass transfer without an order of Court. Counsel, after outlining the history of the school, urged that the money that established the school came from the members of the Dutch Reformed Church.

The affidavit of Dr. Muir, the Superintendent-General of Education, set out that the school, which had since 1869 been conducted as an undenominational school, had received grants from the Government, and that it was always looked upon as a public school. The school-room had also been used for services of the English Church. It would be entirely wrong to transfer such property to the Dutch Reformed Church or any other church.

Mr. McGregor was for the applicants and Mr. Howel Jones appeared to oppose on behalf of the Superintendent-General of Education.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Buchanan, J.: Under the regulations, the Government have contributed to the upkeep of the school, and it is clear, if it had not been a public undenominational school, the regulations would not have allowed these contributions. In the title deeds it will be seen that the board of management stand in the position of trustees. It would be a grave deviation from the trust to enable the board of management of an undenominational public school, which has been raised by public funds, to transfer it away to whoever they liked. Under the circumstances, the rule must be discharged.

Ex parte ESTATE DRURY.

Mr. P. Jones moved for leave to pass a general covering bond on property in which certain minors were interested. The Master's report was favourable. Granted.

Ex parte GREENING.

The applicant appeared in person, and Mr. Alexander was for the Law Society. The petitioner renewed his application for reinstatement as an attorney of the Supreme Court. Mr. Alexander applied for a further postponement until June 1, in order to get material particulars of charges against the applicant, in order to oppose the application.

Buchanan, J.: While charges are hanging over the head of an attorney of the Supreme Court, I cannot see my way to admit him, but I think the charges should be investigated within a reasonable time. The affidavits must be served on the applicant before the 1st June, and the case will be postponed until the 8th June.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

TRIAL CAUSES.

RING V. RING. { 1905.
May 5th.

This was an action brought by Jessie Ring against her husband, George Ring, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce. Mr. Joubert was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default. The parties were married at Kimberley in April, 1900. They remained at Kimberley for a few weeks, when her husband went to Bloemfontein, where the plaintiff subsequently followed him, and found him living with some very undesirable people. In November, 1900, she left Bloemfontein, as she was starving, and the doctor ordered her to return to her mother at Kimberley. The defendant worked at intervals, but sent the plaintiff no money. Towards the end of 1900 the defendant joined the Scottish Horse, and subsequently went to Johannesburg, where several letters were sent to the defendant, but he failed to reply. A letter was sent to him through his sister, asking him to return, but he refused to do so. In December, 1903, the defendant wrote the plaintiff to the effect that he had committed adultery, and that he had no intention of returning to her. He was totally indifferent as to what course she pursued. There was a child eighteen months old of the marriage, and plaintiff claimed custody of it.

Decree of restitution granted, the defendant ordered to return by the 1st June, or to show cause on the 15th June why a decree of divorce should not be granted.

Postea (June 15th). The rule was made absolute.

WERNER V. MILLS. { 1905.
May 5th.
" 15th.

Personal injury — Contributory negligence.

This was an action to recover £2,500 damages for the defendant's negligence in not keeping a brick-pressing machine in proper order, by which the plaintiff lost a hand.

The plaintiff, in his declaration, set out that when it was necessary to clean the plunger it was sufficient to shift a band from a fixed pulley to a loose pulley. On the 10th November he was endeavouring to take out a little clay, when one of the forks snapped and the accident occurred. The engine had a governor, but no belt, which rendered it useless. The machine was also out of the level. The plea set out that the plaintiff acted contrary to definite instructions, and that the accident happened through his own negligence. The machine was in perfect order prior to the accident.

Mr. Gardiner was for the plaintiff, and Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the defendant.

Theodore Werner stated that at the works at Kloof-road he worked under a Mr. Pickering, who was in charge of the brickfields. On the 10th November the machine was out of order, it being necessary to clean it every few minutes. At first when he wanted to clean the machine he stopped the engine, and the defendant told him that that was a waste of time and labour, and said it would be sufficient to slip the band on to a loose pulley and so stop the machine. Witness reported the state of the machine to Mr. Mills, and the defendant promised to have it made right, but he had never done so. The defendant very often saw the plaintiff put his hand in to clean the die. Personally he could supervise other men, but he could not now make bricks himself. The cause of the delay in bringing the action was a promise from the defendant that he would always find him employment. After a couple of months the defendant said he would have to dispense with witness's services, as trade was too bad. Witness knew of no other way of cleaning the die.

Cross-examined: Witness was in charge at Kloof-road before Pickering came. Pickering relieved witness of the managership of the brickfield. Mr. Bygott did not explain the machine to witness and warn him not to clean it with his hands. There was an iron hoop which was used when the material was hard, but the iron hoop could not be used round the corners. He denied that he was cleaning the die while the machine was in motion. The defendant said he was sorry he could not pay witness his wages during the time he was in the hospital. The defendant said that the accident would not prevent witness earning his living from him. Witness had failed to pay certain labourers, but that was due to the defendant's action in breaking the contract. Just prior to the accident Hoffman did not pull witness away from the machine and warn him that he would lose his hand.

Re-examined: There was only the boy present when the accident occurred.

Frank Palmer, an engine-driver, who was in the defendant's employ at the time of the accident, said the plaintiff was manager until Pickering came. Mills was acquainted with the faulty state of the belt. Without a governor belt the engine would race. The defendant was told by witness that the machine was out of the level. After the accident he found that one of the pins was broken.

Cross-examined: The increased speed was liable to break the fork. He did not say to anyone that he believed the accident was caused through the breaking of the fork. It was quite possible that witness warned the plaintiff against the dangerous process of cleaning the machine. The plaintiff to witness's knowledge had cleaned the machine while it was working.

Re-examined: He had also seen Pickering clean the machine while the plunger was going up and down.

John Benson, the boy who was present at the time of the accident, said that before the plaintiff started to clean the machine he stopped it, and witness held the knob. The belt had slipped between the two pulleys. After the die had been released witness noticed that one of the pins was broken.

Cross-examined: Witness had seen the plaintiff clean the machine while it was in motion, but on the occasion of the accident the plaintiff stopped it.

Mr. Miller, engineer, stated that in his opinion the pins were very weak. It would be safe to clean the machine while the belt was running on the loose pulley. As far as brickmaking machinery went, he found that generally it was very indifferently erected. The forks seemed to him to be very weak.

Cross-examined: The belts very often cut through the forks. The machine appeared to be a fairly good one.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

The witness Palmer (recalled by His Lordship) stated that after the accident he got a new governor belt; the machine was wooded round for safety. The day the accident happened there was no governor belt on the engine.

Samuel Mills, defendant, stated that Pickering was introduced to him as a practical brickmaker, and he was sent up to Kloof-road brickfields, but he was not to interfere with the plaintiff, who was only there until the plant for the contract at Sea Point arrived. Bygott, who showed the plaintiff how to work the machine, warned him against attempting to clean the die while the plunger was in motion. The plaintiff was shown how to clean the machine by means of a piece of hoop iron. The fork was not broken a couple of days after the accident. The plaintiff, in reply to witness, said that he did not blame him for the accident. Witness promised, without recognising any liability, that he would endeavour to find him employment.

Cross-examined: Even if a machine was in perfect order, there was always a danger of the belt slipping. It was correct that Palmer told him that the machine was not quite level. Palmer drew his attention to the governor belt being considerably worn. Within four days of the accident he examined the machine and found nothing broken. The only time he ever saw the plaintiff clean the machine was while it was in motion.

Nicholas Hoffman, brickmaker, who was in the employ of Mills in November, 1903, stated at the time of the accident he was wheeling bricks from the machine. Previous to the accident witness saw the plaintiff clean the die with his hand, and pulled him away from the machine, telling him that he would get his hand off if he continued that practice. A minute or so later he heard a shout, and, running back, saw the plaintiff's hand caught in the machine. There was some delay before the men were able to reverse the machine, and so release the plaintiff's hand. The machine was worked five minutes after the accident. The same machine continued to work until the works were closed down. At Sea Point witness saw the plaintiff clean the knives of the pug with a shovel while the machine was working—a very dangerous practice.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: Witness never saw a piece of iron put in the ground to guide the belt. It was necessary to use a block of wood to keep the plunger from coming down. The first he saw of the broken fork was a month after the accident. Witness always used the hoop iron to clean the machine.

Re-examined by Mr. Jones: The weight of the plunger would bring it down even if the belt was on the loose pulley. If the fork had been broken at the time of the accident, the lever could not have worked the transfer from the fast to the loose pulley.

By Maasdorp J.: At present he was working for the defendant.

Witness told Pickering the day of the accident what he had seen.

Thomas Pickering, brickmaker, who was engaged by the defendant in November, 1903, to work at the Kloof-road works, stated that witness was engaged to manage the works after Werner left. The day of the accident witness was standing outside, when he heard a scream, and, rushing in, he saw the plaintiff caught in the machine. Witness helped to release the plaintiff, and had his hand bandaged. There was a piece of a brick in the machine, on which there was an impression of the plaintiff's hand, but witness threw it away. The machine was worked after the accident, and witness was certain that the fork was not broken. The block of wood was only used as an extra precaution. Witness had seen Werner clean the die with his hand while the machine was working, and while it was stopped. Witness cautioned him of the danger in putting his hand in while the plunger was in motion. At Sea Point the plaintiff used a shovel to clean the pug, and witness considered that was dangerous to the man and to the machine. The fork was broken a month after the accident.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: When he was asked to give evidence he was in Mills's employ. After the accident they had a trial every morning with the machine. Witness never cleaned it with his hand. Witness was getting £1 a day, and Werner 9s. a day, and yet he was under Werner. There never was a piece of iron put in the ground to keep the belt from slipping. The belt might have been running when he examined the forks. He could not explain why he put a piece of wood under the plunger when he cleaned the machine. He believed there should be no danger of the plunger coming down when the belt was slipped from the fast to the loose pulley if the machine was in good order. Shortly after Mills's return from Caledon, Palmer reported to him that the fork was broken.

John Bygott, practical engineer, said he had twenty-five years' experience of that particular machine. He superintended the erection of the machine, the working of which he explained to the plaintiff, and cautioned him especially about putting his hand under the plunger. Mr. Miller did not understand the working of that particular machine. The blocks of wood were to be used to keep the plunger up. The same governor belt was on the machine now as when witness handed it over. The lever was designed to work lightly, but no vibration could throw it over.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: He left the machine in perfect working order. Every belt had a bias one way or the other, and this belt was true enough. He had no diplomas; he always fought shy of people who had. Except that it was exactly at the top, the plunger was bound to come down when the belt was slipped on to the loose pulley. The governor belt might have been lengthened. The blocks of wood were not, as a rule, supplied with a machine of that description.

Mr. Jones closed his case.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff alleges that, by reason of the defendant's negligence, the accident happened, and he claims £2,500 damages. The defendant pleads that it was necessary in stopping this machine that proper care and caution should be taken, not only to throw the belt on to the loose pulley, but also to put a couple of blocks of wood under the cross-heads which are attached to the plunger. The case for the defendant is that, even if the belt is over, and the blocks not used, the weight of the plunger would bring it down and cause injury to anyone who was working at the die at the time. Now, it is necessary to inquire whether the accident happened in the way it was stated to have happened by the plaintiff, or whether the defendant is correct in saying it arose from the negligence of the plaintiff himself. To support the defendant's case as to the occurrence on the day in question, only one witness was called. He was a little boy helping at the working of the machine. That little boy states he drew the lever back to throw the belt on to the loose pulley. He placed a block behind the lever to prevent it coming back again, and notwithstanding these precautions, the machine was set in motion by the belt becoming attached to the fast pulley. With regard to the evidence of the boy as to the placing of a block behind the lever, I must say that that evidence is wholly unsupported, and it is material to see whether the boy is truthful in that respect. Witnesses have been called for the defendant, who state that it is wholly unnecessary to put a block there, as the lever, if left alone, would not fly back again. I am inclined to believe that the boy is mistaken in stating that he put a block behind the lever. That would not be done in the ordinary course of working. The only evidence to support the theory that the fork was broken at all is the statement of the boy that he discovered a bit of iron lying under the machine, but there is no proof that this was really part of the fork. I come to the conclusion that the machine was in motion, not because the belt had slipped back to the loose pulley, but because the machine was never stopped. The plaintiff had been warned not to put his hand under the die while the machine was in motion, and I am of opinion that the accident happened through the plaintiff's own negligence. It appears Mr. Mills wished to do his best for the plaintiff, in order that he might not be utterly thrown out of employment, and it is only to be hoped that, notwithstanding these proceedings, if it should be in the defendant's power, that he will do something for the plaintiff. Judgment will be given for the defendant, with costs.

Ex parte THE B.S.A. ASPHALT CO.

Mr. P. Jones moved as a matter of urgency for an order restraining Bridie and Co., of Strand-street, from removing any goods from their premises, pending an action to be brought against them by the B.S.A. Asphalt Company for £46 17s., rent due.

Interdict granted, pending an action to be brought, with leave to the respondent to move to set it aside.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY]

EBRAHIM V. DEHNING. { 1905.
May 5th.

Mr. Alexander moved as a matter of urgency for an order requiring the respondent to restore possession of two shops, of which the applicant alleged that he had been deprived by spoliation. Counsel said that the respondent had filed an affidavit denying the forcible ejection, and stating that he had tendered the key to the applicant. He desired to file answering affidavits, and asked leave to mention the matter later in the day.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the respondent.

Hopley, J., said that as long as the respondent had returned the key to the applicant, he failed to see how there was any urgency in the matter.

Mr. Alexander said that the question of costs was urgent.

Hopley, J., said that if there was any urgency counsel might mention the matter later in the day, but it was difficult to see how there could be any urgency in a question of costs.

KING BROS. V. ESTATE { 1905.
WASSERFALL. { May 5th.
" 8th.
" 9th.

Prescription — Title to land — Transfer.

This was an action brought by King Bros., of Durbanville, against the estate Wasserfall to determine their rights in respect of certain two erven on the farm Johannesburg, Durbanville.

This case arose out of an application by the plaintiffs under the Derelict Lands Act. The plaintiffs claimed a number of erven at Johannesburg, and the Court granted a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act. On the return day claims were made to one of the erven on behalf of the estate Myburgh and to two of the erven on behalf of the estate Wasserfall. After hearing counsel, the Court directed that the rule be discharged, with costs, so far as concerned the erf claimed by the estate Myburgh, and as to the erven claimed by the estate Wasserfall, the rule was discharged, costs to abide the result of any action the petitioners might bring to decide the ownership of the land claimed; in case no such action was brought, the petitioner to pay the costs. Leave was given to try the action on the information before the Court. Consequently, no pleadings had been filed. The two erven in dispute were Nos. 3 and 7 of the farm Johannesburg.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. McGregor), was for the plaintiffs; Mr. Burton was for the defendants.

Mr. Searle briefly traced the changes in the ownership of the erven from the year 1860, among the owners having been Melt van der Spuy (who originally divided the land into erven), Jacob van Renen van Niekerk, Hendrik Cornelius van Niekerk, K. C. Dekenah, R. M. Ross, Mr. Rowan, and Mrs. Lawrenson. The plaintiffs bought from Mrs. Lawrenson in 1902 the two erven in dispute. They claimed that the erven were their property by adverse prescriptive user of their predecessors in title and themselves. The two lots in question were situated one in front and the other behind the homestead.

Mr. Burton asked for leave for the evidence of Mr. Dekenah, who was an invalid, to be taken on commission. Mr. Dekenah was, he said, quite unable to attend the court.

Mr. Searle said that Mr. Dekenah lived at Black River, on the Flats, and he should raise no objection to the proposed application for a commission.

Hopley, J., said that he also had a letter from Mr. A. J. Smith, sergeant of police, stating that he had been subpoenaed as a witness, but that he was unable to attend owing to illness.

Mr. Searle said that he did not propose to take Mr. Smith's evidence on commission.

Mr. Burton applied for a commission to take the evidence of Mr. Dekenah, and suggested the name of Mr. Advocate Giddy, or failing him, Advocate Greer, as commissioner.

The application was granted.

John King, a partner in the firm of King Bros., said that they purchased the property, Johannesburg, from Mrs. Lawrenson for £4,000 in the year 1901. Mr. Montgomery Walker took an option on behalf of witness, it being arranged that his (Mr. King's) name was not to appear. Witness had always lived in the immediate neighbourhood of the farm. Witness purchased from Mrs. Lawrenson in 1901, his impression being that he purchased the entire block of land. He had since made inquiries, but he had been unable to trace the whereabouts of Mrs. Lawrenson, though he believed that she was now living in Johannesburg. Witness, after the purchase, let the property on the upper side of the cross-street to Rowan on lease. Mrs. Lawrenson had up to that time lived on the farm. When he made his purchase he bought without a diagram. He was told that Mrs. Lawrenson had no transfer in respect of certain lots. There was a transfer in regard to a certain lot 3, but he had discovered that that lot 3 did not apply to the farm Johannesburg. In 1903 Rowan, who had an option of the property, advertised Johannesburg for sale. Witness thereupon obtained an interdict against Rowan, who had not exercised his option.

Hopley, J.: Evidently he wanted to see whether he would be able to sell the property for a higher figure than his option, and he left over the option until he had found out whether he would be able to secure a profit on the option.

Witness (continuing his evidence) said that while he was in possession of the property, and also before, he had not heard of any person called Wasserfall, except the Wasserfall in Cape Town. The property was in the area of the Durbanville Village Management Board and their successors, the Municipality. The local authorities rated Johannesburg as one property; the erven in question was not separately rated. The rating was based on the occupation.

Cross-examined: Plaintiffs had thought that the land now occupied by the widow Van Niekerk was also part of the property they bought, but they had given up that portion. He had had some bother with Rowan about the breaking open of certain doors of a building on this ground, and it was after this bother had occurred that he found that Mrs. Van Niekerk was entitled to this particular part. He had understood, when he purchased from Mrs. Lawrenson, that there was some dispute as to one or two of the erven. As far as witness knew, neither of the lots in question had been cultivated, but had been used as a kraal, and to put carts and implements on.

Benjamin Francois van Niekerk said that his father bought Johannesburg about 39 years ago. As to the disputed erven, they used one lot as a cattle kraal and on the other they had a wheat stack, and used to do their threshing there. He had seen the lots used for similar purposes by subsequent owners.

All the lots were used except the two bottom ones.

Cross-examined: Dekenah used the lots in the same way as witness's father had done. Witness was present when the farm was sold in Dekenah's insolvent estate. Witness was also present at the sale in Rowan's insolvent estate.

Witness had never heard Dekenah say that one of the disputed lots belonged to Wasserfall, and that the others belonged to somebody else.

Andries Jacobus V. van Niekerk, Field-cornet, Koeberg district, said he lived on the farm with his father in 1873, and stayed until the 1st April, 1875. Witness's father bought from his cousin, Jacob van Niekerk. His father bought the whole of the property, except a bit at the bottom, which an old Malay boy had, and from whom his father bought. About that time the rush to the goldfields took place. Witness rode transport. They had up to six and seven wagons and from 80 to 100 mules. During his father's time witness heard no question raised in regard to the ownership of lots 3 and 7. There was some question about the stable, which an old man in Cape Town, who wore a helmet, said belonged to him. He never saw the old man on the farm. Witness saw the place several times after he had gone to reside in the Paarl in 1875, and found that the lots were being used in the same way as his father had used them, both by Dekenah and Rowan. Witness had never heard of Wasserfall owning part of the property.

Hopley, J., remarked that from this case it appeared that the most elementary rules of conveyancing had been neglected. He should take it that it was the duty of a conveyancer to look into the titles before he conveyed the property. Of course, they had to take things as they found them, but at the same time there did appear to have been a great deal of carelessness.

Mr. Searle said that that seemed to be so.

In cross-examination, witness said that in September last Rowan told him that Wasserfall claimed lots 3 and 7, and that if they could prove that, they could make a good deal of money.

Sidney S. Jacobsohn, of the firm of Walker and Jacobsohn, plaintiffs' attorneys, put in a list of owners of the property extracted from records in the Deeds Registry, from the time of Jacob van Niekerk.

Johannes Jacobus Huys, of Durbanville, said that he was 80 years of age. He was born at Johannesburg. His grandfather was the original grantee.

Mr. Searle: That takes us back, I think, to 1813.

[Hopley, J.: To 1801.]

Witness (continuing) said he remembered Mr. Jacob van Renen van Niekerk coming to the farm. Behind Mr. Van Niekerk's house there was a kraal; the lot in front of the house was used by Mr. Van Niekerk for his vehicles and cattle. Mr. Hendrick Cornelius van Niekerk, who followed Jacob, used the two lots in the same way. Mr. Dekenah, the next owner, used the two lots, the one as a kraal and the other for his carts and cattle. Mostert next hired the farm, and then came Louw, both the occupiers using the two lots.

By the Court: The farm took its name from witness's grandfather.

Witness, in further evidence, spoke as to the user of the lots by Rowan, who used to slaughter sheep in the kraal. Then came Mrs. Lawrenson, who used the lots as her predecessors had done.

B. F. van Niekerk (recalled at the request of Mr. Burton) said that he did not remember seeing Mr. Rowan, of the Board of Executors, produce a plan of the property at the sale of Rowan's insolvent estate in 1899. He did not hear anything said as to lots 3 and 7 being kept out of the sale.

Colin Graham Botha, clerk in the Civil Commissioner's office, said that the books in the office did not show that quitrent had been paid in respect of any portion of Johannesburgfontein by anyone named Wasserfall.

J. W. Parmen, of the Divisional Council's staff; Johannes Marais, Government land surveyor; Henry Paton Baxter (70 years of age), a resident of Durbanville for 43 years; Thomas Sampson, another old inhabitant; and David Stephanus Malan, agent and valuator, Durbanville, also gave evidence.

Mr. Burton, replying to his lordship, said that Mr. Advocate Giddy had consented to conduct the commission appointed to take the evidence of Mr. Dekenah to-morrow (Saturday).

George Milne Baxter, a valuator to the Municipality, stated he had known the property since he was a small boy. Whether a house was erected on the lots or not, he valued the property. He remembered a kraal on lot 7, and cattle grazing on lot 3. Rowan and Dekenah used the lots. Witness was present at the sale of Rowan's estate, and bid for the property, which he believed at the time included lots 3 and 7. He did not remember seeing a plan at the sale.

Cross-examined: He was not a very keen buyer; he might have seen a diagram produced by Mr. Roos, who was trustee in the estate. The farm was put up as a whole. Previous to 1901 he used to value Mr. Myburgh's lot with the whole farm, but subsequent to that, he heard there was a separate claim to it.

Benjamin Thompson, blacksmith and pound master, stated he had been on and off the property all his life. He remembered Van Niekerk and Dekenah living there. About thirteen or fourteen years ago, he went to live in the house. Rowan allowed him to erect a kraal about ten yards from the back of the house. Witness remained in the house about twelve months, and during that time Rowan used the front and back erf. Dekenah also kept cattle there.

Cross-examined: He did not exactly know where the lots were, but he knew the front and back of the house. He did not know that other people grazed there.

James Downing, who remembered the place from the time of Mr. Rowan, stated that in 1902 he was about ten yards in front of the house, when Mr. Rowan ordered him off the ground.

Cross-examined: Rowan and he were not very good friends during martial law.

John Phalant, a coloured transport driver, 49 years of age, remembered the Van Niekerks, Louw, Rowan, Lawrenceson, and King on the property. There was a kraal erected convenient to the house, and on the opposite side wagons were kept. Mr. Rowan kept a racehorse there.

Witness (continuing) stated there was also a small tent lent to a cattle herd in front of the house. Witness was between the gum-trees and the house when Rowan said that he did not wish to see him on his (Rowan's) ground.

Another witness stated that Rowan placed a vegetable garden close to the kraal.

George Montgomery Walker, partner in the firm of Walker and Jacobson, stated in December, 1901, he obtained an option from Mrs. Lawrenceson on Johannesburgfontein. Originally, he was brought into touch with the property by Mr. Rowan. What he went over with Mr. Rowan included the erven 3 and 7. There was no question if he purchased as to his right of ownership to the lots 3 and 7. Subsequently, King's name was substituted for that of witness as the purchaser of lot 1. If he had thought there would be difficulty about lots 3 and 7, he would not have purchased.

Cross-examined: Rowan mentioned there were some lots to which transfer had not been given, but he did not specify them.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Mr. Burton read the evidence of Dekenah, taken on commission, which set out that he was the owner of the place Johannesburgfontein more than twenty years ago. He was told by one of the oldest people in Durbanville that the ground on which the thrashing floor and the kraal were erected belonged to Wasserfall. He never troubled which erven belonged to him as long as he got the use of it. Nobody at Johannesburgfontein ever paid a penny of quitrent; he paid the lot. He never thought that the man who built the house would be such a fool as to sell the erf in front of him. Benjamin Thompson never lived with him.

James Robert MacLay said he was 62 years of age. Witness knew Johannesburg for about 50 years, and was at the sale when it was cut up into lots. Wasserfall bought the lots at the front and back of the farmhouse. Witness never remembered a kraal being on erf number 7. He never saw erf number 3 in use, and never saw farm implements or wagons on the erf.

Cross-examined: Witness was away for a number of years, but returned in 1891 or 1892, when he purchased a farm. Witness remembered Van Niekerk coming into occupation of the farm. Witness was at that time living at Cape Town. In order to approach the farmhouse with a cart, it was necessary to drive across lot 3 or leave the cart on the road.

C. P. Rowan said he was one of the former owners of Johannesburg. Witness bought it from Ross. At that time witness knew nothing of lots 3 and 7, but was informed of it some time afterwards, when one of the oldest inhabitants informed him that lots 3 and 7 belonged to Wasserfall. In 1886 or 1887 his mother leased the farm from Dekenah, and at that time there was no kraal on the lots 3 and 7. During his mother's time he did some butchering on the premises, but lots 3 and 7 were not actually used. As far as witness knew, lots Nos. 3 and 7 were not cultivated. Witness always outspanned his wagons on lot No. 1. No sensible man would outspan in front of his door. Witness knew that lot No. 3 did not belong to him. When witness went insolvent in 1899 he informed his trustee that the lots 3 and 7 did not belong to him. Witness was at the sale. Mr. Marais produced a plan in the dining-room.

Cross-examined: Witness went to Mr. Steytler to start the case. Witness knew the plots did not belong to him before he applied for the amended title. He believed he cultivated lots to which he had no title. After the interdict he was not on good terms with the plaintiffs. Witness had not paid the costs of the interdict, but King had not paid the cost of the damage to the furniture.

By Hopley, J.: When he came on the farm he was told by old people that he had no right to the lots in question. No special use was made of No. 7 in his mother's tenancy.

Johannes Roos, Secretary of the Board of Executors, stated that in April, 1899, he was appointed first trustee in the estate of Rowan. The sale took place in May, 1899. Prior to the sale, he found that all the title-deeds were not in order. He had to get a copy of one of the diagrams. Rowan drew witness's attention to two lots, one in front and one at the back of the house, which he could not sell. Those would be evidently lots 3 and 7, which must have been clearly shown at the sale, according to the plan produced by Mr. Marais. He remembered perfectly well it being thrown in his face that he could not sell the lots in question. Witness explained to Lawrence and to the buyers that he could not sell the lot in front and the lot at the back, and that he was only selling the lots to which he had the title. If witness could have disposed of the two lots in question he would easily have got £1,500 for the property.

Cross-examined: The lots in front and at the back of the house were the lots mentioned by the people present at the sale of which there was no transfer. He sold what was described in the transfer deed, and nothing else. According to his advertisement in the "Government Gazette," he did not sell a piece of the property in question. There was no mention of the house in the advertisement of the sale.

Mr. Burton stated that the witness whom he had expected to call from Malmesbury was unable to attend owing to illness. Counsel, therefore, proposed to close his case.

Mr. Walker, of Messrs. Walker and Jacobsohn (the plaintiffs' attorneys), re-called by Mr. Searle, was about to give evidence in regard to a conversation that Rowan had with him in 1901, when

Mr. Burton objected to the evidence, on the ground that it was not material to the question of prescription. The only ground on which it could be admitted was that it bore on the credibility of Mr. Rowan.

Mr. Searle said that that was precisely the reason why he desired to lead this further evidence, inasmuch as the evidence directly affected the credibility of the witness Rowan. Counsel argued that the evidence was admissible.

Mr. Burton contended that the evidence was not relevant to the subject-matter of the action.

Hopley, J., ruled that the evidence was inadmissible. The evidence, he said, came close to the borders of relevancy, but it seemed to him that, as Rowan ceased to be owner in 1899, he could not be held to bind the land by anything he said in 1901.

Mr. Searle said that he would call evidence bearing upon statements made by Rowan when he was owner in 1898.

Mr. Marais, Government land surveyor, was thereupon recalled. He stated that in November, 1898, he was preparing an amended title for Rowan. Witness told Rowan that he had no title to lot 7, but that he had title to lot 3. Rowan seemed to be surprised. Witness subsequently found that he was mistaken in regard to lot 3. Witness denied that Rowan mentioned Grundlingh's name to him. Rowan was anxious to obtain title to the lots for which he had no transfer, and witness advised him to proceed for title by moving the Supreme Court under the Derelict Lands Act. Witness advised Rowan to instruct an attorney.

Cross-examined: Witness only found that he had made a mistake in regard to lot 3 after King Bros. had become the owners, and that the lot 3 mentioned in the diagram did not refer to Johannesburg at all.

This concluded the evidence.

Mr. Searle said that the question in this case was whether prescription of lots 3 and 7 of the farm Johannesburg had been proved. He thought there would be no difference of opinion between his learned friend and himself as to the law. Counsel proceeded to quote from Sir Andries Maasdorp and Voet, and also from cases decided in this court. He said that, clearly, it did not matter what knowledge a man had as to the land, the real point in the case was, what had been the user of the land, what had been the occupation? On the facts, counsel submitted that it had been shown beyond all question that for over thirty years the land in dispute had been used as part of the farm by the occupier of the homestead. Coming to the evidence, he urged that, although Mr. Dekenah gave evidence on behalf of the defendant, he was actually on the side of the plaintiff. Mr. Baxter was a bidder, and he heard nothing about lots 3 and 7 not being included in the sale, as stated by Mr. Roos. The impression among the intending purchasers was undoubtedly that the whole of Rowan's property was being auctioned. The rates had always been paid as if the property belonged to the person who owned the farmhouse. Counsel submitted that the plaintiffs had clearly established their right of prescription for thirty years, and that it was entirely an afterthought for Mr. Rowan to say that he did not intend to occupy it as an owner during a considerable portion of his time.

Mr. Burton said the question was whether, as against the registered owner, the plaintiffs had made out their claim. They claimed upon prescription. One thing was clear—that the onus of proof lay heavily upon the plaintiffs. The main element was that the possession of the person who claimed a right of prescription must be upon some just title he believed in. The use made of the property was never of such a nature as to disturb the rightful ownership. It was a curious thing that all these years use was made in a superficial way, and there was nothing to show at what stage it could be said that the owners of that place dealt with the two lots with the object of acquiring the property. Occupation of these lots was part and parcel of the occupation of the farm Johannesfontein. It was not enough to say that they took whatever were the rights of their predecessors. Did they, as a matter of fact, get the rights of their predecessors? It was clear from the evidence given by Mr. Roos on the point that nothing passed in connection with these two lots. From the evidence of the different owners, it did not appear that they made use of this property with a view of acquiring it.

Mr. Searle having been heard in reply,

Hopley, J.: The farm Johannesburg was for some years, at all events in the year 1860, owned by a gentleman named Van der Spuy, who seemed to have been indebted to Mr. Daniel Mills about that time. Van der Spuy had the farm cut into lots for building purposes, and apparently at that sale lots 3 and 7 were purchased by Wasserfall. That was in 1862. Mills bought the house for the Niekerks somewhere about 1866, and in 1868 they built a kraal behind the house, and Benjamin Niekerk states that his father told him that Mills had bought back, with the exception of one lot, all the erven, and that the whole of the land around the house was part of the farm Johannesburg. They clearly thought the land was their own, as they used it just as if it was. Then again, in addition to the actual occupation of these erven, Jacob Niekerk paid the rates and taxes, and he did all the acts of dominium which the ordinary owner of land would do. That continued with his successor, H. C. Niekerk, who bought in 1873. The land was then sold to Dekenah. Dekenah thought he bought the whole thing, and he also used the lots in exactly the same way as the others. Although someone threw out a hint to him that a couple of lots near the house belonged to Wasserfall, he paid no attention, and continued to use the lots as before. In 1888 Dekenah seemed to become insolvent, and R. M. Ross had to take over this farm. In his (Ross's) time he leased it to tenants, and the tenants made no difference as to how they used these lots. In 1889 Mr. and Mrs. Rowan apparently came to live on the farm, and during that time he could not see that Rowan had abstained from making use of these particular lots. Rowan said in his mother's time there was no kraal, but he did not say that his mother did not use lot 7 just as she chose. Rowan occupied the lots for something like ten years, and during that time I think he made use of the place just as the others had done, and in his case there was evidence that he actually ordered people off lot 3 as though it belonged to himself. I don't think I can quite accept that portion of his evidence, although he may not be telling an untruth, where he says that he was told that the lots belonged to Wasserfall, as there is no mention of it in his affidavit. In 1899 Rowan was insolvent, and then we have Mr. Roos coming on the scene as trustee of the estate. Mr. Roos says that he explained that he did not hold the title of these erven, and that he was selling the thing as a whole, and, further, that it was thrown in his face that he could not give transfer of these lots. It seems to me that he was simply selling the insolvent's rights, and with that knowledge Mr. Lawrence son bought. I don't think Lawrence son's purchase in that way would make any difference in the lapse of time necessary for the acquisition by prescription. Up to that time I hold that the various owners from 1866 onward had been using these lots as though they were their own property. Mr. Roos says he said: "I cannot give you transfer," but he does not say: "I cannot pass any rights on to you." Lawrence son goes on using this ground just as the others before him, and he also paid the rates and taxes. In 1902 King Bros. bought from him, and they went on in possession until 1904, when they applied under the Derelict Lands Act to get a perfected title. The executor of the Wasserfall estate was discovered, and when the rule came to be affirmed the Court could not, on the facts disclosed, grant the application. Now, my view on the case is that the various owners had been possessing this property perfectly peaceably until 1904, when King Bros. tried to get the property into their own name, and then the Wasserfall Estate for the first time came in. It appears to me that King Bros. acquired these rights in 1902, and they have a right to have the lots 3 and 7 registered in their name. The judgment will be that the plaintiffs are entitled to registration in their names of lots 3 and 7 in the diagram attached to the petition, with costs, and Mr. King to have his personal expenses.

Title to land — Registration — Illegal sale.

One F. B., acting under an alleged power of attorney from P. B., had sold certain land to W., and the sale was duly registered and endorsed on the title deeds, and W. thereafter dealt with the land as his own. Subsequently P. B. repudiated the sale, on the ground that he had not been paid the purchase price, and sold it to the plaintiff, who took possession and applied to have it registered in her own name. Her application was refused. A man who alleged that he was W.'s partner, and had formerly held possession of the farm, having become insolvent, and the farm having been attached, the plaintiff obtained an order restraining the Sheriff from dealing with it, claimed it as her own, and alleged that W. had obtained transfer by forging signatures to the declaration of seller and to the power of attorney from P. B. to F. B.

Held, that these disputed signatures were genuine and that W. must, therefore, be regarded as the legal owner of the farm.

This was an action for declaration of rights in respect to a farm known as Leutland's Pan, in the district of Gordonia.

Mr. Close, in opening the case, said from the pleadings it appeared that this action was one in the nature of a claim for declaration of rights in regard to the farm Leutland's Pan. The case arose out of a rule nisi granted in April of last year. (See 14 C.T.R. 424). The defendant Will resided at Upington, and the farm in question was one granted in the old concession days of the Chief David Vilander, who granted farms to various people, mostly natives. After the annexation of Bechuanaland there was a Land Concession Court held, in which the titles of people having concessions under this old chief were inquired into. If they were found to be valid, quit-rent grant was issued, and it appeared that this particular farm was under one of these titles. It was originally granted by the Chief Vilander to one Piet Boch, who was now dead. The latter got his concession ratified by the Concession Court, and the claim was in respect of that property. Prior to the quit-rent grant being issued, the defendant Will claimed to have purchased the property. The quitrent grant was issued in October, 1895, and he claimed to have purchased it by virtue of a deed signed in June, 1894, sixteen months before the quitrent grant was issued for Piet Boch. In those days in Bechuanaland, when Will got his title, one would get title either before the Registrar or before a notary. Will claimed to have bought under the old burgher title before a notary. In 1897 the plaintiff approached Piet Boch with a view to purchasing the property, she being wholly unaware of Will's position in the matter. Subsequent to that the necessary documents were obtained, and Boch signed a power containing the usual clause that he had never sold the property to anyone before. Mrs. Van Niekerk put the matter into the hands of her attorney to pass transfer, but no transfer had been passed. To her surprise, in February, 1904, she was served with a notice of attachment of this property, and upon its receipt she became for the first time aware of the allegation that Will was the owner of the property. The notice of attachment was given as the result of a suit brought by the second named defendants, Messrs. Rosenblatt and Wessels, on a certain bond covering the property. Judgment was taken in the High Court of Kimberley. On a previous occasion, when the plaintiff had been in Upington consulting her attorney with regard to transfer, it was ascertained that transfer duty had already been paid by Will. The matter was left in the hands of the attorney, and no further steps were taken prior to the attachment, because of these facts. On it being ascertained that Will had paid transfer duty, Mr. Lennox and plaintiff, who resided on the farm, made inquiries, Lennox, who had once been a partner of Will, having an intimate knowledge of certain transactions. In 1898 he was informed that the signatures of two witnesses to the documents covering the will were forgeries. After much trouble one of these alleged witnesses had been found in England, and had made an affidavit. The other was dead. Lennox saw Piet Boch, and the attorney assured him (Lennox) that Will could do nothing in face of the forgeries. Being in possession of the farm, plaintiff took no active steps to assert her rights. Considerable amounts of money had been spent on the farm in improvements, and the plaintiff had paid quitrent and taxes and borne all the burden of the liability of the estate, and had never been turned off by Will, who had likewise not claimed rent. However, in 1902 Will wrote to Lennox, saying that he and plaintiff must clear from the farm and pay rent at the rate of £75 per annum. Lennox submitted the demand to his attorney at Upington, and then, in 1904, the following position was developed: Judgment was taken on the bond, and notice of attachment was given to Mrs. Van Niekerk, who promptly applied for an interdict against Will. On that a rule nisi was granted in April, 1904, and on June 1, 1904, it was confirmed, and proceedings were stopped. The case was complicated by the fact that Lennox had been the partner of Will in certain land speculations, but in 1896 there was a quarrel, and although the partnership remained for purposes of account, Lennox cancelled the power of attorney he had given Will for partnership purposes, and no further selling transactions took place between them. The cause of the quarrel was that Will, who was the active business man of the firm, had got a number of farms which had been bought by Lennox on joint account for the partnership. He had them registered in his own name, whilst really they belonged to the partnership. He had bonded them for private debts of his own, and this resulted in an action by Lennox against Will. In 1897 Lennox was made insolvent by Rosenblatt and Wessels, to whom Will owed money, but the trustee of the estate was directed by the creditors to bring an action against Will to compel him to hand over the assets of the partnership estate, which the trustee held Will had dealt with in such manner as to be a breach of trust. The case was heard in the High Court of Griqualand West. The trustee claimed that Leutland's Pan was part of the partnership transactions, and that, therefore, he was entitled to a half-share. The position of the defendants was that Will held that the documents were bona fide mortgages for value, and the second-named defendants alleged that they acted in a perfectly open manner, and had no knowledge of the alleged forgeries.

Mr. Close (with him Mr. Upington), for plaintiff; Mr. Gardiner (with him Dr. Rainsford), for the first defendant; Mr. P. S. T. Jones, for the second and third defendants (Rosenblatt and Wessels).

On the application of counsel, all witnesses were ordered out of court.

Gordon Krimlick, clerk in the Attorney-General's Office, produced certain records referring to the transaction in 1894 between Boch and Will.

George St. Leger Lennox deposed that from 1892 until 1896 he was in partnership with the defendant Will as speculator in land and stock. Will did the official work—registering, transferring, and so on—and witness and Rautenbach travelled around getting powers of attorney in respect of concessions by the Land Court relative to titles given by David Vilander. Witness got certain land on behalf of the partnership, and found subsequently that Will had registered these properties in his own name, and had bonded them for private debts. They quarrelled on that account, and witness proceeded against Will in the High Court of Griqualand West. He (witness) was made insolvent, and the trustee continued the action, recovering about £800. Certain land, witness claimed, he obtained by judgment of the Court. Prior to 1896 witness had been to Leutland's Pan, where he was now living. His first visit was to inspect the beacons. On a second occasion, he went because he understood Will had bought the farm—the latter told him so. This was in about 1894. On that occasion he saw Piet Boch, with whom he had a conversation.

Counsel was proceeding to question the witness as to what Boch told him, when

Mr. Gardiner objected that it was not evidence.

Mr. Close contended that the evidence was admissible. Boch was dead, and the witness was at that time acting as agent for Will.

In reply to the Court, the witness said the farm was partnership property—if Will had bought it. Will asked witness to go and see what the farm was like.

Maasdorp, J., said that the agency was not established, and unless further evidence were forthcoming, the statement made by Boch to the witness could not be admitted. If the witness's agency extended no further than to go and see what the ground was like, a statement made by Boch to him was not evidence. A casual conversation, such as the witness had with Boch, could not be admitted.

The witness said he afterwards reported to Will that he had met Piet Boch, and that the latter had told him he had not sold the farm to him (Will). Will said he understood that Rautenbach had bought it for him. Witness subsequently went to see Piet Boch, near Keimos, close to Upington; he was accompanied by Mrs. Van Niekerk. Both Boch's brothers were present, George and Fred. There was a transaction between Mrs. Van Niekerk and Piet Boch, as a result of which the latter signed the documents (produced)—a declaration for seller and a power to transfer the farm. Mrs. Van Niekerk bought the farm Leutland's Pan from Piet Boch for £50; this price was to be paid by a horse, merchandise, and food to George Boch. George was supporting the father at the time. Witness saw the document of receipt of purchase price signed by George. Mrs. Van Niekerk went on the farm in 1897 or 1898, and she had since occupied it. Later on, witness discovered that the farm had been registered in Will's name, and that he had taken out an attachment. Mrs. Van Niekerk, when she went on the farm, gave her general power of attorney to her local adviser, Tillney. When the real state of affairs was discovered, they took the whole matter out of Tillney's hands. About 1900, Will was military prosecutor at Upington; witness later on held a position on the military headquarters staff, and he came into contact with Will. Will never made any reference to his title to the farm, and never made a demand for rent. Witness saw the documents produced in the Magistrate's clerk's office. The first that witness heard about the farm having been transferred in Will's name was when the writ of attachment was received. He had not previously to that time heard that Will had a bond on the farm. After the suit brought against him by Rautenbach, witness did not authorise Will to send to Miss Van Niekerk a letter instructing her not to admit to the Sheriff that any of the goods belonged to him (witness), and to say that they belonged to him (Will). Will also advised her to be very careful in her conversations with the Sheriff, and to be on her guard against "catch" questions.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: Witness spoke to Will about the farm not belonging to him (Will), and the latter replied: "See Rautenbach." The money was paid to George Bok, at the Court-house, and he gave Mrs. Van Niekerk a receipt.

The first time witness saw the signature he said it was not genuine.

Alwyn Jacob Rautenbach stated that he did not recognise the document of purchase produced. Witness travelled round in 1892, getting powers of attorney for the land court. Witness and Kennedy never witnessed Piet Bok's signature.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: Of the signatures now submitted witness admitted the first and last, but the others were dubious.

Mr. Gardiner then tested witness by giving him various Dutch and English phrases to write.

In further cross-examination by Mr. Gardiner, the witness said he had written to Will saying that Bok had been to him for the money, and that if he did not send money Bok would cancel the sale. Will sent witness £10, which witness paid to the chief, Vilander, for Bok. Vilander gave a receipt.

[Maasdorp, J. (to Mr. Gardiner): How do you say the £50 was paid?]

Mr. Gardiner: £10 was paid in notes, as the witness has stated, and for the remaining £40, Will had a set-off for professional services on behalf of Bok in the Concession Court.

Cross-examination continued: He did not sign any part of the declaration for seller, or of the power of attorney.

Mr. Gardiner pointed out that in these documents the words "Peit" and "Kleinmeir" appeared wrongly spelt, just as they were in the sentences written by the witness since entering the witness-box.

The witness said that in the sentences written in court he spelled the words as they were generally spelled in the district. Continuing under cross-examination, Rautenbach said that, although he was writing to Will after he discovered his name had been forged, he never mentioned the matter to Will.

Witness could not say if the signature produced on the power of attorney was his or not. Witness could not remember Will forwarding a declaration of seller and other documents. If he had his papers he could perhaps ascertain. His papers were at Reitfontein, 180 miles north-west of Upington. On June 30, witness wrote Will that he was trying to get Bok to sign the documents. Fred. Bok refused to sign. Witness only saw Piet Bok twice. Will got Bok's burgher grant confirmed. Witness was living at Upington. Witness had made two or three affidavits for Lennox and Tillney.

Re-examined: Witness told Lennox that he had a refusal of the farm from George Bok. The money was to be paid in three months to Fred. Bok. Witness never paid Fred. Bok more than the £10. Witness repeatedly asked Will to pay, otherwise Bok would cancel the sale. Will sent him £10, and promised to send the rest later. This, however, he never did. Witness never signed any documents with or without Kennedy. Frederick Bok sold his farm to Kennedy.

M. L. Roux said he knew Kennedy, and was well acquainted with his handwriting. The letter produced was received by witness from Kennedy in 1894. Witness was not prepared to swear to the handwriting.

John Hunter Kennedy, farmer, residing at Gordonia, said that on February 23, 1903, he swore an affidavit denying his signature to certain documents. Witness saw Lennox in 1898 or 1899. Witness knew Rautenbach in 1894. Witness and Rautenbach acted as valuers in the estate of Bok, but witness did not think the valuation produced was the one then drawn up. He believed the document he signed was foolscap. The declaration of seller produced was not drawn up at Klein Meer, nor did witness or Piet Bok sign it. He knew nothing of the power of attorney produced.

Re-examined: Witness never signed a power of attorney authorising Will to act for Andries Bok in the Commission Court. In 1898 or 1899 Lennox came to witness and asked him if he had witnessed a declaration of sale to Will, of Leutland's Pan. Witness said he had not, and swore an affidavit to that effect. Witness did not think Rautenbach forged the signature, and believed Will was too much of a gentleman to do it.

Frederick George Bok said his father was Piet Bok, and his brother was Klein Piet Bok. Klein Piet got the farm, Leutland's Pan, from the chief, Vilander. Witness arranged for the sale to Will, and was to receive the money, but had never seen it. Witness was present when Mrs. Van Niekerk bought the farm from Klein Piet.

Cross-examined: Klein Piet told witness he could sell the farm. Witness had authority from his brother to sell the farm, but did not tell Rautenbach to give the money to Vilander. Witness gave Rautenbach three months in which to pay the money, and asked him three times for the money. Vilander married a sister of witness. Witness told "Scotty" Smith and Mrs. Van Niekerk that the farm was for sale. The money was paid to witness because he had to maintain his father.

Mrs. S. van Niekerk (plaintiff) said she was living on the farm with Lennox, and described at length her negotiation for the purchase.

Mr. Close closed his case.

James Herbert N. Will, attorney, said he practised at Upington from 1891 to 1902. Witness obtained several powers of attorney in 1893, including Bok's. The writing on the document was Rautenbach's, as was the signature. The other signature was, witness believed, that of Kennedy. Witness acted for Piet Bok, and his account against Piet was £150. Rautenbach came to witness, and said he could get Leutland's Pan farm for £50, and witness told him to do so. On June 15, 1897, witness received a written contract. Witness sent £10 on account, but did not send any more, as he was settling some of Rautenbach's debts, and thought Rautenbach could pay Bok.

Witness spoke as to the signatures on certain documents, and the handwriting on the same. Lennox had been his partner, and he gave him notice to quit the farm Leutland's Pan on hearing that he was cutting wood. Witness had the farm surveyed in 1896, and also paid the transfer fees and expenses of getting title. Witness had expended £150 upon the farm. Witness never received any advice from Lennox or Mrs. Van Niekerk that she had purchased the farm. The first intimation witness had that the signatures were alleged to be forged was when the affidavit in connection with the rule nisi were put in. When witness authorised Rautenbach to buy Lentlands Pan it was understood that Rautenbach was to get a percentage.

Cross-examined, witness never agreed to give Rautenbach 7s. per cent. commission. Witness was anxious to get the power of attorney signed before he put in his bill of costs. When witness wrote to Rautenbach that he would insist upon the sale being carried through, it was probably because there had been a threat of cancellation of the sale. Witness was not trying to force a sale on Bok; he was merely endeavouring to hold him to what he had done. He was not altogether dissatisfied with Fred Bok's signature to the deed of sale, but he wrote to Rautenbach asking him to get Piet's signature. Rautenbach was the man with whom witness was to settle. Rautenbach was repeatedly told about the Bill of costs, but an account was never forwarded. The bill of costs had not yet been taxed, and witness anticipated when it was it would be reduced from £150 to £51. He repeatedly told Rautenbach that an arrangement would have to be made about his bill of costs before the purchase price was paid. The first reference to setting off the costs against payment of the purchase price was made on Monday. He considered he had settled with Rautenbach when he sent him £10, and said that the bill of costs would be set off. There was more due to witness than he had to pay. Witness did all the work for Bok in the Concession Court through Rautenbach. Witness could not understand why Kennedy and Rautenbach should deny their signatures. Witness was perfectly certain Kennedy signed, but also believed that Kennedy had forgotten about it. The rule nisi was granted last year.

By Mr. Jones: If the bond had been set aside in 1898 he would have been in a better financial position than at present.

Further cross-examined: If he could recover all that was outstanding to him he would be solvent at present.

By Mr. Gardiner: He drew up the inventory as he was appointed executor in the estate of Vilander. He was perfectly certain he paid the quitrents.

Herman Rosenblatt, attorney and notary, of Vryburg, said formerly he was in partnership with a Mr. Wessels, who was also interested in the decision with regard to the bond. In 1895, Concession Courts, to go into titles, etc., sat at British Bechuanaland. According to the Government proclamation, transfers of unsurveyed property could take place by notarial deed. That would account for the transfer to Will, and the bond being by notarial deed. On the second bond on Lentlands Pan, witness had obtained judgment against Will. The amount of the writ issued against Will was £1,491 6s. 1d., with interest. The transfer to Will went through witness's office on a power of attorney. He would have no knowledge whether the signatures were forgeries or not. The properties attached realised about £1,500, leaving £1,500 short. In 1897 or 1898, Croxford came to witness's office and saw the mortgage and the transfer deed.

By Mr. Gardiner: He thought that the quitrent would run from the time when the country was annexed. He had no doubt that the signature on the declaration of seller was that of Rautenbach.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: If he had known that the signatures were not genuine, he would not have passed transfer. Croxford told him that he had purchased the property for Mrs. Van Niekerk, and witness told him that Wills had already purchased it, and that he (witness) had a bond on it. As far as this case was concerned, the reserve of £3,000 was too high on the other property.

By Mr. Jones: If Lentlands Pan were withdrawn from the bonds, witness would suffer financially.

Mr. Gardiner called

Charles Matthews, clerk in the Surveyor-General's Office, who produced the claim made by Piet Bok for the farm Lentlands Pan.

Cross-examined: The Imperial Government only claimed quitrent from the date of the judgments. This closed the evidence.

Mr. Close contended that the arrangement in 1897 was a good one. In the case of Will, having got a power of attorney, signed with a X by Bok, it was possible for him to get all the other papers without the native knowing anything. He submitted that a solemn declaration, duly signed and witnessed, must be before the notary before any transfer could be given. If the documents in the case were held to be good, and that there was a sale in 1894, the case of the plaintiff fell to the ground, but the plaintiff took the step of alleging that the documents were forgeries committed at the instigation of the first defendant. The witnesses Rautenbach and Kennedy denied their signatures, or that they had ever seen the documents. There was no allegation against Rautenbach, except that he drank, to weaken his evidence. Then there was the evidence of Kennedy, and he was the one witness more clear than any other as to what he did and did not do. Four signatures were shown him, and he immediately identified two, which on examination proved to be genuine. A third, of which he said, "This I don't know, but I don't think it is mine," turned out to be the signature to the power of attorney.

Maasdorp, J., asked what Mr. Close had to say as to the signature on the inventory, because Kennedy denied it.

Mr. Close said that in the case of the power of attorney Mr. Kennedy not only denied the signature, but said Piet Bok was not at the place. As to the inventory, Kennedy was not so clear.

In further reply to the Court, Mr. Close said that the deed of sale produced, and signed by Fred Bok, came as a great surprise to them. He did not dispute it being a valid sale. Kennedy admitted having signed an inventory, but not the one produced.

Maasdorp, J., said the document was drawn up by Rautenbach, and he said the signature was his, and that Kennedy also signed. Was it alleged that the signature of Kennedy was a forgery?

Mr. Close said Kennedy asserted it was not, and he accepted Kennedy's statement, and would urge upon the Court that Kennedy's evidence was absolutely reliable, and that he had not been proved incorrect in one particular. Assuming Kennedy's evidence to be correct, the signature on the power of attorney was not that of Kennedy. Piet Bok was not at Klein Meer on the date alleged, and Kennedy and Rautenbach never signed together to Piet Bok's signature, and therefore the signatures were forgeries. It would be remembered that Will admitted the matter lay between himself and Rautenbach. Taking the question of motive, there was nothing alleged against Rautenbach. Will, however, had started the system of touting for business, and thus showing no respect for his profession. Then there was the attempt to defraud Van Niekerk. There were other matters of a fraudulent nature. He, therefore, submitted that when it came to a question between Rautenbach and Will, the version of Kennedy and Rautenbach was correct, and that Bok never did sign at Klein Meer, and that the signatures were not there. The arrangement of 1897 was absolutely in favour of the plaintiff, if there was nothing previous, and he submitted there was not.

Mr. Gardiner said the first point he would urge was that a sale by Bok to Will was clearly proved, yet the plaintiff came into court and said there was not a sale. The attitude, however, taken up now appeared to be that there was a sale between Frederick Bok and Will, but that Frederick Bok had no power to sell. This was directly contradicted by Frederick Bok, who said he had his brother's authority to sell. Frederick Bok said he sold the farm, and Piet Bok ratified the sale. The fact that plaintiff waited ten years threw no doubt on her claim. Lennon and Mrs. Van Niekerk found these forged documents in 1898, and that the transfer duty was paid. However, they wait until Piet Bok died in 1901, and yet they wait until now before bringing this case. Rautenbach's evidence, he submitted, was not to be relied upon. He could not identify his signatures unless he saw the documents. Rautenbach had a bad memory, to say the least of it. Rautenbach could not have written the signature of Kennedy. The probability was that Kennedy's signature was a genuine one. What stronger proof could there be that Kennedy had signed the inventory in question than Kennedy's own evidence? Was it likely that such an old document as the power of attorney given by Andries Bok would be forged by Will? Was it likely again that a witness would ask to look into the contents of a will before he signed it? If the Court once found that Kennedy's signature was a genuine one, then it must be held that the mark was made by Piet Bok. On the point of forgery there was no proof that Will instigated the forgery. Counsel submitted that the plaintiff had no ground to upset the transfer.

Maasdorp, J.: It appears from the evidence in this case that Vilander, who was a recognised chief of a portion of Bechuanaland, which was subsequently annexed and became British territory, made a grant of the farm called Leutland's Pan to a man called Piet Bok. In 1893 a Land Court was appointed to inquire into the claims to title to land in that portion of the country, and on December 7, 1893, this Land Court confirmed the grant by Vilander to Piet Bok, and the necessary orders were subsequently issued by this Land Court for the purpose of effecting transfer to whoever might be entitled upon that grant. After the confirmation of this title by the Land Court many of these titles came into the market, and the defendant Will in this case tried to obtain as many of these as he could secure. On the 15th June, 1894, a sale was effected by a man called Frederick Bok, as the agent of Piet Bok, of this farm Leutland's Pan, to Will, for the sum of £50. Subsequent to that further proceedings were taken for the purpose of effecting transfer to Will, and it is alleged that on the 6th of November, 1894, a power of attorney was obtained from Piet Bok to effect this transfer, and that on the same day a declaration of seller was also made by Piet Bok for that purpose. Will then paid the necessary transfer dues, and appeared before a notary public for the purpose of having transfer executed that was done on June 27, 1895. After the transfer was executed before the notary public it was despatched to the Registrar of Deeds at Vryburg, and there duly registered, and upon the title deeds being put in evidence the fact that the registration had taken place was endorsed. The title deeds at that date were duly registered in the name of Will, and two bonds were passed over the property, one for a debt due to the second defendant, Rosenblatt, and the other to some other creditor. On the 21st October, 1895, a grant which it was necessary to obtain from the Government upon the document which had already been executed at Vryburg, was made to Piet Bok, and that grant was also duly registered in the Register of Deeds Office with the endorsement upon it of the registration in favour of Will, which had been previously effected. Now, if all these documents were genuine, and all these transactions which had taken place were legal, Will would now be in possession of a legal title to the ground. After the registration of the title it appears that correspondence proceeded between Will on the one part and Lennox, who now appears as interested on behalf of the plaintiff in the case on the other part, which proves that up to April, 1896, Will was dealing with the property as his own, and had requested Lennox to see to certain improvements on the farm, and Lennox had evidently, from what one can judge by the correspondence, undertaken to do what Will had requested him to do on the farm. Consequently up to April, 1896, Lennox knew of the claim to the property, and that Will intended to deal with it as his own. Leaving the matter there, I shall endeavour to ascertain the position taken up by the plaintiff in this matter to give her a locus standi to question Will's title it appears that on March 4, 1897, it was ascertained that Frederick Bok was prepared to dispose of this property on behalf of his brother Piet Bok on the ground that Piet Bok had repudiated the sale to Will owing to not having received the purchase money. The purchase was then made from Piet Bok by the plaintiff, and the necessary contract entered into. The plaintiff thereupon set about obtaining the registration of the property in his name, but it was then discovered that the property was already registered in the name of Will and had been mortgaged. Nothing further seems to have been done, but in 1898 Lennox and the plaintiff took possession of the farm and occupied it. It was necessary to ascertain how it was that Will holding transfer on the one side and Mrs. Van Niekerk being in possession on the other never came into collision. Will alleges that he knew in 1898 that Lennox was in possession, but did not know of any claim by Mrs. Van Niekerk, and this is supported by a letter, written by Will in 1902, giving Lennox orders to quit, and pay for damages done and rent. Will alleges that he thought Lennox had taken possession under an idea that he had some right under a partnership. In 1904 the bond holders sued Will, and obtained judgment against him, and Leutland's Pan was declared executable, and the Sheriff proceeded to deal with it under the writ of execution. Thereupon the plaintiff came forward and obtained an interdict to restrain the sale of the property upon a claim which she then set up by virtue of the sale which she had entered into with Piet Bok. The claim of plaintiff then first came to the knowledge of Will, and it was based upon the ground that the declaration of purchaser and power of attorney, upon the strength of which Will had obtained transfer of the property were forgeries, and the allegations to that effect depend wholly upon the evidence then adduced by Rautenbach and Kennedy. An affidavit was obtained from Rautenbach, in which he alleged that his signature as a witness to both the declaration of seller and power of attorney was a forgery, and that at the time of the execution of these documents he had not been at the place Klein Meer. The defendant became aware that he would have to meet that allegation, and it seemed that amongst certain documents which he then had in his possession, and to which Rautenbach had also been a party, he discovered an inventory in the estate of J. Vilander, and upon that document appears the signature of Rautenbach as one of the appraisers in an appraisement which took place upon the sixth day of November, 1894. That document was placed in the hands of Rautenbach, who admitted that it was a genuine document, and that the appraisement took place at Groot Meer on November 6, 1894. Here a very material point in the plaintiff's case was disposed of by proof that on the sixth November, as appears on a document signed by himself, and admitted in the evidence, Rautenbach was at Great Meer, and that upon his way there he passed by Klein Meer. Nevertheless, Rautenbach persists in saying that the signatures to the documents are not his. The question arises then: is there any evidence as to how Will became possessed of these documents? In referring to the correspondence I find a letter of the 11th July, 1894, which is written by Will to Rautenbach, telling him that he encloses the power in question, and asking him to kindly get it signed. Mr. Will has said that the documents there referred to were the documents relating to the purchase of the farm from Bok on the 30th July. The answer was received from Rautenbach "I have received your favours of the 20th June and the 11th instant. I will try to get Bok to sign the transfers as soon as possible." Here the documents sent are directly connected with Piet Bok. Will states the documents he received were the documents in question, that is the power of attorney and the declaration of seller.

We have it that Rautenbach did sign certain documents as a witness, and the question is whether the denial of the signatures to these documents satisfy me

GOTTLIEB. } May 8th.

Mr. Swift appeared on behalf of an execution creditor, to ask for a short postponement, in order that inquiry might be made into the matter. He submitted if Mr. Joseph was entitled to the machinery, he could suffer very little real damage by a short delay.

Order granted as prayed, with costs against the respondents.

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

BUTTER V. ASHENDEN. { 1905.
May 10th.

In December, 1902, A. deposited a specification describing an invention for an acetylene generator; in March, 1903, R. deposited a specification describing an invention for a machine of the same class; in April, 1903, A. deposited an amended specification of his machine; letters patent were granted to A., and subsequently to R.

Held, that R. could not succeed in an action for infringement against A. in respect of machines made and sold by A., which were covered by R.'s specification and by A.'s amended specification, but not by A.'s first specification.

Held further, that R.'s machine was covered by A.'s previous patent, and that R. was not the first inventor, and consequently that R.'s subsequent letters patent should be repealed.

This was an action brought by John Robert Rutter, tinsmith and gas-fitter, of Cape Town, against Percy Ashenden, civil engineer, of Rondebosch, for an interdict restraining him from selling and offering for sale a certain acetylene gas-making machine and for £500 damages.

The plaintiff, in his declaration, said that he was the first and true inventor of certain apparatus for generating acetylene gas, and that on the 21st March, 1903, he was granted letters patent running for fourteen years. Since the granting of these letters patent, and up to the commencement of the action, the defendant had infringed the rights of the plaintiff thereunder by unlawfully selling and offering for sale articles of the nature and description protected by the said letters patent, and, while knowing the premises, he had continued so to do. Plaintiff had lost the profits which he would have made from the sale, and manufacture of those articles, and sustained damages in the sum of £500. He claimed an interdict restraining the defendant from continuing to infringe his patent rights, and also damages in the sum of £500.

The defendant, in his plea, said that he was the first and true inventor of a certain new manufacture and invention, to wit, certain apparatus for making acetylene gas, and that, on the 31st December, 1902, letters patent were duly issued to him according to law. The articles which the defendant sold and offered for sale, and which were complained of in the declaration, were all articles protected by that patent. He said, further, that on the 21st March, 1903, the plaintiff wrongfully and unlawfully, under cover of the Act in that behalf existing, caused the letters patent described in paragraph 3 of the declaration to be issued, and an entry of the same to be made in the Register of Patents. The said letters were invalid owing to the letters patent granted to the defendant, and the said entry was consequently invalid. Subject to the above, the defendant denied paragraphs 3, 4, and 5 of the declaration, and prayed that the claim may be dismissed, with costs. In reconvention, he claimed an order repealing the letters patent granted to the plaintiff, and directing that the entry in the Register of Patents be expunged.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Russell) was for the plaintiff; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Douglas Buchanan), was for the defendant.

Mr. Upington said he took it that the question between the plaintiff and defendant was, were the letters patent issued to the plaintiff valid, and, if so, was the machine sold by the defendant an infringement of that patent? The schedule attached to the declaration showed that defendant had sold to J. Cross for £6 an acetylene gas generator, which the plaintiff said was an infringement of his patent.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: The first issue is, has the defendant done anything which he has not, under the letters patent granted to him, the right to do?]

Mr. Upington said that the whole case would turn upon the device at the foot of the hopper for the purpose of feeding the calcium carbide into the water below. The plaintiff said that the device in the defendant's machines was an infringement of his patent, and the question would be whether the defendant, under the letters patent granted to him, was not departing from the specification. Counsel, by the aid of models, explained the system of working, and the points of similarity between the feeders in the respective machines.

Carl Brown, clerk in the Colonial Secretary's office, produced the specifications of the plaintiff's and defendant's patents.

John Robert Rutter (the plaintiff) said he was a plumber and gasfitter, carrying on business at Castle-street, Cape Town. He was the limelight operator at the Opera House, and had been employed in that position since the days of Captain Roebuck. Witness had made a special study of gas lighting, and had experimented in the manufacture of acetylene gas. He had his first machine at work in 1902, when the machine was installed in his house. He had known the defendant between three and four years; defendant saw the machine at work in his (witness's) shop in 1903. That was the machine substantially, as witness patented it. Witness had done work for the defendant, and had constructed some portions of his machine before he (defendant) got his patent. Witness did not construct the internal parts, but he saw them, and defendant asked him not to mention the matter to anybody. Defendant was often at witness's shop while he was experimenting. Witness lodged his specification with the Attorney-General on March 21, 1903. Ashenden laid an objection on June 9; witness knew that Ashenden's objection was heard a few days later. Letters patent were issued to witness on September 21, 1903, dating back to March 21. The machines that witness was now selling were identical with the machine that he showed to the Attorney-General when he made his application, and corresponded with the specification. The machine in Court was produced to him by one Cross; he had examined it, and found that so far as the feeding of the carbide was concerned it was identical with his own, except that the weight at the end of the lever was loose, while in his own machine it was fixed. The action in both machines was exactly the same. Witness's complaint was wholly directed to the infringement of the method of feeding the water with carbide. Witness had been harmed in his business; people had told him that they could not give him orders, because the machine was Ashenden's patent.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: The defendant saw witness's machine working in May, 1902, at Rondebosch. Witness did not know that the defendant had a machine working at the Public Works Department in July, 1902. Witness did not get his two halves from Ashenden's specifications.

In further cross-examination, the witness said the second valve was the cock on the top of the machine, and when that was opened the air escaped, and the gasometer sunk until the lever rested on the flange, and in doing so allowed a small quantity of carbide to escape.

Re-examined: The form of gasometer used was the one in ordinary use. Witness did not claim any patent on the cock, but claimed for the automatic valve and the general simplicity. He had not stolen the idea of his machine from Mr. Ashenden. It was "more like the other way."

By the Court: Witness had sold about 40 of the machines in the last two years, ranging in price from £6 to £120. Witness made about 20 per cent.

Mr. Cairncross, Engineer, also gave evidence. He said that there was only one valve. There had apparently been an error in drawing the specification, and the valve I was really the valve F.

Cross-examined: Witness did not agree with Mr. Rutter that valve I was the cock outside the holder. If the gasometer was very large, it might be necessary to have appliances to open the valve F.

George Lacey Good, engineer, said he had examined the specification and plans of the plaintiff and defendant in the case. Witness had particularly examined defendant's specification, and did not think Rutter's machine could be constructed from it.

Cross-examined: Witness considered that it was possible to construct Rutter's apparatus from the specification and plans produced by plaintiff.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Professor Henry Payne, Professor of Engineering at the South African College, said he had been through the complete specification of the defendant, and also the plaintiff. Witness could read no sense in the patent of the plaintiff as regards the two valves, nor was there any sense in the words "fourth end off a lever."

Cross-examined: Witness considered the two valves in defendant's specification was a vital defect.

Paul Daniel Hahn, Lecturer on Chemistry at the South African College, said he had considerable experience in acetylene gas plant, and, having examined plaintiff's specification, was distinctly of opinion that the person who drew out the specification intended there should be two valves.

H. C. Geering, mechanical engineer, said he saw a machine at work at Mr. Ashenden's house in May, 1902. The valve was actuated in the same manner as defendant's.

Percy Ashenden, defendant, said Rutter never showed him a generator with a valve, but showed him one without a valve, and witness now had it in his possession. Witness was certain that he sent in the amended specification in January, 1903, to his agents.

Sir H. Juta closed his case, and counsel were heard in argument on the facts.

Buchanan, A.C.J., in giving judgment, said: The plaintiff obtained letters patent, dated 21st March, 1903, securing to him rights for what was alleged by him to be an invention for automatic feeding of carbide of calcium to a machine for generating acetylene gas. It was contended for the defence that plaintiff's specification of his invention had been drawn up in such an irregular and incomplete manner that no practical workman could ascertain the object of the patent, or manufacture a machine from the description given. Expert evidence has been called on both sides, and as is not unusual, the opinions of the experts incline to the side which engaged it. I, however, agree with the evidence led for plaintiff that from the specifications and diagrams filed, a practical workman could, even though a theoretical expert could not, construct a machine. We must, therefore, deal with this case on the merits. The defendant justifies his conduct on the ground that he also had secured letters patent at an earlier date than those of the plaintiff. There is no claim that the defendant's patent is invalid, but only that his specifications do not cover the device patented by plaintiff, and it is on this question that the case mainly depends. The defendant filed his first specification and acquired a provisional protection of his design on the 31st December, 1902. This specification was for an automatic feeder, which was actuated by means of a wheel and float. The plaintiff filed his specification and designs on the 21st March, 1903, showing an automatic feeder actuated by means of a lever and weight, a certainly more simple device than the one described by defendant. The defendant filed what is marked as a complete specification of his invention on the 13th April, 1903, and this second specification covers both devices. On the first blush it appeared that letters patent of December, 1902, could not cover an invention disclosed by the defendant only in the April following. But I find that although letters patent are issued within six months of the deposit of the specifications, by the 13th section of the Patents Act when issued they must be sealed and bear date as of the day of the deposit of the specifications. As a fact the defendant's patent was issued on the 30th June, and the plaintiff's in the following September, so that when the defendant obtained his patent his complete specification had been deposited. The letters patent do not describe the invention, this must be determined by reference to the specifications. The defendant had a model of his machine in work, which was actuated by a weight and lever before he filed his first specification, and at first it seemed strange he should not have included this device in any specification until after the plaintiff had deposited his specification; but it would seem from the 20th section of the Act that the specifications deposited may not be inspected by the public until after letters patent are granted, so that neither party could have had access to the other's specifications. The defendant stated he handed the draft of his complete specification to his attorney to be filed within a day or two of depositing the first specification, and that he left town shortly after, and it was only on his return to town that his attorney obtained his signature to a clean copy, which was then deposited, and that this was done in ignorance of the terms of plaintiff's specification. In both specifications the object in view was to regulate automatically the feeding of the carbide into the generator, the difference of the two methods being in the mechanism. The principle of weight and lever is common to both the plaintiff's and the defendant's designs, though perhaps the plaintiff's is the more neatly designed and executed. But the idea is the same, and does not constitute a different invention. By the 4th section of the Act the Attorney-General may during the term of six months, for which the provisional protection is granted, and before the issue of the letters patent, allow either the original specification to be amended or another and sufficient specification to be deposited in lieu thereof, and every such amended new specification shall have the same force, effect and operation as if it had been originally deposited in its amended state. In the absence of any fraud therefore the defendant is entitled to refer to his complete specification as interpreting his patent, and as his letters are prior to those granted to the plaintiff for the same invention, he must be held to be justified in selling the machines of which the plaintiff complains. Judgment will therefore be given in convention for the defendant. As to the claim in reconvention, both on the ground that the plaintiff is not the first inventor and also that the defendant had obtained prior letters patent, which letters still stand and are not sought to be set aside, an order will be granted for the cancellation of the subsequent letters patent granted to the plaintiff. The plaintiff must pay the costs of this action.

Judgment accordingly for the defendant, with costs.

The trustee reported that the books were not satisfactory, but the applicant had given every assistance in liquidation.

Application granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

BOTHA V. PHILLIPS. { 1905.
May 11th.

This was an application for reasonable security for costs in an appeal noted by Botha. The affidavit of Botha stated that he had good ground for his appeal, and would be prepared to pay any costs awarded by the Supreme Court.

Mr. Close was for the applicant (Phillips) and Mr. Gutsche was for the respondent.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said it was neither the custom nor the law of this country that persons should be required to give security because they were poor. The application must be refused.

LAWSON V. RESIDENT MAGISTRATE, CAPE.

This was an application for an order calling on the respondent to show cause why a certain memorial in connection with an application for a wine and spirit licence should not be given up. Affidavits had, however, been filed, and it appeared that proceedings were being taken against the person who collected the signatures. The memorial had been impounded in connection with that case, and under the circumstances the applicant did not intend to proceed with the application.

Mr. Upington was for the applicant and Mr. Nightingale was for the respondent.

Application withdrawn accordingly.

HUNTER V. HERNEN.

This was an application for an order for compulsory liquidation of a certain partnership. From the petition it appeared that in 1904 applicant saw an advertisement for a partner with £400, and offering a salary of £20 per month. In interviews defendant stated that he was making £40 per month, and that it could be increased. The business was the Eclipse Aerated Water Factory, Woodstock. Respondent said that the debts were about £400, and that the accounts outstanding were more than that. Applicant therefore paid £400 for a one-half share in the business. Applicant joined the business in December, 1904. Respondent shortly afterwards drew money from the bank to the amount of £75, and in consequence applicant could not draw his salary at the end of December. Applicant had only received £42 as salary for four months. Believing that the business was being run at a loss, applicant decided to terminate the partnership on March 15. In reply the respondent said if applicant wished to dissolve the partnership he must arrange for the sale of his portion, as respondent did not wish to buy it. Applicant asked for an order for liquidation, and for the appointment of a liquidator. The answering affidavits of respondent and Mr. Coats stated that the business was not run at a loss to their knowledge, and that the £400 put in by applicant was much less than half the amount paid into the business.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan was for the applicant, and Mr. Upington was for the respondent.

Counsel contended that the applicant must give reasonable notice of dissolution. If, however, the Court decided to order liquidation, then he was instructed to say that applicant objected to the appointment of Mr. Close as liquidator, and suggested a substitute in Mr. Maynard Nash.

An order was made liquidating the estate and appointing Mr. Maynard Nash as Receiver to the business, and to distribute the assets. The date of dissolution of partnership to be March 15 last.

JOHNSON V. CHIAPPINI.

Mr. Burton was for the respondent, and stated there was no appearance on the other side. Johnson obtained a rule nisi restraining respondent from dealing with a certain horse. Counsel now applied that the rule be discharged. Rule nisi discharged accordingly.

Ex parte THE RECEIVERS GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS.

Mr. Upington applied for an order authorising and empowering the Receivers to indemnify A. F. Hills from costs incurred in defending an appeal of the Colonial Government against a judgment. The action of Hills was for the benefit of the Receivers and the creditors.

Application was granted.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

UMHLEBE V. UMHLEBE.

This was an application to make absolute a rule nisi restraining the executor in the estate of the late Zaccariah Umhlebe from dealing with certain property in Glen Grey, pending an action to be brought by the applicant.

Mr. Sutton was for the applicant, and Mr. Burton for the respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Maasdorp, J., said that with the information before the Court, the applicant was not entitled to the extraordinary remedy of an interdict, and refused the application, with costs.

PALMER V. CAPE COLD STORAGE CO.

This was an application on notice of motion, calling on the respondent, who was plaintiff, to show cause why a judgment given on 18th April, 1905, should not be set aside, and the defendants allowed to purge their default. No notice of set down of trial was given to the defendants' attorneys, who were defending the case on a question of costs, the plaintiff refusing to give any proof of his ownership of a certain horse.

Mr. Upington was for the applicants (defendants in the case), and Dr. Rainsford was for the respondent.

Maasdorp, J., said there was a bona fide intention on the part of the defendant to appear at the trial to defend the action, mainly if not wholly on the question of costs. That intention was not carried out through some mishap to the service of notice of trial. The judgment would be set aside, and leave granted to the applicant to purge his default, and to take the evidence of one Harry Saunders, on commission, Mr. Stapleton, of Graham's Town, appointed to act as commissioner, the question of costs to stand over.

ROBERTS V. ESTATE ROBERTS.

This was an application to have a certain order of Court restraining the applicant (the defendant in a former action), from disposing of certain goods attached by the Court discharged.

Mr. Roux was for the applicant, and Mr. Gardiner was for the respondent.

Order discharged with costs, including the costs of the former application.

Ex parte CHADDOCK.

Dr. Rainsford moved for leave to assume the death of the petitioner's husband, Edward T. Chaddock, and her son, Robert J. Chaddock, and for an order authorising the Master to issue letters of administration. The petitioner's husband and son were respectively master and engineer of the S.S. Dee, which was wrecked in February last off the Albatross Rock.

Maasdorp, J., said his difficulty was that the application was somewhat premature.

These people might have been picked up by a passing ship. A rule nisi would be granted, calling on all concerned to show cause by the 1st August why the death notice should not be accepted by the Master, and letters of administration issued, one publication in the "Cape Times" and one in the "Cape Argus."

Postea (August 1). Rule made absolute.

Ex parte ESTATE VAN DER BERG.

Mr. Alexander moved for leave to the petitioner, who is executrix in the estate of her late husband, to transfer certain property which she bought out of the estate at a public auction. There was evidence that the price was satisfactory.

Granted.

WHITE, RYAN AND CO. V. FLORIDA.

Mr. Lewis applied for leave to attach certain lots of ground at Retreat ad fundandam jurisdictionem against the defendant in an action to recover £50 5s. 11d., which the respondent owed to the applicants for goods sold and delivered. The respondent was last heard of in Ontario.

Order granted with leave to sue by edictal citation, personal service if possible, failing which one publication in the "Gazette" and one in a newspaper circulating in Freeborn, Ontario, and a copy of the citation to be addressed care of the Postmaster, Freeborn, Ontario.

Ex parte LIEBENBERG.

Mr. Du Toit moved for leave to the petitioners to transfer a certain share of 1,500 morgen in a farm on the payment of £900 into the African Mutual Trust Company or any other institution ordered by the Court.

Order granted.

Ex parte LOUW.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an order consenting on behalf of the minors to the partition of certain property.

Granted.

Ex parte LOYAL OAK LODGE.

Mr. Sutton moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer of certain property at Uitenhage.

Granted.

Ex parte EXECUTORS ESTATE BLACK.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for an order authorising certain money, to the extent of £700 which had been advanced to one of the heirs to be repaid out of his portion of the estate.

Granted.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

GENERAL MOTION.

OHLSSON'S BREWERIES V. BRADSHAW. { 1905.
May 12th.

Mr. Struben moved as a matter of urgency for the arrest of the defendant in order to found jurisdiction.

Order granted.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1905.
May 13th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the admission of Malcolm N. MacInnes as an advocate. The applicant asked that the oath be taken in Johannesburg.

Application granted, oath to be taken before the Registrar of the Witwatersrand High Court.

Mr. Alexander moved for the admission of B. Ginsberg as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

GENERAL MOTION.

OHLSSON'S BREWERIES V. BRADSHAW.

Mr. Upington moved as a matter of urgency for the discharge of writ of arrest which had been issued on Friday against the defendant. The debt arose in the Transvaal, the contract was made there and performed there, and the defendant had no property in this colony. He was here on a temporary visit, and was leaving shortly for the Transvaal. Counsel cited the cases of Solomon and Wolff (8 C.T.R., 184, 519) and Einwald v. The German South-west Africa Company (5 Jura 86), and submitted there was no jurisdiction of any kind.

Mr. Struben read the affidavit on which the writ of arrest ad fundandam jurisdictionem was issued.

The affidavit set out that the defendant had no property in the Transvaal, and did not intend returning there. Although he had no property here, it was believed he was possessed of a considerable amount of ready cash. Counsel said he intended to apply for confirmation of the writ and for provisional sentence. The defendant was the lessee of the Elandsfontein Hotel, and being pressed for payment, he set up a counter-claim of £500 against the company for short delivery in certain casks. He entered appearance, but no plea was filed, and the defendant was barred. During that period the defendant leased the hotel. As he failed to pay the amount of the judgment, a writ was issued, when it was found he had left Johannesburg.

Mr. Upington submitted that the present case was on all-fours with the case of Einwald, and that the Court would not assume jurisdiction by attaching the defendant's person. Both the parties had a domicile in the Transvaal, and there was no proof that the defendant was making the Cape Colony his domicile.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: I think this case is not at all governed by the case of Einwald, which must be adhered to, but is not applicable in this case. I think the writ of arrest must be confirmed, and the defendant must either remain in gaol or give security pending further proceedings. The defendant will be released on giving security to the satisfaction of the Registrar in the sum of £100 to abide the judgment of the Court. The summons will have to be set aside and the action instituted forthwith.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

SCOTT V. KIRBY. { 1905.
{ May 13th.

Mr. Lewis moved for a decree of civil imprisonment on an unsatisfied judgment of the Court for £50, with interest and costs.

The defendant appeared recently before Mr. Justice Maasdorp, who gave him time on a statement that he never received the summons. He said the first notification he had had of the matter was when he saw it in the paper. He wanted the case re-opened.

Decree granted, execution suspended for one month.

POPPE AND BENNETT V. BROWN.

Mr. Burton appeared on behalf of the assignees, and Mr. Gutsche was for the defendant. Mr. Gutsche moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate. Mr. Burton opposed the application, and read the affidavit of the defendant, who repudiated all liability to the petitioners.

Mr. Gutsche pointed out that the defendant had given notice in the "Gazette" of his intention to surrender, and counsel said that that was proof of insolvency.

The provisional order of sequestration was set aside on the ground of the insufficient evidence in the affidavit upon which it was originally granted.

ARDERNE AND CO. V. GIRD.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £100, with costs.

Granted.

VAN DER BYL V. MOHADIEN.

Mr. Struben moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Granted.

LE ROUX V. DE VILLIERS.

Mr. Du Toit moved for provisional sentence for £24 4s. 6d., on a cheque, with costs.

Granted, subject to the production of a certificate of presentation.

LOGAN V. ABRAHAMSON.

Mr. Gutsche was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Alexander for the defendant. Mr. Gutsche moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate.

Mr. Alexander put in the affidavit of the defendant, in which he admitted there was due £2,250 on a mortgage bond and other amounts, but denied that he was insolvent. If he were given time he would be able to satisfy the debts, as he was expecting a remittance from his father. If the hotel were sold next month there would be a balance in his favour after the plaintiff was paid. On a fair valuation of his assets, there would be a surplus in his favour of £776.

Mr. Gutsche put in an answering affidavit by the curator, who considered the value put on the schedule by the defendant as excessive.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The creditors cannot be compelled to give time, and the provisional order of sequestration will be made final.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte STROEBEL. } 1905.
} May 15th.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte ESTATE WALKER.

Mr. Gutsche moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte GREEFF.

Mr. McGregor moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute. The matter related to a certain erf, No. 34, with the buildings thereon, in the town of Somerset East. Petitioner was the daughter of Cornelius Francois van Rooyen, and claimed as his sole and universal heir.

Mr. Searle, K.C., on behalf of one Isaac Dirk Bower (the deputy messenger of the Magistrate's Court, Somerset East, and cousin of the petitioner) opposed the application. Bower, in an affidavit, denied that the petitioner had ever succeeded to the erf in question, and claimed that his five sisters and himself should benefit to the same extent as the petitioner.

Mr. McGregor read answering affidavits by the petitioner and others.

Buchanan, A.C.J., suggested that the parties should meet and decide on a settlement. Prima facie, it seemed to him that the erf should be divided, one-half between each of the parties. It would be a pity to waste the erf in litigation.

Mr. McGregor thought the suggestion a very good one.

Mr. Searle said that the suggestion met with his acquiescence, but he thought the petitioner should pay the costs. The petition, under the Derelict Lands Act, had really fallen away.

Mr. McGregor did not think that the petitioner should bear the costs because the application benefited both sides.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the order of the Court would be that the matter stand over sine die. He would suggest that the parties should come to terms, and make a joint application to the Court for division of the erf, one half to the petitioner and the other half to Mr. Searle's clients. If that were published, and no opposition made by Mrs. Ferreira, it would settle the matter. It could not possibly be settled now on the affidavits before the Court.

Ex parte DE RICHMOND HANDELS MAATSCHAPPIJ, BEPERKT.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for an order confirming the reduction of the company's capital by £1,896, amount of certain shares declared forfeit.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that under the Companies Act it was necessary that every creditor should be advised of the application; so that the Court could only grant a rule nisi calling upon all persons concerned to show cause why the application should not be granted. It was only right that the creditors should have an opportunity of objecting. A rule would be granted, returnable on June 15; to be published in the Richmond newspaper and in the "Government Gazette."

Postea (June 15). Rule made absolute.

BLIGNAULT V. WEPENAAAR.

This was an application to have a certain amended award of arbitrator to be made a rule of Court. The matter related to water rights at Buffel's Vlei.

The affidavit of the respondent stated that he did not oppose making the award a rule of Court, but desired that a clause relating to water led beyond the boundaries of the farm Buffel's Vlei should be deleted. He contended that the arbitration went beyond the scope of reference in determining the right to lead the water: that they only had power to arbitrate in regard to water within the boundaries of the farm.

Mr. Burton for applicant; Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. Close) for respondent.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the award was in the spirit of the order of Court, but too many words had been struck out of the clause. It would make it clear if the words "on the farm Buffel's Vlei" were re-inserted. Subject to this amendment the award would be made a rule of Court. The costs would be paid as ordered in the previous rule.

VAN NIEKERK V. SANDILANDS.

This was an application made by the trustee in the insolvent estate of Van Niekerk to have a proof of debt amended by expunging it as a preferent claim, and admitting it as a concurrent claim. Sandilands claimed that Van Niekerk had pledged certain stock to him as security for debt on a promissory note; Van Niekerk said that the stock was sent to Sandilands to graze, and was not sent as a pledge. The Magistrate held that the stock was pledged, and admitted the claim as preferent. It was alleged by Sandilands on affidavit that he purchased 50 Afrikaner rams and 50 Afrikaner ewes, and later on purchased 248 Angoras. Subsequently, Sandilands told Van Niekerk that he could not accept the stock, as it was old. It was arranged that Van Niekerk was to retain the money as a loan, Sandilands retaining the sheep and goats as security. Replying affidavits were read denying the pledging.

Mr. Searle, K.C., appeared for the applicant; Mr. McGregor for the respondent.

Mr. Searle urged the claim set up was an untenable one; if there were a pledge it would have been shown on the contract, but the contract was clear that it was a lease. It was perfectly clear under the contract that the stock was the property of the insolvent, and that there was no pledge. It was, of course, open to the respondent to take action.

Mr. McGregor argued that it was quite possible that the stock might be leased, and might also be retained as a pledge.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: In this case the creditor proved for a preferent claim. The trustee now wanted to strike out the preferent claim, and make it a concurrent claim. The circumstances are not very clear, but the creditor, Sandilands, appears to have authorised the debtor to buy stock. Debtor did so, and Sandilands paid, and the stock has remained in his possession ever since. Shortly afterwards Sandilands objected to the stock as being old, and wanted to return them. He, however, agreed to keep them as leased property, and the debtor agreed to repay the money. If this is true the equity is all in favour of Sandilands, and if the estate wants to cancel the sale, and have the stock back, they must pay the money back. Under the circumstances there is certainly no reason to reduce this claim from a preferent to a concurrent one, but leave will be given the trustee to take any action he may be advised. The application must be refused, costs to follow any action taken, and, if no action be taken, the trustee to pay costs.

HUNTER V. HEENEN.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan (for the applicant) stated that in this matter, which was heard last Thursday, no order was made as to costs. He applied for costs against the respondent.

Buchanan, J., said that the costs of the application would be costs in liquidation.

Ex parte THE CURATOR BONIS OF MARGARET FRANCIS.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for leave to sell a chemist's business belonging to Margaret Francis.

Order granted, notice to be given to creditors who have not consented to the application.

Ex parte TERBLANCHE.

Dr. Greer moved for leave to participate in certain partition of property.

An order was granted in terms of the Master's report.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for an order authorising the Mutual Life Insurance Company to pay petitioner certain money on insurance policies in respect of minor children.

Ex parte THE EXECUTRIX IN THE ESTATE OF THE LATE J. L. DELPORT.

Mr. Gutsche moved for leave to pass a mortgage bond in order to raise money for the benefit of the heirs. The heirs consented.

Ex parte KIRSCHOFF.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds at King William's Town to register certain property in petitioner's name. The petitioner purchased the land out of the estate of which he was executor. The sale was by public auction, and it was stated that the amount paid was fair value.

Order granted.

ELLIOT V. ENGELBRECHT.

Mr. Du Toit moved for the appointment of J. P. Krige as provisional trustee in the respondent's insolvent estate.

Granted, costs of the application to be costs in the estate.

Ex parte MILLS.

Mr. De Waal moved to make absolute a rule nisi authorising the executors in the estate of Coetzer to pay the petitioner a certain inheritance.

Granted.

Ex parte DE VILLIERS.

Mr. Uington moved for leave to the petitioner to expend £1,000 out of the accumulated interest on a sum bequeathed to minors in the estate of which petitioner is executor. The money was required for the expenses of a trip to Europe by the two minor daughters, aged respectively 20 and 18. In his report, the Master referred to a previous application in 1892 by the survivor—the widow—for payment to her of the accumulated interest for the maintenance of the minors, which application was granted. The Master was of opinion that the minors could defer their trip until they become of age. Counsel said the estate was a very valuable one, the residue being £50,000, and it was not proposed to touch the capital. The idea, it seemed, was that these young ladies were about to be married, and wished to see a bit of the world before that happened and they settled down. The trip would be in the nature of an education.

The application was granted.

VAN NIEKERK V. FABER.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an extension of the return day of a citation. The respondent had left the place where he was residing at the time the previous order was granted, and his exact whereabouts were not known, though it was believed he had returned from Germany to this colony.

B 1

Buchanan, A.C.J., said there was no information as to where the respondent formerly carried on business in the Colony, and as to where the debt was incurred. Publication would depend on this information, and the matter would therefore have to stand over.

Ex parte CHANNING.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan applied for leave to sue by edictal citation. The petitioner's affidavit was to the effect that she married Mathew Channing in 1896, and resided at Cape Town. When the war broke out, her husband joined the army, and had not since rejoined her. She was desirous of suing for restitution of conjugal rights or divorce, and asked permission to sue by edictal citation.

Leave granted to sue by edictal citation, one publication in the "Government Gazette" and one in the "Natal Witness," rule returnable June 30, with leave to serve notice of trial and intendit at the same time.

In Re DUSSEAU AND CO., LTD.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan presented the final report of the liquidator. It was pointed out that some shares had been put down to one Hoogendoorn in error. One hundred shares had been put against him, instead of fifty.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said an order would be granted for publication of the report for fourteen days, after which the other matter could come up.

Ex parte RECEIVER GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAY.

Mr. Uington, on behalf of the Receiver, applied for the issue of a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act. The piece of land in question was acquired by John Walker and Son for the purpose of the railway. The Receiver now claimed same, and that it should be transferred to them for the benefit of the creditors.

Buchanan, A.C.J., pointed out that the matter had been before the Chief Justice in 1904, when His Lordship then made a note to the effect that there was no information before the Court that Amos, in whose name the property was still registered, was dead, mentally incapable, or had left the Colony.

Mr. Uington said he was not instructed as to that.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said the attorneys should have been aware of it, and ordered the matter to stand over for further information as to Amos.

Ex parte PAXTON.

Mr. Watermeyer moved, on behalf of the trustee under an ante-nuptial contract and the parents, for leave to raise £100 loan on a life policy to pay arrears of school fees for the children, and to provide for their future maintenance.

Application granted, the money to be devoted to the payment of the arrears of the school fees, the cost of the application, and the balance to be applied by the trustee for the future school fees in terms of the Master's report.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

TRIAL CAUSE.

VAN DER BYL AND CO. V. { 1905.
AFRICA. } May 16th.

Guarantee—Forged signature.

This was an action to recover £65 0s. 10d. from Cornelius Africa, of Worcester, upon a security given by the defendant on behalf of the son.

The declaration set out that when Cornelius Africa retired from business in 1902, his son, James Africa, took on the business, and the plaintiffs declined to supply the latter unless the father would give a guarantee. This the father ultimately did. The son became insolvent, and the plaintiffs then sued for the amount due by the father as security. The defendant's plea was briefly that his signature on the document was a forgery.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Struben) was for the plaintiffs; Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. Swift) was for the defendant.

P. van der Byl, of Messrs. Van der Byl and Co., Cape Town, stated that after several proposals had been made by the son, witness wrote on the 8th July to the father, who was security, threatening him with proceedings unless a settlement was forthcoming. In reply, Mr. Lindenberg, the attorney, wrote denying that the letter of the 2nd May was ever received, that the father was security, and pointing out that the son was awaiting trial at Cape Town on a charge of forging his father's name to a number of securities.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: He was not bold in asserting that the signature was that of "C. Africa." Personally he had no opportunities himself of judging of the signature. The goods in the grocery shop were supplied by witness, and were rightly the property of James. Afterwards witness got the son to get a deed of guarantee signed by the father. In 1902 the son took over the accounts, when Cornelius ceased to come up to Cape Town. Before the deed of guarantee was signed witness's firm gave James credit.

Re-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness discriminated between the genuine signature of "C. Africa" on a cheque and "C. Africa" written by James in two letters.

Adam Cornelius Neethling, who had formerly been in the employ of James Africa, and witness to a document, identified the signature of "C. Africa," which had been written by the defendant. James held his hand while he signed the paper.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: He did not know that Cornelius had been able to write his name for twenty-five years. He thought it very strange that James held his hand on that occasion. Solomon's signature was already on the paper before the defendant signed it.

Re-examined by Mr. Burton: That was the only document he ever signed.

James William Bain, traveller, in the plaintiff firm, said from time to time during the last four or five years he had seen Cornelius Africa at Worcester. In September, 1902, Cornelius said he would be responsible for the debt of his son, but he did not care to sign any documents. A month or five weeks afterwards witness asked for security, and Cornelius said that he had signed, and that it would be all right.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: On his second visit he did not know that the plaintiffs had already signed a document purporting to bear the signature of Cornelius. After he heard that the document was signed he was prepared to take orders from James.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Cornelius Africa, the defendant, was called, and stated he had lived many years at Worcester, and had been a wagon maker, but gave it up and took a butchery. Later he gave up the butchery owing to ill-health, and advertised that he had done so in the butchery. The son took over the business. When witness had the business he never had any grocery store, but his son had a grocery shop in Napier-street afterwards. Witness remembered Mr. Bain calling, and saying Mr. Van der Byl had sent a message to ask if witness would go surety for his son for grocery. Witness said, "No, Mr. Bain, I have given up all business; my health is too bad, I won't go surety for anything." Witness did not see Mr. Bain afterwards; he only saw Bain once. If Bain said he saw him again with James he did not think it was correct. Witness never told Bain the second time that he had signed the document. The signature was not his. Witness knew Neethling, but it was not true that he signed before him, or that James held his hand. Witness had no share in the business at that time. Witness only received one letter from Van der Byl, that was after his son was arrested. Witness believed it was asking him for money, and he took the letter to Mr. Lindenberg, who answered it. Before witness dealt with Van der Byl, he dealt with other people, and never had any trouble. Before witness retired he had no manager; James worked for him, and witness clothed and fed him.

Cross-examined: James did not manage the business of witness. Witness used to come up to Cape Town himself. When he gave up coming he gave up his business. Witness could not swear that the signature produced was his; it might be. Witness would swear a hundred times that he never met Mr. Bam a second time, or told him that he had signed any security. The evidence of Neethling as to the signing was entirely false. Witness once signed a bill for his son at the bank for £80, but never signed anything else.

Frederick Lindenberg, attorney, of Worcester, said he had done Cornelius Africa's work for many years, and knew his signature. The signature on the guarantee document was not that of defendant; that he was certain of. Witness wrote on behalf of defendant on July 11 to Messrs. Van der Byl repudiating all liability. Defendant could only write his name, as far as witness knew.

Cross-examined: Witness based his opinion of the signatures being false upon the general build of the word, and particularly the largeness of the letter "o" in Africa.

Re-examined: Neethling, a previous witness, told him that four signed the document, and also said that Cornelius could not.

James Africa, a convict at Tokai, undergoing twelve months' imprisonment with hard labour for forgery, stated that he was the son of the defendant. After 1902 witness took on the butchery business. Mr. Bain saw him about a security from his father. On the second occasion Mr. Bain brought a suretyship, on which he required his father's signature. Witness signed the document without his father's authority. The document was signed in the butcher's shop. He intercepted the letter from the plaintiffs to his father. He wrote the letter to the plaintiffs without his father's authority.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: The document he signed in his father's name he took to Mr. Bain. Before his father gave up his business, witness opened the letters, but previously he read them to his father. Neethling's evidence was absolutely false. In one year he had forged his father's name three times.

He had practised the signature carefully.

Japtha Solomon, who signed the document as a witness, stated that when he signed there were no other names on the paper. Witness was told that he was signing for sheep that James would get from the farm. He never saw Cornelius sign the paper.

Mr. McGregor closed his case.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, A.C.J.: Unfortunately, Mr. Van der Byl is not familiarly acquainted with the signature of Cornelius Africa. Although I am satisfied there is a great deal of force in Mr. Lindenberg's statement, I would be sorry to decide this question upon the opinion of a witness as to the authenticity of the signature. On the question of the genuineness of the document there is a serious conflict of evidence. I am not satisfied that Cornelius made any admission to Mr. Bain that he signed the contract. I come to the conclusion, on the evidence, that James had an object in trying to place a spurious document before the plaintiffs, and he obtained the signatures under false pretences. I do not think that the plaintiffs have proved that it is a genuine contract signed by Cornelius Africa. I am quite satisfied it is a forgery on the part of James Africa, and judgment will be given for the defendant, with costs; the defendant declared a necessary witness.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Van der Byl and De Villiers; Defendant's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

TRIAL CAUSE.

ALLAN AND SHAW V. BEN- (1905.
NETT. (May 18th.

This was an action brought by the plaintiffs, who are a limited company, registered in England, and carrying on business in the Cape Colony, against the defendant, a builder, of Wynberg, to recover £263, balance of account for material supplied.

The declaration set out that during January, 1904, and February, 1905, the defendant bought certain building material from the plaintiff's shop at Wynberg, and paid certain instalments, amounting to £54. From time to time particulars were rendered, and on February 15 a complete statement was rendered, showing a balance of £263, for which the action was brought. The plea set out that the defendant had been overcharged on certain items, and some of the goods charged had never been delivered. It was also pleaded that a verbal arrangement had been entered into by which the defendant was to pay by instalments from time to time. He was willing to pay £251 by instalments, as had been arranged. The replication admitted the arrangement as to instalments, but that was confined to another building which had been completed, and it was understood, if the instalments were not paid at the specified times, the whole amount would fall due.

The defendant, in reply to His Lordship, said it was never agreed that on failure to pay the instalment the whole amount could be called up.

Mr. Close was for the plaintiffs and the defendant in person.

H. J. Ross, manager of the plaintiff company, stated that at the end of each month the defendant was furnished with a detailed account. In October last the defendant called to make an arrangement about getting further credit, and on the first of that month he owed the firm £39 6s. 3d. There was no arrangement whatever previous to that. In October, Allan agreed to give the defendant credit to the amount of £250, and witness heard Allan come to an agreement with the defendant that the latter was to pay off £100 on the completion of the building, for which he required the material, and to pay £10 a month thereafter. The defendant did not pay the £100 or the £10 a month, as arranged upon.

Cross-examined by defendant: Witness could not show where the defendant used the 9-foot columns, which he said had been supplied to the defendant. As far as his recollection went, the four columns were not returned. The defendant could not have used the columns on his buildings. Everything was charged to the Wynberg firm at cost price landed in Cape Town, but the head office put on 10 per cent. to cover handling, etc. Witness would not say that Wynberg had to make up any loss sustained in Cape Town. Witness was positive that the defendant agreed to pay £10 a month, but he was not present when the arrangement was made that the whole amount became due on the failure to pay instalments. It was true that after the conversation with Mr. Allan the defendant said he would be able to pay the £100 if a bond went through. Witness would not care to express an opinion as to whether the case would never have come into the Court if the matter had been left in his hands.

Robert Allan, managing director of Allan and Shaw, Ltd., stated that in October last the defendant was referred to him with a view to extended credit.

Witness agreed to give him £250 credit to enable him to build two villas. The arrangement was that as soon as the houses were completed he would pay £100 down and £10 a month after the new year, when he expected the houses would have been completed. When witness asked for the £100 the defendant used insulting language, and defied witness to take action. It was made clear to the defendant that if he failed to pay the instalments of £10 a month, the whole amount would become due.

Cross-examined by the defendant: Witness did not suggest that the £10 should be paid every month on a subsequent occasion. The £10 a month was to be paid through Thos. Hazel, of Cape Town.

Defendant: Are you a business man?

Witness: I hope so.

Why didn't you reduce that to black and white?—I can't say.

You are not a business man; you never were one.—That's your opinion; we don't require black and white from some of our customers.

The defendant went into the box, and stated that it was true that he promised a £100 if a bond went through, which, however, did not take place. There was no agreement about the amount falling due, if witness failed to pay the instalments. The 8 ft. columns were returned for some 9 ft. ones.

[Maasdorp, J.: Why don't you pay the £100?]

Defendant: I had not got it. I have been always willing to come to an agreement.

Mr. Close said Mr. Allan was still willing to accept the £100, and £10 a month.

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff sues the defendant upon an account for goods sold and delivered. This account is partly disputed by the defendant, who denies that he received certain articles mentioned in the account. These articles are four columns, said to be supplied by the plaintiff to the defendant, to be used in the building of his houses. It appears quite clear that these columns were sent on the order of Mr. Bennett to the buildings which he was busy erecting. He discovered that the columns were unsuitable, and I am satisfied, upon the documentary evidence, that the columns were not used by Mr. Bennett, and Mr. Ross is not prepared to swear that these columns did not come back. Under the circumstances the account must be altered by striking out the items dealing with the columns. The defendant also objects to a couple of other items as over charges made at Wynberg, but that he ought to have considered that when he had his dealings with the firm, and I think these items must be allowed to stand. With reference to the rest of the account the defendant admits that he owes the money, but he says that a special arrangement was made by which the parties agreed that £100 should be paid upon his being successful in certain speculations, and that the rest was to be paid by instalments, without reference to amount or time when these instalments should fall due. The plaintiff says there was a definite arrangement that £100 was to be paid on the completion of the building, in respect of which the goods were supplied, and thereafter there should be a monthly payment of £10, and in the event of his failing to pay either the £100 or these instalments, that the whole amount should fall due. On the part of the plaintiffs, here we have a clear, definite, business-like agreement, which the Court can put into force, whereas the defendant's agreement is of such a vague character, and its conditions are so uncertain, that it is not really a contract which could be regarded as binding on the parties. There must, in my opinion, be a period when the creditor could enforce payment, and I do not believe that the matter should be left over to the discretion of the debtor. On the whole it has been proved to my satisfaction that there was a definite agreement made in the terms of the statement put before the Court by Mr. Allan. The buildings were completed in January, and Mr. Bennett failed to pay, and the plaintiff was entitled to claim the whole of the indebtedness. I can only now give judgment in favour of the plaintiff for the amount of his claim, and leave it to the parties to make such other arrangements as it seems, upon the offer now made by the plaintiff, they might be well able to. Judgment will be for the plaintiff, less £7 10s. for the columns, with costs. The amount of the judgment will be £254 4s. 7d.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

ESTATE DAVIDS V. DAVIDS. { 1905.
(May 18th.

This was an application upon notice of motion calling upon the respondent, Jacobus Davids, to show cause why an order of personal attachment should not be issued against him for contempt of Court in neglecting to sign the necessary declaration to enable the applicant to obtain a certified copy of a certain deed of transfer of property situate in Jordaan-street, Cape Town, the original having been lost or mislaid.

The affidavit of Mr. W. A. Currey, the executor dative, stated that the certified copy of the deed was required to enable him to close and administer the affairs of the estate. The respondent was married in community to his wife, who had died intestate. The property was registered in the respondent's name. The heirs in the estate claimed that the property should be put up by public auction, so that they might take their shares. Counsel also read affidavits by two of the heirs, daughters of the late Mrs. Davids, by a previous marriage.

The answering affidavit of the respondent denied that he had refused to sign the declaration or to obey the order of the Court. He was quite willing, he said, to make a declaration of facts within his knowledge, but he declined to make a declaration of facts beyond his knowledge, as he had been asked to do, and he also declined to say that the said deed was lost by him. He denied that he was assuming, as had been alleged by the executor, a defiant attitude, and said he was willing to assist the petitioner in the administration of the estate. He objected, however, to a forced sale in the present circumstances, but was willing to sign for the sale of the property at a reasonable figure, seeing that he was interested as to one half. He did not object to signing a power of attorney, but up to the present no sale had been effected. He had been away at Caledon, hence some delay had taken place.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the applicant (the executor dative); Mr. Alexander was for the respondent.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that there was no contempt on the part of the respondent, and the application would be refused with costs.

POLICANSKY BROS. V. HERMANN AND CANARD.

Trade mark—Colourable imitation—Interdict.

This was an application for an interdict restraining the respondents from using a label or cover for cigarettes called "Sultan's Specials," the same being an infringement of the trade-mark registered by the applicants.

The affidavit of Philip Policansky stated that the label "Sultan's Specials" was a colourable imitation of the registered trademark used by the applicant firm called "Sultan's Favourites." The deponent said that the respondents had taken up this attitude because of an unsuccessful application formerly brought by them against the present applicants for an alleged infringement of trade-mark.

Mr. Burton for applicant; Mr. Gutsche for respondent.

[Buchanan, A.C.J. (to Mr. Burton):
You have not a sole right to the use of the word "Sultan"?]

No, my lord; we say that the whole get-up is a colourable imitation of our trade-mark, and calculated to deceive the public. Counsel went on to point out that his clients formerly obtained an interdict against a third party (Wolf and Miller v. Smit) (11 C.T.R. 533) for infringement of their trade-mark by a label called "Sultan's Beauties," and he submitted that if there was an infringement in that case, there was much more of an infringement in the matter now in question. He also read an affidavit by Alexander Gromer, who said that he had called at a shop in Caledon-street for the purpose of purchasing "Sultan's Favourites," and had, owing to the get-up of the cover, been deceived into buying "Sultan's Specials."

The answering affidavit of Raphael Hermann, one of the respondents, said he denied that the trade-mark used by his firm was an infringement of the applicants' trade-mark. As to the former case in regard to "Sultan's Beauties," he pointed out that the respondents in that matter were not registered proprietors of the mark. He claimed that his firm, being the registered proprietors of the trade-mark, were entitled to use the label now disputed.

Counsel were heard in argument.

Mr. Burton submitted that there was such an identity between the two marks as to deceive the public.

Mr. Gutscho contended that the labels were by no means similar, and that there was a greater divergence of labels in the present instance than in the former case heard in March last.

Buchanan, A. C. J.: Both the applicant and respondent have registered trademarks in which they use the word "Sultan," but this application is based solely on the allegation that the label used for the cigarettes of the respondents is a colourable imitation of the label used by the applicants. The applicants had been before the Court on several occasions. In one case in 1901 an interdict was granted against the use by certain respondents of a label imitating the one in question in this case. In that case the only difference between the labels was that the word "Beauties" was used instead of "Favourites." The applicants had "Sultan's Favourites," the respondents had "Sultan's Beauties." In several respects the labels were identical. It was then held that the one was a colourable imitation of the other, and an interdict was granted. In the present case the two labels seem to me to be by no means similar, and not at all likely to deceive an intending purchaser. In the first place the colour is different, and, as his lordship, the Chief Justice, remarked in the case before him recently, there is no monopoly of colour. Then the words, "Sultan's Favourites" in the applicants' labels are printed differently from the words "Sultan's Specials" in the respondents' labels. Then there are other respects in which the labels are dissimilar. I think it would be going very far indeed to say that the one label is a colourable imitation of the other, and likely to deceive even the most ordinary purchaser. Using my own common sense in the matter, I cannot see any colourable imitation, and I think the application must be refused, with costs. I am strengthened in this position when I look at the case which came before his lordship the Chief Justice in August last, Rosebank Match Co. v. Jonkopings Vulcans (14 C.T.R. 616), because although there was greater similarity between the two labels in that case, his lordship refused to make an order.

STEVENSON V. CAPE TOWN { 1905.
LICENSING COURT. { May 19th.
 { July 14th.

Liquor licence—Magistrate's discretion—Withholding of certificate.

S. had applied for a new liquor licence in respect of certain premises, and the licence was granted. The Magistrate withheld his certificate on the ground that some of the signatures to the petition were forgeries.

Held, that as after the forged names were struck off, there was still a majority in favour of the licence, the Magistrate was bound to grant his certificate.

This was an application upon notice of motion addressed to the Resident Magistrate of Cape Town, calling upon him to show cause why he should not forthwith issue and deliver to the applicants the certificate required to enable them to take out a licence to sell intoxicating liquors on the premises called Annandale Hall and Kimberley House, situate at Gardens, Cape Town.

Mr. Molteno was for the applicant; Mr. Nightingale appeared for the Attorney-General.

The affidavit of Harry Stevenson, the applicant, set out the proceedings which had led up to the present state of things. He had been granted a licence in the ordinary course, but the Magistrate refused to deliver to him the necessary certificate.

The answering affidavit of Mr. J. T. Wylde, R.M. of Cape Town, said that the memorial deposited by the applicant bore 1,067 signatures. Forty had been discovered up to that time to have been forgeries, and the total number of voters whose names appeared more than once in the memorial was 74, thus reducing the number of signatures to 953, which number did not represent a majority in the district as required by the Act. Under the circumstances he deemed it his duty not to issue a certificate.

The replying affidavit of the applicant said that the number of bona fide signatures on the memorial was 1,067.

Mr. Molteno (for applicant): When once the Licensing Court has decided to grant a licence the Magistrate has no option as to furnishing the necessary certificate. He is a mere conduit pipe for the granting of the licence. This is neither an appeal nor an application for review, but simply an application for an order to compel the Magistrate to perform a statutory duty. The persons who signed twice were registered twice in respect of different properties. We have the decision of the Licensing Court, and the Magistrate is bound to act upon it.

Mr. Nightingale (for the Attorney-General) pointed out that a man was to be tried at the next Criminal Sessions on a charge of having forged some of the signatures to the petition.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The application had better stand over till the first provisional day after the Criminal Sessions.

Postea (July 14).

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

The applicant's affidavit stated that at the meeting of the Licensing Court on the 1st March last, presided over by the respondent, he made application for a retail licence to sell intoxicating liquors at his premises, known as Annandale Hall and Kimberley House, which application was granted. On the 1st April he applied to the clerk to the Resident Magistrate for a certificate signed by the Resident Magistrate, as required by the Director of Stamps before issuing licences, and was informed by him that the certificate had been made out, but that, by orders from the Attorney-General, he was not to issue the same. Subsequently correspondence ensued between deponent's attorneys and the Attorney-General's Department.

The answering affidavit of the respondent stated that the total number of voters on the Council's roll for District No. 4, where the premises were situated, was 1,999. The number of signatures, passed as correct by the Resident Magistrate's Court official, on the said memorial was 1,067. Of these 1,067 signatures, 40 were discovered to have been forgeries up to the present, and the number of voters whose names appeared more than once in the memorial amounted to 74, thereby reducing the number of signatures to 953, which number did not represent a majority of voters in the district, as required by the Act. Deponent communicated these facts to the Attorney-General, and advised that, under the circumstances, a licence should not be issued, except by order of the Supreme Court. Counsel also read an affidavit by Claude Miles, a head constable of the urban police, giving the results of the investigation up to that stage. Counsel added that, since the application was first mentioned to the Court, an agent named Samuels, who had been collecting signatures, had been prosecuted for forgery in respect of eight signatures, and had been found guilty and sentenced. No proceedings had been taken against the other canvassers, who were no longer in the Colony. Counsel had 35 affidavits of persons who said their signatures had been forged.

The replying affidavit of the applicant said that the memorial originally contained about 1,500 signatures, but those who were not voters and those whose names appeared on the memorial twice had been deducted, leaving a total of 1,067 bona fide signatures. The affidavit of Mr. Buyskes, a canvasser employed by the applicant, said that the list of bona fide signatures disclosed a majority of 69 in favour of the licence. The officials acting for the Government had omitted to strike off the voters' list those who had been placed on the list twice, or who were dead, or who had left Cape Town before the list was issued. After deducting the number of those who were absent from Cape Town, or who were dead, or who had been placed twice on the list, the total number of voters left would be 1,929; consequently the majority, as required by the Act, would be 965. There were originally 1,516 names on the memorial. Taking away the non-voters who had signed the memorial (378) and persons who had signed more than once (131), there remained 1,007 signatures. Of these, 39 were alleged to be forgeries, thus leaving 968 genuine signatures. In a further affidavit, Mr. Buyskes said that he had made inquiries in order to ascertain the number of deceased persons on the Divisional Council voters' list for 1904 (District No. 4). All the persons named in the schedule (b) annexed were dead, with the exception of five (including one of the judges of the Colony). Amongst the deceased persons aforesaid, seven signed the memorial during their lifetime. Taking Head Constable Miles's figures of 1,067, and deducting 74 signatures for duplicates and 38 for forgeries, they had left 955. According to his (Buyskes) investigations, after deducting non-voters, forgeries, and duplicate names, there remained 1,026 signatures. The number of names on the voters' list for 1904 was actually 1,999, the names appearing twice were 60, and the names of deceased voters were 27, leaving a total of 1,912. Adding to these the voters who signed the memorial prior to their death, the total would be 1,919, so that the majority, as required by the Act, would be 960. There was therefore a majority of 66 bona fide signatures. Deponent further stated that, as regarded the alleged forgeries, affidavits had been sworn by three persons who were not on the voters' roll, and by one who had not signed the memorial. The number of signatures, therefore, should be increased by four in favour of the applicant.

Mr. Burton, for the applicant, said that the Act said that when a licence was granted by the Licensing Court, the Magistrate must give a certificate. The Magistrate was bound as a necessary consequence to give a certificate, and could not go behind that decision of the Court. Applicant claimed to have a majority, even on respondent's showing it was a very near thing. If the Court thought the matter should be gone into, he would suggest that a competent and impartial person should go through the memorial in the presence of the parties, and find out how many genuine, proper signatures there were on the memorial, and whether they constituted a majority.

Mr. Evans, for the Attorney-General, contended that this was in effect an application to this Court for a licence. The Act required that there must be a memorial signed by a majority of the voters before a licence should be granted, and he submitted that it was now for the applicant to clearly prove to the Court that the memorial did in fact contain a majority. If the Government discovered that there were circumstances not in the knowledge of the Licensing Court, which constituted a contravention of the law, he contended it was their duty to step in and prevent a breach of the law. It had been proved that after deducting the forged and duplicated names, the requisite majority had not been obtained. He suggested that the most equitable course would be to refer the whole matter back to the Licensing Court to go into again.

Mr. Burton, in reply, urged that the Supreme Court was being asked by the respondent to go behind the decision of the Licensing Court. The want of a majority of voters as signatories to the memorial had not been proved by the other side. There must be a scrutiny. The Court was now asked to do the very work which the Magistrate under the Act ought to have done. The position seemed to him (counsel) to be preposterous.

Maasdorp, J.: It appears that the Licensing Court held its sitting, and determined all the questions submitted to it, and came to the conclusion that the applicant was entitled to his licence. The Magistrate, however, refused to grant a certificate upon grounds which will have to be decided under section 13 of the Act 25 of 1891. It is there provided that if an application is for a new licence it shall not be lawful for the Licensing Court to grant such licence unless there be lodged with the Magistrate of the district, at least four days before the meeting of the Licensing Court to consider the application, a memorial signed by a majority of the voters registered for the election of members of the Divisional Council within the Divisional Council district, the municipality, or the ward or district of the municipality, approving of the issue of the said licence. The ground taken by the Magistrate in this matter is that there has been no such majority of the voters as is required by this section. It appears that at the time when the application was made the Magistrate had to ascertain whether such a majority existed, and he came to the conclusion, after scrutinising the memorials and the list of voters, that a majority of voters had appended their signatures to the memorials. He informed the Licensing Court of that, and upon that ground the Licensing Court granted their certificate that the licence should be issued. It is contended now that, subsequently to the Licensing Court coming to that decision it has been discovered that a majority of voters did not sign the memorials. It is said that, amongst the signatures, there were 38 forgeries, and that to that extent the names on the memorials should be reduced. I am of opinion clearly that that must be done. It has been clearly proved that the number of names on the memorials must be reduced by 38. Counsel for the applicant in this matter has admitted that the applicant cannot take advantage of forged signatures. On the other hand, I am of opinion that these forged signatures must be struck off the list. There is no proof that the applicant himself was responsible for the forgeries having been committed, and the forgeries should not operate to his prejudice. It is quite clear that, under the Act, memorials may be got up without the intervention of the applicant for a licence. But, after striking off the thirty-eight names, it would appear that there is still upon the memorials a majority of voters in favour of the issuing of the licence. The Magistrate, however, contends that he has now discovered that 74 of those names appear twice, and, as a matter of course, the names must be reduced by that number. Now, the question arises whether that reduction reduces the majority to a minority. In my opinion, if it were quite clear upon the evidence before this Court, that the supposed majority has now been reduced to a minority, the Court would not help the applicant, because the section provides that it shall not be lawful for the Licensing Court to grant a licence unless there is the approval of the majority, and if this Court had now evidence that there is no such approval, the Court would not compel, with full knowledge of that circumstance, the Court below or any officer of that Court to commit an illegality. But the question arises now, has it been proved that the majority has been reduced to a minority? I take it that, at the time when the application was considered, the whole of the evidence was gone into; all the facts upon which the decision had to be come to were determined, and, amongst other things, it was determined by the Court below that memorials were in order. In so far as the memorials are not in order in respect of the forgeries, so far the memorials must be set right. But when the question arises, whether in reducing the names by 74, which appear twice on the memorials, the majority is reduced to a minority, certain matters have now to be taken into consideration, which the Magistrate has not taken into consideration. It is not now attempted to set aside the judgment, the question is not now before the Court, whether the judgment was correctly arrived at upon the evidence that was before it, but the judgment stands, and the judgment must be considered to be given on good and sufficient grounds, and the presumption is in favour of that judgment, until there is most absolutely clear proof that that judgment is wrong. Now, I have come to the conclusion that there are certain circumstances which the Magistrate did not take into consideration, which affects his opinion that the majority had been reduced to a minority. He takes the number of voters at 1,999, because that number appears on the roll and he is clearly proved to be wrong, because undoubtedly a number of these voters have died since the list was made out. Consequently, that basis upon which he went is erroneous. With respect to some of the names, if not all of them, which have been mentioned, it would appear that the names of some voters appear more than once upon the roll. Here again, the list of total voters must be reduced, and I am not satisfied, if this list be properly reduced in the manner suggested in Mr. Buyskes' affidavit, that there will now be a minority of voters, instead of a majority in favour of the issue of the licence, even though the 38 forgeries and the 74 duplicate voters have been removed. Under these circumstances, I think the judgment ought to stand, because there is no clear evidence upon which to refuse to allow it to stand. The Court is asked to enforce it by granting an order upon the Magistrate to give effect to it by issuing his certificate. It appears to me, upon my reading of this Act, that the issue of a certificate is contemplated. Who exactly is to sign that, and what the practice is with reference to making out the list, which is sent to the Magistrate, and making out certificates, is not very clear, but I think that the Court will meet the requirements of the case by deciding that the applicant is entitled to his licence, and that he is entitled to receive the necessary documents from the Magistrate. I do not think, after that, there will be any difficulty in obtaining what the applicant requires. The Court will declare that he is entitled to the certificate required.

HEYDENRYCH V. THE TRUS- { 1905.
TEE OF MACKIE, YOUNG { May 19th.
AND CO. AND ANOTHER. { „ 25th.

Insolvency--Preferent and concurrent creditors--Rights of cessionary of a general covering bond.

In 1901, C. & Co. agreed to support M. & Co., on the latter firm passing a general covering bond in their favour. C. & Co. supplied goods to M. & Co. from time to time, for which the latter gave acceptances. Subsequently C. & Co. discounted some of these with the Standard Bank, and on December 12th, 1902, ceded to the Bank the said covering bond as security for the acceptances discounted. In 1904, when the estate of M. & Co. was sequestrated, all their current acceptances in the hands of the Bank were of date later than December 12th, 1902. The Bank claimed that debts due on these acceptances were preferent, and the Master having admitted the claim, the trustee filed a liquidation and distribution account accordingly. The petitioner now applied for this to be amended by treating the said debts as concurrent.

Held, that as the Bank held the bond as security for all the paper of M. & Co. discounted by C. & Co., whether before or after the cession, the application must be refused.

This was an application calling upon the respondents to show cause why the account and plan of distribution in the insolvent estate of Mackie, Young and Co., should not be amended.

The circumstances, as disclosed by the affidavits, were that the trustee of the insolvent estate admitted as a preferent claim, a claim by the Standard Bank under a bond for £5,000. In 1902, the firm of Mackie, Young and Co. entered into an agreement with Messrs. Creswell, Sons and Co., who agreed to give them financial assistance in consideration of receiving a bond for £5,000, to cover advances made by them on behalf of Mackie, Young and Co., for the purchase of goods ordered by the last-named firm. Messrs. Creswell ceded the bond to the Standard Bank in 1892, and subsequently the applicant was given covering bonds, against which property was specially hypothecated. Another covering bond was issued to Creswell and Co. for £3,000 and this was ceded to the bank in 1903. Most of the advances on the covering bonds to the bank were made subsequent to the cession. The question to be decided was whether the bank's claim was preferent or concurrent, and applicant claimed that it should be regarded as concurrent.

Mr. Burton was for the applicant; Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the respondents, Mr. H. Hands, trustee in the insolvent estate and the Standard Bank of South Africa.

Mr. Burton contended that the bank could only claim for the amount of the advances prior to the cession. The cessionary acquired the rights of the mortgagor, and upon the cession there was a cessation of the obligation to advance further moneys. He submitted that the bank was only entitled to preference to the extent of advances made prior to the date of cession.

Mr. Searle argued that if the cessionary at any time while the bond was in force made advances in respect of obligations owing by the original mortgagor, then the cessionary could prove preferently. It was broadly laid down in the authorities that the cessionary held the same rights as the cedent. This was the ordinary banking practice, and he contended the Court must have a clear, definite authority before declaring such a practice illegal.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (May 25th).

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The second named respondents, the Standard Bank, claimed as preferent creditors on the insolvent estate of Mackie, Young and Co., in respect of certain acceptances secured by a notarial general bond duly registered on the 23rd April, 1901. This claim was admitted by the Master, and the first named respondent, the trustee of the estate, has now filed his liquidation distribution account, in which he has awarded the bank preference on the proceeds of the property not subject to any special hypothecation. The applicant, who holds several bonds registered subsequently to the respondents' bond, has applied to have the distribution account amended so as to award to him under the general clause in his bonds the preference which the trustee has awarded to the bank. To understand the relative position of the parties it is necessary to consider the facts disclosed on the affidavits. From these it appears that early in the year 1901, Messrs. Creswell, Sons and Co., a London firm, agreed with Messrs. Mackie, Young and Co., who carried on business in Cape Town, to open a supporting account upon Mackie, Young and Co., passing in their favour the general bond in question, covering present and future transactions. The validity of this bond is not questioned. Under this security Creswell and Co. supplied goods from time to time, for the price of which Mackie, Young and Co. gave acceptances. Later on, Creswell and Co. discounted some of these drafts with the Standard Bank ceding to them the covering bond in question. The date of cession was the 12th December, 1902, and is in terms absolute. But it is clear from the affidavits and the subsequent dealings of the parties that the bond was held by the bank as security for the paper discounted, and that Creswell and Co. were entitled to the return of the bond when their liability to the bank on the acceptances discounted were discharged. This especially appears from the fact that subsequently when negotiations took place between Creswell and Co. and Gardiner and Co. to take over Mackie, Young and Co.'s account, Creswell and Co. directed the bank to hold the bond at disposal of Gardiner and Co. on their discharging Mackie, Young and Co.'s liabilities on their drafts in favour of Creswell and Co. These negotiations fell through, and the bond was retained by the bank. When Mackie, Young and Co.'s estate was sequestrated in 1904, their acceptances then current were all of date subsequent to the 12th December, 1902, the date of the cession to the bank. These acceptances were at the time under discount with the bank, who had recurrence thereon against Cresswell and Co. Holding these acceptances, as well as the bond, the bank proved them on the estate, claiming the preference now in question. The applicant does not object to the proof of the bank, his case being that it should rank as a concurrent and not a preferent claim. Applicant's counsel freely admitted that had Cresswell and Co. never ceded the bond, but had retained possession of it, and had themselves proved for the outstanding acceptances, they would have been entitled to the preference, but he contended that in the hands of the bank the bond only secured preference for such bills as were in the bank at the date of cession. This contention, if I understand counsel's argument correctly, was founded on the proposition that the bank, not being an original party to the bond, could not tack on the debt due to Cresswell and Co. at the time of the cession, and then transferred to the bank a debt subsequently incurred to the bank itself. The doctrine of tacking of claims is certainly not recognised by our law, and the applicant's contention might have had some force if the bank had claimed a preference for debts incurred by the insolvents directly to the bank subsequently to the cession. But there were no transactions between Mackie, Young and Co. and the Bank. On the cession of the bond to the bank, Cresswell and Co. did not close their account with Mackie, Young and Co., but continued the course of business agreed upon when the bond was passed. These very transactions were what the bond was given to secure, and they are represented by the acceptances in question, and it is common cause that had Cresswell and Co. retained the bond in their possession they could have claimed a preference for them. In the case of London and South African Bank v. Trustees of Gates (5 Searle, 246), it was argued by counsel for the successful party that where promissory notes in the hands of third persons were secured by a registered bond, the holders of the bond could be compelled to prove for such liabilities, and to hold the amount recovered as trustee for the creditor holding the notes. It does not appear from the report whether or not the Court adopted this view, but it is not necessary to go so far in this case, as the bank holds both the acceptances and the bond which was given with the object of securing them. For the financing of their business, Cresswell and Co. discounted with the bank the acceptances they received from Mackie, Young and Co., and handed the bond to the bank just as they might have handed over any other securities they might have had in their possession. I fail to see how the fact that some of these acceptances were discounted by Cresswell and Co. at the time of the cession, and others were discounted subsequently, could relieve Mackie, Young and Co. from their obligations under the bond. The cession of the bond to the bank did not give them a discharge of their debts. As the bond covered the subsequent transactions, and was valid as against Mackie, Young and Co., I see no ground for holding that their insolvent estate can be placed in a better position than they themselves were in. The very object of the bond was to secure a preference in the event of insolvency. The registration of the bond was notice to the applicant that he was dealing with persons who had secured their supporters in business for past debts as well as for future advances, which security would give the supporters a preference should insolvency intervene; and with this notice before him the applicant became a creditor, and now insolvency has intervened. Under these circumstances, in my opinion this application must be refused, with costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

ROSEN V. EARLS AND } 1905.
SCHMITZ. } May. 19th.

Mr. Gardiner moved, as a matter of urgency, for an order for the delivery and restoration of certain furniture and goods set out in a schedule attached to a hire purchase agreement. From the affidavit of Mr. Andrew Carmichael, a bookkeeper in Mr. Rosen's employ, it appeared that certain furniture was supplied to Earls under a hire purchase agreement when he was proprietor of the Mount Pleasant Hotel, Reform-street. The instalments had been paid as they had become due except as to the rent for April, £5, which had not been paid. Deponent had ascertained on the 10th instant that the respondent Earls had left the hotel and handed over possession of the furniture to Schmitz. Earls had disposed of the furniture to Schmitz in violation of the agreement. An offer had been made by the applicants to allow the furniture to be transferred to Schmitz in consideration of his paying in cash the balance owing of £32 9s. 2d. From the correspondence it transpired that the respondent Earls said that he had not handed over possession of the furniture to Schmitz and he denied that the goods had really passed out of his custody. Deponent (Carmichael) said that he had applied for leave to inspect the goods, but this had been refused by Schmitz. The total value of the goods, added counsel, was £46 9s. 2d.

The respondent Schmitz, who appeared in person, produced a document showing that he had purchased all the movables from Earls. He objected to the applicant coming to his premises for the purpose of removing them.

Maasdorp, J., said that the Court would give the respondent an opportunity of appearing before the Court again, if he had a case, though he did not see that he had got a case. The parties, however, might come to a settlement before a further order of Court was made and in the meantime an interdict would be granted restraining Schmitz from parting with the property, pending a further order of the Court and directing Schmitz to allow the applicant to inspect the property, question of costs to stand over.

Ex parte D'ATH.

Mr. Gardiner moved for leave to mortgage certain property in order to pay off the debts of the estate. The petitioner was co-executor with Mr. Steytler in the estate of his late wife, who had formerly been married to Charles Elliott, with whom she drew up a mutual will, the terms of which were that the survivor should inherit the property, with the exception of the provision of £1,000 for the children, and that the property, including certain property at Diep River, should not be sold until the youngest child attained the age of 21. The petitioner and his wife made a mutual will, making the children heirs to all the property, subject to a life interest in favour of the survivor. There was a considerable amount of landed property, but the rents were not sufficient to pay the debts and expenses, and to provide for the children. The original application had been to sell certain property, and it had been ordered to stand over for a report from Mr. Steytler, who now expressed his opposition to selling any property owing to the depressed state of the market, and recommended that the property at Wynberg and Muizenberg, which was valued at £9,575, should be mortgaged to the extent of £1,250. Counsel said that he thought Mr. Steytler must have included the property at Mowbray, otherwise the valuation of the other two properties had been wrongly entered.

Maasdorp, J., granted an order in terms of Mr. Steytler's recommendation, the order to be amended to include the Mowbray property, if Mr. Steytler intended it.

GRASSICK V. B.S.A. ASPHALT CO.

Practice—Default of plea - Setting aside of judgment.

Although it is not necessary to give notice of a set down for judgment to a defendant who has been barred, it is competent for the Court to set aside the judgment upon the defendant giving good reasons for his default and showing that he has a prima facie ground of defence.

This was an application upon notice of motion calling on the respondent to show cause why a certain writ of attachment should not be set aside or the sale postponed in accordance with a judgment given in the Supreme Court on the 27th April, 1905, at the suit of the plaintiff, by reason of the defendants' default of plea, and why the defendants should not be allowed to reopen their case and defend their action. The affidavit of Harry Davis, secretary of the B.S.A. Company, set out that the defendants contracted with the City Corporation for tar pavement at the Early Morning Market. The plaintiff engaged to do certain piece work to the satisfaction of the City Engineer, who, however, condemned the work, and the plaintiff was ordered to cease work. The work had to be redone by the company. By reason of the delay in doing the work the company did not know the exact amount of their counter claim until the 18th April. Defendants were barred on the 19th April, and owing to the intervening four holidays and the pressure at the Supreme Court the matter did not come on until 26th April, and the following morning, without notice, judgment was taken out against them by default. The company was never served with a notice of set down. The company had good grounds of defence, and had a bona fide counter claim. The applicants were willing to pay the amount of the judgment into Court, and to pay any wasted costs if allowed to reopen their case. The amount of the judgment was £160 and the counter claim amounted to £213.

Mr. Jones put in an answering affidavit, which set out that the plaintiff was working for the defendants, and that the engineer had nothing to do with the work beyond the condition that it was to be carried out according to his measurements. He denied that he was requested to cease work, but, on the other hand, he refused to carry out the work unless he had money to pay his labourers. The plaintiff did not believe the company had got a bona fide claim; they were merely trying to gain time, and he had reason to believe further that they intended going into liquidation.

Mr. Upington put in a replying affidavit from the secretary, in which he denied in toto the allegations of the plaintiff.

Mr. Upington for the applicants (defendants in the action). Mr. P. S. T. Jones for the respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Maasdorp, J.: It seems to me that the plaintiff in this case complied with the conditions of the Rules of Court before he obtained judgment, and consequently he obtained his judgment in due course. The defendant was barred from pleading, and, in my opinion, after he was so barred there was no necessity under the rule of the plaintiff giving the defendant notice that the case was to be set down for judgment. But I think that judgment, having been obtained, it is within the discretion of the Court to set it aside upon the defendant satisfying the Court that there was some good reason for his default, and that he has a prima facie cause of defence, although it does not quite clearly appear that all the necessary steps were vigilantly taken by the defendant in these proceedings. I think some good explanation has been given, which accounts for his default in this matter, and the Court would therefore consider further whether he has given prima facie grounds for a defence. It seems to me that the dispute is a bona fide dispute, and it did not arise after the action brought by the plaintiff. The defendants were dissatisfied at the work performed by the plaintiff, and did not consider themselves liable for the full amount of his claim. Under all the circumstances the Court will set aside the judgment, and allow the defendant to purge his default and to plead upon the plaintiff being fully secured in the amount of his judgment in case he shall be hereafter successful. The defendant to pay into Court the amount of this judgment, and to pay the costs which have been incurred in consequence of their default. The judgment will be set aside, the defendant allowed to purge his default, and to pay into Court £162 3s. 6d. to abide the judgment of the Court, and to pay costs incurred by his default, and costs of this motion.

Respondent's: A. J. McCallum.]

DUNLOP V. UNION CLAN LINE.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., for the defendants, moved for the appointment of a commission to take the evidence of defendants' witnesses in New York. Mr. Burton, for the plaintiff, consented on condition that the commission be a joint one. Sir H. Juta suggested, as commissioner, the British Consul at New York.

Order appointing a commission granted, the British Consul at New York to act as commissioner.

In re THE ESTATE STEER.

Mr. Gutsche applied for an amendment of a recent order by the insertion of the word "unsecured." The order allowed certain property to be mortgaged for the sum of £800, in order to pay the liabilities, and counsel now moved for the alteration to make it read "unsecured liabilities."

Granted.

Ea parte THE LIQUIDATORS, BUFFALO SUPPLY AND COLD STORAGE CO.

Mr. Burton moved as a matter of urgency for the removal of one of the official liquidators of the company, Christopher Robertson, who had absconded with some of the funds of the company. Robertson had since written saying that he had taken the money as remuneration for his services. The other liquidators could do nothing without Robertson's signature.

A rule nisi was granted, calling on Robertson to shew cause why he should not be removed from the office of liquidator, returnable June 8, to be served personally, if possible, and in case of default, one publication in the "Gazette," and one in a Ploemfontein paper, authority in the meanwhile given to the two liquidators to act in the liquidation. The usual order of inspection of the report made, publication in a paper in Cape Town and East London.

Postea (June 8th).

Mr. Burton moved on behalf of the official liquidators of the Buffalo Supply and Cold Storage Company (Messrs. H. M. Fleming and J. Power), for the removal of one of their co-liquidators, Christopher Robertson, from his office. Counsel said that he had already presented a report of the liquidators to the Court, and that report was now lying for inspection. Paragraph 15 said that Robertson, about the middle of April, left East London, and in consequence of certain information, Mr. Fleming (who drew up the report) went to East London, and, as a result of inquiries, had found that Robertson had absconded, and had misappropriated certain of the company's funds. Part of that money had been received during voluntary liquidation, and part afterwards. The total amount so misappropriated, as far as had been ascertained, would amount to less than £150. A letter had since been received from Robertson, written from Bloemfontein, saying that the funds so taken by him had been applied towards payment of remuneration, due to him in connection with the liquidation. He went on to say that he was without means, or he should have entered an appearance to reply to some of the statements in the report which he thought unreasonable and unnecessarily harsh. Counsel asked for the removal of Robertson from office, and a direction that he should receive no remuneration for his services. He also asked on behalf of the liquidators for an order by the Court, as to a claim for £150 by Mr. Lawrence Wray for rent to rank as preferent.

Order granted for the removal of Robertson from office, and Mr. Wray's claim to rank as preferent.

His Lordship said that the matter of Robertson's remuneration could be dealt with when the question of remuneration to all the liquidators came before the Court.

ESTATE DAVIDSON V. AURET.

This matter came before the Chief Justice in January last, and a judgment, although not of a final nature, was given. His Lordship referred the matter back to the Resident Magistrate for further information on certain points (15 C.T.R. 21). The original application was to have a certain proof of debt filed by the respondent expunged. Davidson had borrowed £300 from the respondent, and an agreement on which the money was borrowed was to the effect that Aurret was to have the right to inspect all the books, and that he was entitled to a half share of the profits yearly. At the end of the first year there was a profit of £200 or £300, Aurret applied for his half share of the profits, but Davidson was not in a position to satisfy this demand, and the respondent obtained judgment against Davidson in the Court for £300 and half the profits, and Davidson, being unable to satisfy the judgment, surrendered his estate. Aurret filed his claim, and the Resident Magistrate allowed it. When the matter came before the Chief Justice, he referred it back to the Resident Magistrate, with leave to both parties to produce further evidence for information on the following points: (1) Production of all correspondence that may have passed between Aurret and Davidson relative to the tailoring business carried on by the latter; (2) any relevant oral evidence that may be tendered on either side upon the questions at issue with liberty to the opposing party to cross-examine the witnesses; (3) production of the statement submitted by Davidson in March, 1904, and showing an alleged profit of £283 11s. 6d.; (4) an account prepared by some competent person, and sworn to by him showing (a) the capital, if any, paid into the business by Davidson; (b) the actual amount and dates of advances made by Aurret; (c) the sums, if any, obtained from the business by Aurret, and the sums drawn by Davidson as salary as his share of the profits and for his private purposes; (d) the profits and losses made and incurred between the date of the agreement and the date of sequestration; (e) the value of the assets of the business and the value of assets not belonging to the business at the date of sequestration; (f) the amount of the liabilities of the business and the amount of the other liabilities of Davidson at the date of sequestration, and (g) generally the balance of either profit or loss of the business at the date of sequestration. Counsel said that there was no reply to the question as to the sums drawn by Davidson, as his salary, as his share of the profits and for his private purposes, but with that exception there was evidence on the other matters.

Mr. Giddy, K.C., was for the plaintiff, the trustee in the estate; and Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the defendant.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Maasdorp, J., said it might be necessary for him to ask for further information hereafter, meanwhile he would look into the papers.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, (the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN), and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

VAN ZYL V. WARNER. { 1905.
May 22nd.

New trial—Insufficient damages.

Where a case involving only questions of fact has been tried before a jury which, in the opinion of the judge who presided, has not acted perversely or unreasonably, the Court will not order a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, and that insufficient damages were awarded.

This was an application upon notice of motion for a new trial of an action heard last term before Mr. Justice Maasdorp and a jury. The applicant, Christian Hendrik van Zyl, of Sea Point, sued the respondent, Robert Charles Warner, also of Sea Point, for £1,000 damages, by reason of the defendant having wilfully, wrongfully, and unlawfully set fire to a plantation on the applicant's land at Botany Bay, and destroyed a large number of trees and hedges. The defendant made a tender of £250, with costs to date of tender. The jury found for the applicant for £250 damages, the amount of the tender, and judgment was entered accordingly, defendant to pay costs to date of tender and plaintiff to pay subsequent costs.

Mr. Van Zyl now moved the Court for a new trial, on the ground that the damages awarded by the jury were too small, and that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, and also for the Court to exercise its discretion in regard to giving final judgement on the evidence already recorded. Counsel intimated that it was not proposed to press the latter part of the application.

The application was brought under section 36 of Act No. 23 of 1891, subsections 3 and 9, which were respectively, "that the damages are excessive or too small," and "that the verdict is against the weight of evidence."

The affidavit of the applicant stated that the damages awarded were too small.

The replying affidavit of the respondent stated that he considered the amount of damages awarded was fair and reasonable, and that he objected to a new trial, by which he would be put to further expense.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner) was for the applicant; Mr. Upington (with him Mr. P. S. T. Jones) was for the respondent.

Mr. Gardiner then proceeded to read the record of the evidence called for the plaintiff.

Mr. Jones read the record of evidence called for the defence.

Mr. Searle referred to the case of Hunter v. Tramway Company (10 Cape Times Law Reports, and 17 Supreme Court Reports, 80). He submitted that it was clear, as regarded the present matter, that the preponderance of evidence was strongly in favour of the plaintiff, in view of the character of the witnesses and their local knowledge. Neither Mr. Matthews nor Mr. Pillans, who were called for the defence, really met the case at all. Mr. Matthews's evidence might very properly be swept away, because his tender was not based on the correct estimate of what it would cost to reinstate the trees. Mr. Pillans, in his estimate, only took into account maintenance for twelve months, and he also left out the charge for labour. Both the estimates failed to go to the issue, which was, what it would have cost to put Mr. Van Zyl in possession again of his plantation. It was perverse and unreasonable if the jury found the damages on the estimates given by Mr. Matthews and Mr. Pillans, inasmuch as they had not provided for the full set of circumstances for which the plaintiff was entitled in law to damages. Again, on the question of the deterioration of the ground, counsel submitted that, so far as the defence was concerned, the only evidence which was directly of value in the matter at all, was that given by Mr. Behr, in answer to the Court, when he said that, with the trees on the plantation, he would value the ground at £625. That was the only evidence which they had to support the verdict. It was evident that his estimate could not be accepted, because, on his own admission, he had taken the lots at a less extent than he should have done, by deducting space for a roadway. He would not say that the respondent's action was malicious, but it was a wanton case of destruction, and liberal compensation should have been given. One never knew what influenced a jury—but it was clear, in this case, that the weight of evidence was strongly in favour of the plaintiff. Counsel submitted that the Court should now hold that the verdict was against weight of evidence, and direct a new trial.

Mr. Upington quoted authorities on damages, and submitted that it could not be said in this case that the jury did not take all of the elements of damages into their consideration. The authorities went to show how reluctant the Court was to grant a new trial on the ground that the damages were inadequate.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The applicant was plaintiff in an action for damages suffered in consequence of a fire which the defendant had originated, and by which fire plaintiff had a plantation of trees destroyed. The plaintiff himself admits that he was satisfied with defendant's explanation that the fire was not done maliciously, and he accepted defendant's explanation that it was done for the purpose of saving defendant's own property. A bush fire was sweeping over the mountain in the direction of the plaintiff's property, and the defendant set fire to the grass in plaintiff's property in order to save his own. It was a wrongful act on the part of the defendant, and the defendant very properly admitted his liability for the injury done. The only question was what was the amount of the injury the plaintiff suffered. The plaintiff claimed £1,000, punged, but the limited liability company were allowed to rank as a concurrent creditor. The decision of the Eastern Districts Court is not questioned, and still stands, and this Court cannot now go behind that decision. Thereupon the company withdrew the claim, which they had proved, and sought to secure their preference under bond, which Ulyate had given to Savage, and which by the agreement, was to be cancelled on the passing of the new bond. That bond, as I have already stated, had been cancelled in the Deeds Registry of Cape Town, but it had not been cancelled in the Deeds Registry of King William's Town, and when we look at the facts on the insolvency of Ulyate we find that the English company themselves totally ignored any claim under the old bond, and stood by their own bond which had been passed in 1896. It was only when this new bond was declared not to give them a preference that they sought to have a preference under the old bond. The question is, therefore, whether the old bond is still of force, and can be relied on by the limited liability co. It is alleged that the assets of Savage and Sons were ceded to the limited liability company, and that this was one of the assets which went to the company. But when we come to look at the bond itself it appears that the old bond was not ceded to the new company at all. The new bond was passed on the 22nd December, 1898, and I find upon the old bond not a cession to the company, but a cancellation by Savage and Sons on the 14th January, 1899. It is evident that Savage and Sons considered all along that the old bond had been superseded, and that there had been an acquittance thereon. The question the Court has to decide is whether the new bond was accepted in place of the old one. I think undoubtedly it was. The documents themselves show that it was; the conduct of the English company in proving on the new bond shows that they considered it was; and I think that now it is too late for them to attempt to revert to a liability on a document which had been put out of existence, and to rely on a document which had been declared to be cancelled. On that simple ground I think that the English company are not entitled to revert to this old extinguished agreement, and thereunder claim a preference. The Court are of opinion that the old liability was not of force and effect as against Ulyate. The application must, therefore, be granted, declaring that the respondents had no preference under the bond of 1896.

Maasdorp, J., concurred.

COATES V. SEARLE.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., moved upon notice calling upon the plaintiff in the action to show cause why an order should not be granted restraining him from proceeding with his suit until he shall have paid the costs of an application heard on the 1st May, and the costs of this application.

Order granted.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS (1905.
V. WALKER.) May 22nd.

This was a double application, arising out of an application that was made some time ago on behalf of John Walker for leave to have his evidence taken on commission in an action in which the receivers of the Grand Junction Railways, who are suing John Walker and Sons and John Walker individually for transfer of certain landed properties, which were acquired for the purpose of the railways, and which, under a certain agreement, they contracted to hand over to the Grand Junction Railways. The Court had previously ordered that the case should be set down for trial on the 13th May, and that in the meantime the present applicant should take the opportunity of having Mr. John Walker medically examined, and decide whether or not they would oppose the application for leave to take his evidence on commission. Mr. Walker applied to have his evidence taken on commission on two grounds: the first being his state of health, and that he had an action pending in the English Court in which he is defendant, and Arnold Frank Hills plaintiff. Hills was willing to suspend those proceedings to enable John Walker to come out here to give his evidence. The application was on notice of motion, calling on the respondent to show cause why an order should not be granted to further postpone the hearing of the action, and the application of John Walker for leave to give his evidence on commission.

Mr. Upington for the applicants; Mr. Russell for the respondents.

Mr. Russell said he consented to the postponement of the hearing of the action.

Mr. Upington said he moved for the postponement of the hearing of the action, and of the application to take Mr. Walker's evidence on commission. Counsel put in affidavits which set out that Walker put such conditions in the way that it was impossible to obtain a proper medical report. Dr. Gay had said that Mr. Walker was suffering from certain senile affections, that he had suffered from apoplectic seizures, and that it would be dangerous to his health if he undertook the journey to the Cape. It was necessary to have Walker examined by a surgeon, but he would not have the physician and surgeon examine him at the same time, and insisted on seeing the first doctor's certificate before he submitted himself to the second examination. Mr. Upington read letters from Dr. Ferrier and Sir Victor Horsley to the effect that it was essential that the examination should be made conjointly.

Mr. Russell read medical affidavits, one stating that the examination could well be made on separate occasions, and another to the effect that some years ago Mr. Walker suffered from a sharp attack of cerebral congestion, and as there was always a danger of recurrence, he was warned to avoid excitement and worry, and live quietly. Counsel did not object to the postponement of the trial, but he opposed the postponement of the application to take Walker's evidence on commission.

Maasdorp, J.: In this case there is an application for postponement of the trial, and that being consented to, the case is postponed sine die, as the trial depends upon the result of the other application that is before the Court. Then there is a motion on behalf of Walker for a commission to take his evidence in London. It appears that the matter has already been before the Court, and the Court ordered that the decision be postponed until the plaintiff had an opportunity of obtaining an affidavit by a medical man as to the state of health of the defendant. Then the plaintiffs made some attempt to get the necessary medical certificate, and in order to do so, it was necessary that the defendant should consent to submit to such examination. Upon being approached, certain difficulties were raised by him, and in the result, as the correspondence now stands, it appears that the parties came to terms on most points, leaving only one outstanding. When the plaintiff requested a physician to examine Mr. Walker, he expressed it as his opinion that it would be necessary to have the assistance of a surgeon, and the surgeon concurred with the physician that the only satisfactory examination could be by the two of them jointly. Mr. Walker consented to all the proposals of the attorneys in London, but he refused to submit himself to a joint examination by the surgeon and physician. Now, I cannot possibly conceive what reasonable objection Mr. Walker can have to such examination, and we have it positively stated by two eminent medical men that any but a joint examination would be unsatisfactory. I can only hold that Mr. Walker ought to allow himself to be jointly examined by these men. No order will be made on the application for a commission to take Mr. Walker's evidence, but leave is given to the applicant to move again when he shall have consented to submit to a joint examination in consultation by two medical men. Any future application to be made not later than the 1st August, the question of costs to stand over.

Ex parte MEYER.

Mr. Burton moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to amend certain deed of transfer and mortgage bond, by substituting the petitioner's full name, Sabrant Renard Meyer, instead of Sabrant Meyer.

Granted.

VAN DRIEL V. WENTER AND NIEBERG.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan was for the applicant, and Mr. Watermeyer was for the respondent. The application was for leave to sue the defendants in forma pauperis over a certain contract.

Maasdorp, J., said he would like to have further information as to certain items, and ordered the case to stand over.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Acting Chief Justice (the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN) and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

REVIEW.

REX V. HANS PEKEUR. { 1905.
May 23rd.

Magistrate's jurisdiction—Lashes
—Act 43 of 1885.

Maasdorp, J., said that the case of Rex v. Hans Pekeur had come before him from the Court of the Resident Magistrate of Montague. The accused was charged with assault with intent to do grievous bodily harm. This case had been remitted to the Magistrate under the Act 43 of 1885. The accused was found guilty, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment with hard labour and 24 lashes. It appeared that under the Act 43 of 1885 the accused could only be sentenced to lashes in case of a previous conviction for some offence within the last three years. No previous conviction had been proved in this case, and consequently the sentence must be quashed by striking out the words "and 24 lashes."

CRIMINAL APPEALS.

REX V. DUMBELLA.

This was an appeal from a conviction of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of the Cape at Uitvlugt, who had sentenced the accused to a fine of £50, with the alternative of three months' hard labour, for a breach of the liquor laws. The charge against the accused was that she had contravened section 75 of the Act 28 of 1883, in that, on or about the 26th February, at or near Uitvlugt, the accused, Matilda Dumbella, did wrongfully and unlawfully, and without a licence and contrary to the provisions of the said Act, sell, deal in, or dispose of intoxicating liquors, or sell, offer, or expose for sale to certain persons mentioned in the summons a quantity of intoxicating liquor, to wit, Kafir beer, Cape beer, and Cape brandy, otherwise with a contravention of section 7 of Act 28 of 1898, in that she did wrongfully make, assist in, or cause to be made a quantity of intoxicating liquor, to wit, one tin containing Kafir beer, without having obtained the permission of the owner or lessee of the premises.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that he did not believe the evidence of the witnesses called for the defence, and he was quite satisfied that the accused was the owner of the liquor in question.

Mr. Burton was for the appellant; Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Mr. Burton: The first point raised is an alleged offence under section 75 of Act 28 of 1883, viz.: the selling intoxicating liquor without a licence. This Act raises a presumption in favour of the Crown. In the case of Queen v. Fullerton (4 H.C. 246), the conviction was quashed on appeal, although a considerable quantity of liquor was found in the house. In the case of Queen v. Du Plessis (9 Juta 93), the evidence was much stronger. Here the woman admits the ownership of the beer and Kafir beer, but she denies having dealt in it. There is no evidence to connect her with dealing in brandy and Cape beer. A witness claimed the Cape beer as his own property. The natives living in the house procured the Kafir beer. No sale has been proved. The men who really sold the beer were acquitted, and the accused who was innocent was convicted. As to being in possession of Kafir beer, she admits that it was hers.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: She must show that she had permission to make Kafir beer.]

No, she is accused of making Kafir beer without a licence. See Queen v. Kirkman (4 E.D.C. 309), especially the judgment of Shippard, J. There must be at least prima facie evidence that the accused had no licence.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: She certainly had no licence to sell Kafir beer, nor had she permission to make it.]

Section 8 of Act 28 of 1898 only gives permission to a landowner or lessee to search for Kafir beer.

Mr. Nightingale (for the Crown), was not called upon.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that, taking the whole of the circumstances into consideration, the Magistrate was justified in finding that the liquor was actually consumed by the men on the premises, and supplied by a woman who had no licence. The appeal would be dismissed and the conviction confirmed.

Mr. Justice Maasdorp concurred.

REX V. RADASI.

This was an appeal from a conviction of the A.R.M. of the Cape at Uitvlugt. The case was in several respects similar to the previous one. The accused was charged with contraventions of section 75 of the Act 28, 1883, or, otherwise, with a contravention of section 7 of the Act 28 of 1898, the allegations being that he had sold, in the first instance, a bottle of Cape beer to a native, and, in the second instance, Kafir beer, Cape beer, and Cape brandy to certain natives, and, alternatively, that he had in his possession two bottles of Kafir beer. The accused was convicted on all counts, and sentenced to pay a fine of £50, or three months' imprisonment, with hard labour.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said he did not believe the evidence with regard to the sub-letting of the premises, and he was satisfied the liquor was found on the premises.

Mr. Burton was for the appellant, Arthur Radasi, of McKenzie's Farm; Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Mr. Burton contended that the Magistrate's decision with regard to the sub-letting was not supported by the evidence. Was it probable that this man would lease a whole row of rooms without having any sub-tenants? The constable, who was well-known to the accused, stated that he was not sent to trap the accused, but that he went to the room of his own accord. The evidence of the policeman was extremely improbable, and it was entirely unsupported. There was not a tittle of evidence to show that anybody else was the owner of the place. The evidence went to show that the accused was the owner, and there was no evidence that he did not get permission to have the Kafir beer, and the Magistrate was wrong in refusing the application of the appellant's attorney for a discharge on that count.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said there was an alternative count, and before dealing with the matter he would refer it back to the Magistrate to ask him if he found the accused guilty on all three counts, and if so to apportion the punishment.

Postea (May 29th).

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that when this case was argued last week, the Court was of opinion that there was sufficient evidence to justify the Magistrate's decision, but an irregularity appeared on the face of the proceedings, in that the Magistrate had convicted the accused on two counts, and on an alternative count to the second, and the Court sent the matter back to the Magistrate to apportion the fine on the three convictions. The Magistrate now apportioned 10s. to the alternative count, and to this extent the sentence would be reduced, and the conviction on the count quashed. Otherwise, the decision of the Magistrate would be confirmed.

REX V. WEDDELL.

This was an appeal from a conviction of the R.M. of Colesberg, by which the appellant, Robert Weddell, junior, was ordered to pay a fine of £20, or one month's imprisonment, to be cumulative on two counts for a breach of his licensing conditions at Naauwpoort.

The charge was that the accused, who was manager of the British African Hotel, in breach of conditions 1 and 2 of his licence, sold a bottle of brandy to an unregistered Basuto (who had no permit) between the hours of 6 p.m. and 10 a.m. The appellant's attorney applied for a dismissal of the case on the ground that there was no evidence to show Robert Weddell was licensed to sell liquor, and that as the licence read "before 10 a.m. and 6 p.m.," there was total prohibition, and there could be no breach of the conditions. The application was refused.

Mr. Gardiner was for the appellant, and Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Mr. Gardiner said he relied in his appeal on the ground that Robert Weddell was absent in Johannesburg, and was no party to the offence.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The accused in this case was charged with contravening the conditions of his licence in that liquor was sold by his barman to an aboriginal native at a time when such sale was not allowed by the conditions, and also without the permit required. There are two defences set up. The first one is that the person charged was only managing the business, and that the licensee was absent at the time when the sale took place. It is true the defendant was absent, but he admitted he was the manager for his father, and the 11th section of Act 44 of 1885, makes the person managing the business of any licence holder liable to the same duties and obligations and penalties as such holder. The mere fact of his being out of the hotel at the time, if he had stood in the position of the licensee does not exculpate him from the consequence of the act of the barman, whom he placed in charge. The 12th section of Act 28 of 1898, enacts that any liquor in the possession of a licensed dealer sold by any member of his family or person in his service or employ shall for the purposes of the Liquor Acts of 1883 and 1898 be conclusively deemed to have been sold, delivered and dealt in, or supplied with the knowledge and permission of the holder of the licence. It is the duty of the manager to keep a man in charge who will not contravene the conditions of the licence, and the wrongful act of the barman was committed within the scope of his (the barman's) employment. It is no defence, though it might affect the amount of the penalty, that the act was committed against the wish of the manager, and that the manager did his best to avoid a contravention. The next point has reference to the conditions of the licence. There were two conditions which were charged as having been contravened, but both offences were in respect of the same act, and it is a principle in law that one act like this should not be split up and multiplied into separate offences. I think, therefore, there should be only one conviction on this charge. The Magistrate convicted the accused of two offences, and imposed a cumulative penalty. I think one of the convictions should be struck out, and the sentence reduced to one fine of £20, or one month's imprisonment. The sentence will, therefore, be corrected, but otherwise the conviction will be confirmed, and the appeal will be dismissed.

Maasdorp, J., concurred.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Acting Chief Justice (the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN) and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

JACOBS AND CO. V. MILLER (1905.
AND CHIAT. (May 25th.

This was an application on notice of motion calling on the respondents to show cause why they should not be committed for contempt of Court for not complying with an order of Court. The affidavit of Francis Guthrie, attorney, of Caledon, and sole trustee in the estate of Jacobs and Co., set out that he obtained judgment against the respondents for £771 3s. 9d., and a further order was obtained to attach the book debts of the firm. The respondents handed in one book, which was apparently "faked." Miller stated to the deponent that there were outstanding debts in the books to the amount of £180, and the book showed nothing like that. His refusal to deliver up the books would injure the creditors. The respondents had purchased Jacobs's business, and an action for the amount of the purchase price went by default.

The affidavit of Solomon Miller stated he admitted judgment was obtained against his firm, and an order granted to attach the books. He endeavoured to carry out the order of Court, and was willing to hand over the books to the trustee. The only book was the one handed in, and it was made up from little pocket-books kept in the Yiddish language by Jacobs.

The replying affidavit of Mr. Guthrie drew attention to the fact that only one of the respondents made an affidavit. The affidavit of one De Wet, stated that he had seen three books—ledger, cash, and a rough daybook.

Mr. Upington was for the applicant, and Mr. Alexander was for the respondents.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: to make the previous order perfectly clear, and in order to prevent any further illegality, an order will be issued that the respondents deliver up to the applicant all books connected with their business, the order to be served personally on both respondents, as this was a question of contempt of Court.

Ex parte THE RECEIVERS OF THE GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS.

Mr. Upington asked leave to mention this matter, which had been ordered to stand over for further information as to one Amos, in whose name certain property which had been purchased by John Walker and Son for the Grand Junction Railways was still registered. Amos, counsel said, was still living in the Colony. Counsel moved for transfer under the Derelict Lands Act.

A rule nisi was granted under the Derelict Lands Act, the rule to be served on Amos and the late partners of the firm of John Walker, the partners in the Colony to be served personally, and those out of the Colony to be served by registered letter, one publication in the "Gazette" and in the "Cape Times," returnable 3rd August.

Postea (August 3rd).

Mr. Upington said that this was the return day of the rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act. One of the respondents (Amos) did not appear, and counsel asked that the rule, so far as he was concerned, be made absolute. As to the other respondents, John Walker and partners of John Walker and Sons, he asked that the matter stand over pending the decision of other questions by an action.

Mr. Russell (for the respondents, John Walker and John Walker and Sons) consented.

Rule absolute as against Amos, and ordered to stand over as against other respondents.

His Lordship intimated that, with reference to the application for a commission de bene esse to take the evidence of John Walker in England, he had seen his brother Hopley, who agreed with him that, on the certificate filed by the two English doctors, the application for a commission should not be granted. The application would be refused, with costs, and the Court would direct that the parties should go to trial within the first week of next term, which would allow sufficient time for Mr. John Walker to come out from England.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Acting Chief Justice (the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN) and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

REX V. JELLIMEN. { 1905.
May 26th.

Magistrate's finding on facts overruled.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Maclear.

The appellant, Wm. Edward Jellimen, of the Royal Hotel, Maclear, had been convicted in the Court below of contravening section 30 of Proclamation 104, of 1903, in that he did, himself, or by or through, or by the hand of his servant, or barman, one Collins, at or near the Royal Hotel, wrongfully and unlawfully sell, give, or supply, or deliver to a native (a Basuto), a bottle of brandy, the said native not having obtained a permit signed by a Magistrate. The accused had been sentenced to pay a fine of £50, or in default six months' imprisonment.

Mr. Close was for the appellant; Mr. Pyemont was for the Crown.

Mr. Close said that the grounds of appeal were: (1) That there was not sufficient proof that the barman Collins did sell the liquor, and (2) that the barman had been instructed by his master not to sell liquor to natives. Appellant had originally been licensed under Proclamation 250 of 1900. Under that Proclamation the hotel was carried on for some time. The last time the licence was renewed it was issued on a form under the old Proclamation, whereas, as a matter of fact, that Proclamation had been repealed, and the new Proclamation of 1903 had been substituted. The difference between the two was that there was a specific penalty under the Proclamation mentioned on the licence handed to the licensee, but there was not a word as to forfeiture, while under the later Proclamation forfeiture was provided for. That was the particular Proclamation under which the appellant was convicted. The Magistrate apparently recognised the very serious consequences and had suspended his judgment. He (counsel) might mention, as indicative of the very serious results to the appellant, that the value of his stock was £2,000.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: As the law stands at present the Magistrate has got a discretion?]

Mr. Close: No, he has got no discretion. The case is rather an impasse, because appellant has got his licence under a Proclamation that does not exist. Of course, he is bound by the conditions on his licence.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Carried to the legitimate issue, then, he has got no licence to sell at all?]

Mr. Close said he thought the position would be that appellant was entitled to act under the authority given him. Proceeding, counsel said that his client did not deny that the brandy was sold, but he said that it was sold in the bar to a white man, and that the white man sold the liquor to the native at the side door. Counsel submitted that Bester's evidence was contradicted in regard to his position; he contradicted himself as to where the native was. Kennedy, an important witness for the Crown, gave a totally different version from Bester, as to the time the native arrived at the hotel. With all the contradictions of Bester by credible witnesses, the Magistrate, having such drastic powers, should have given the appellant the benefit of the doubt. It was clear by section 12, of Act 28, of 1898, that the holder of a licence could not defend himself by saying that he gave instructions to his servant not to sell, but that law only applied to the Colony.

Mr. Pyemont said he would not argue that there were contradictions on both sides, but unless there was something startlingly wrong, he did not think that the decision of the Magistrate should be upset, and he contended that the probabilities were in favour of the prosecution.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The licence of the hotel was held under a Proclamation issued in 1900. At the time the licence was issued, that Proclamation had been repealed and replaced by a Proclamation of 1903. The terms of the two Proclamations, as far as they affect the offence, do not differ to any material extent, but the punishment under the two Proclamations differs, and if this conviction is sustained, it will be an interesting subject for discussion whether or not defendant is liable to the penalties under the Proclamation under which the licence was granted, or to the penalties under the Proclamation existing at the time the offence was committed. The appeal is made by the appellant on the grounds: firstly, that the conviction is against the weight of evidence in the case; and, secondly, that the person who committed the offence was the barman, who, if he did sell liquor to a native, did it against the orders of the hotelkeeper. The circumstances of the case are such that it will be sufficient to deal only with the weight of evidence. The learned counsel for the Crown admitted there is a contradiction in the evidence, but put it to us that we should take the evidence and weigh it, and say to which side it leans. Well, if I were sitting as a juror, I should have no hesitation in saying that the great weight of evidence is in favour of the appellant; but, as the question depends upon the finding of the Magistrate on the fact, it is necessary to go more carefully into the evidence, than to give a general impression as to which side the evidence supports. It has frequently been laid down that, where witnesses are called and facts have to be determined, the person who tries the case sees the witnesses and their bearing in Court. is the person better able to judge as to the credibility of the evidence given before him. But it must also be remembered that in a criminal charge the onus is on the Crown to prove its case, while in a civil action it is very often a question as to on which side falls the balance of testimony. The charge is that the appellant's barman sold liquor to a native when not entitled to do so under the licence. The native is one Koloko. The only witness called to show that liquor was sold is a man Bester, and his evidence is positively contradicted by a number of witnesses, and one has to look closely at Bester's evidence and antecedents before we can say whether his evidence should be acted upon alone. He says he went into the bar of the hotel, and when he entered the barman Collins was actually serving the native at a side window. Corporal Kennedy, of the C.M.R., called to support Bester, directly contradicts him in this respect. Kennedy, on the contrary, says that when Bester entered the bar, Koloko was then proceeding to the side window.

Bester's evidence is contradictory in itself. He first said on entering the bar he went to the end of the counter but could not see the side window, but when pressed, it is clear he went from the door opening on the side directly to the bar, and it would be impossible for him to see where the native was supposed to be standing. Bester did not go at the instigation of the police to trap. He went there simply, he says, for a drink. He says he did not buy a bottle of brandy, but witness after witness—and they seem credible witnesses—say he did buy a bottle of brandy, and came out of the hotel with the bottle and the man Feirrara, to whom the Magistrate alludes, says he saw him go out of the bar with the bottle. The Magistrate queries his evidence, because he says witness was not certain as to the time, but witness says it was while the sale was going on, and it was clear from other evidence that it took place between 10.30 and 1 o'clock. Therefore it was likely that Feirrara did see Bester coming out of the hotel with the bottle of brandy at the same time that the other witness deposes to. As to Bester's character, it appears he was a man who associated with natives, and who on previous occasions had bought liquor for them, knowing they were not entitled to buy themselves. The native Koloko says it was Bester, and not the barman, who gave him the liquor, and he gave it outside the hotel. Koloko also says that he had received liquor from Bester on a previous occasion. Bester denies buying brandy, but Collins, the barman, says he sold him a bottle of brandy. Kolopolo's son says he saw Bester come out, and saw him give the brandy to Kolopolo, and Jellimen, the hotelkeeper himself, says he gave instructions to the barman never to give liquor to natives, and that he saw Bester and the native walk over to the hotel. Looking at this evidence, I think the Magistrate should have carefully scrutinised Bester's evidence, and should not on his evidence alone have convicted the accused, unless there was corroboration. Six or seven witnesses positively contradicted Bester, and the evidence of these witnesses should have received more weight than they did. The Magistrate simply says a number of witnesses were called for the defence, but he says he could not accept their evidence, as they were all addicted to the use of brandy, and it was to their interest to keep the hotelkeeper there. If that was the reason for not accepting their evidence, the same objection would also apply to Bester. Reluctant as I am at any time to interfere with the finding of a magistrate on facts, yet, as there is only the uncorroborated evidence of one man, who had previously contravened the law, and who, when the native was arrested, had a strong interest in trying to shield himself; and he is contradicted by the police (who are Crown witnesses) as well as by so many witnesses for the defence, I think the Magistrate would have acted with better discretion if he had acquitted the accused. In our opinion, on the evidence, the appeal must be allowed, and the conviction quashed.

CRIMINAL APPEALS.

REX V. ADAMS AND OTHERS. { 1905.
May 29th.

Mission station—Grazing rights.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Malmesbury, who convicted Adams and 22 others of the crime of contravening section 30 of Act 15 of 1892 (the Pounds Act), and sentenced each of them to pay a fine of £1, or ten days' imprisonment, with hard labour. The allegation was that on the 2nd March last they unlawfully seized and rescued 130 head of cattle from one Nathan Lederman, the said cattle having been lawfully seized by Lederman and others for the purpose of impounding. The appeal was made on the grounds that the accused were justified in retaking the cattle, that the cattle were not lawfully seized by Lederman, that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction, inasmuch as title of land was bona fide in dispute; that, under any circumstances, the accused had a twelve months' agreement, and had not received notice to quit, and that the conviction was not supported by the evidence. It appeared from the evidence that the cattle were seized by Lederman and others from land on the Moravian Mission Society property, in the division of Malmesbury. It was alleged that the appellants belonged to a disaffected party in the mission station. They had used the ground for grazing for a number of years, and up to two years ago were said to have paid a small sum per year for the right. Upon an intimation that the missionaries intended to lease the land some two years ago, the people had paid no money in respect of grazing. It was alleged that at a meeting held at that time, one of the society missionaries agreed to give the people the grazing rights free of charge. The land was afterwards leased by the Moravian Society to Lederman, who took possession. The Magistrate held that the complainant was in lawful and bona fide possession of the ground. The superintendent had the power to grant a lease, and the lease being otherwise in order, the complainant was entitled to remain in possession until ousted by order of a higher court. He further ruled that the permission given to appellants to graze in 1903 was revocable.

Mr. Burton appeared for the appellants; Mr. Van Zyl for the complainant in the Court below.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The land on which the cattle were seized belonged to the superintendent of the Moravian Mission. It had been bought for £240 from the Government. The superintendent let the land to one Lederman. It is clear that this land was not upon the same footing as the land granted the Moravian Mission Society which by terms of the grant the appellants had no grazing rights over. The defendants had been allowed to graze their stock on the land now leased upon paying a small annual rental to the superintendent; but they received due notice that they were no longer to graze their cattle there, and that the land had been leased. One of the defendants said they intended to bring an action in the Supreme Court to have their rights declared. Knowing they had no rights, and that they had been instructed not to go on the ground, they went and obstructed the person who was in lawful possession who was impounding cattle trespassing on the land, and rescued the cattle with a considerable amount of violence. The penalty imposed by the Magistrate was substantial, but not vindictive. The Magistrate was justified in convicting the defendants.

The appeal must be dismissed.

Theft—Technical exception.

Where certain prisoners were accused of stealing napery from R., the exception was taken that the goods were not the property of R., but of a firm in which he was only a partner.

Held on appeal, that the exception was purely technical, and that as the goods were in the lawful possession of R., the appeal must be dismissed.

This was an appeal from a decision of the R.M. of East London, in which the appellants were found guilty of theft, the first accused being sentenced to three months' imprisonment with hard labour, and the remaining three to six months' imprisonment with hard labour. The alleged thefts were committed during 1902, 1903, and the first nine months of 1904. The evidence showed that the accused were Indian laundrymen, carrying on business at East London. The proprietor of the National Hotel became suspicious, and on a search warrant he found a considerable quantity of the hotel linen in the boxes of the accused. The case was remitted, and an application to adduce further evidence on behalf of the Crown was allowed. The defence set out by Harry Bavooka was that he had sold the laundry to one Morrow, who had disappeared, and that the linen found in the house was retained by the other accused, as Morrow had not paid them. The Magistrate held there was guilty knowledge on the part of the other accused, who denied to the detectives that there was any National linen in the house. Taking the last three accused, counsel submitted that they probably took the clothes as a sort of lien for the wages due to them by Morrow. The indictment set out that the linen was the property of Michael Reece, but on Reece's admission, he was only a partner in the hotel at the time. The three last accused, counsel submitted, could only be charged with receiving, and in the case of Pavooka, he took the technical objection that the property was wrongly laid.

Mr. Gardiner was for the appellants, and Mr. Pyemont appeared for the Crown.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The first accused was entrusted with the washing of the hotel linen, which was delivered to him from time to time. He did not return all the linen. After a time he gave over his business to one Morrow, who, however, shortly after gave back the business and left the premises. The accused, Bavooka, continued to wash for the hotel after Morrow left. Morrow has gone, and is not now to be found. Mr. Reece, knowing he lost a large quantity of linen, obtained a search warrant, and in the house of Bavooka, where the prisoners all lived, he discovered a quantity of linen in each of their rooms. These people could give the Magistrate no reasonable account of their possession, and were convicted of theft. On appeal a technical exception is taken on the ground that the charge lays the stolen property as being that of Mr. Reece, whereas, as a fact, the hotel belonged to a partnership in which Mr. Reece was only one of the partners. This is purely a technical objection, and I think it is covered by the words in his lawful possession.. The Magistrate has sentenced the first-named prisoner to three months' imprisonment. As the record stands, it seems to me that the first-named person is the much more guilty of the four, and although the conviction will be confirmed before finally dealing with the case, the Magistrate will be asked to explain why the other three prisoners received a heavier sentence than the first accused. It may be that it is a clerical error for six weeks.

Maasdorp, J., concurred.

[The Magistrate subsequently reported that the sentence passed on the three accused was six weeks' (and not six months') imprisonment. The record was amended accordingly, and so amended was confirmed.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Acting Chief Justice (the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN) and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

Ex parte SIMONS. { 1905.
May 30th.

Mr. Gardiner moved, as a matter of urgency, on behalf of Mr. John Deane Simons, in his capacity of sole trustee in the insolvent estate of Max Seagull, trading as Seagull and Co., at Port Elizabeth, for the appointment of a commissioner to take certain evidence.

Petitioner said that in the examination of the insolvent before the Resident Magistrate of Port Elizabeth, at the second and third meetings of creditors, the insolvent, when asked to account for the disappearance of practically all his assets, alleged that they had been pledged by Peycke and Co., of Port Elizabeth. On the insolvent being questioned, he was unable to give a satisfactory explanation of his dealings and transactions with the said firm of Peycke and Co. Peycke and Co. had filed a concurrent claim of £1,486 5s. 4d., but they had as yet filed no preferent claim. They had admitted that they had a considerable quantity of the assets of the insolvent, but alleged that they held the same under a legal pledge, and declined to hand over such assets. Petitioner was further informed that Peycke and Co.

were suing an insurance company under a fire policy affecting the insolvent, upon part of his stock which had been damaged and destroyed by fire. Owing to the position taken by the insolvent and Peycke and Co., on account of to the latter refraining from proving their preferent claim against the insolvent estate, it was impossible for petitioner to ascertain what assets of Seagull, Peycke and Co. actually held, and whether they had any legal right to the same. He prayed that the Court may grant an order authorising the Acting Resident Magistrate of Port Elizabeth to take the evidence on commission of the persons set out in the schedule, including insolvent and his wife, the managers and accountants of the Standard Bank, Bank of Africa, African Banking Corporation, National Bank, partners of Peycke and Co., bookkeepers and clerks of Peycke and Co., and three ex-employees of insolvent.

Order granted as prayed.

REX V. JAFFE.

Culpable insolvency — "Proper books."

There is no positive legal standard as to what are "proper books." But the books kept must show all transactions of the business, its assets and liabilities: or at least give data from which these can be ascertained.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Calvinia, who had convicted the appellant, Harris Jaffe, hawker, Rietfontein, of culpable insolvency, under section 71 of the Insolvency Ordinance, and sentenced him to six weeks' imprisonment with hard labour.

From the record it appeared that the appellant was originally charged at a preparatory examination on two counts — first, with fraudulent insolvency in contracting a certain debt of £191 11s. with Mendelssohn and Co., of Cape Town, when he had reason to believe he was not solvent; and secondly, with not having kept proper books. The case was eventually remitted to the Magistrate to be dealt with in regard to the second count. The appeal was based upon the grounds that the books and accounts kept by the accused were as sufficient and comprehensive as might reasonably be expected or required from one exercising his particular trade or calling, and that no evidence was adduced to prove that they were insufficient.

Mr. Burton was for the appellant; Mr. Nightingale was for the respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, A.C.J.: There is no standard fixed by the Insolvent Ordinance what particular books must be kept by a particular person, but regard must be had to the dealings and transactions of the insolvent, and what was his particular trade or calling. The books required from a merchant or banker would be different from what would be required from a person like a hawker. The Magistrate convicted insolvent for not keeping proper books, but did so on the inference drawn by himself from the books produced. These books are before us, and we can draw our own inference. Now, having regard to the fact that the insolvent was a hawker, and, having regard to the fact that the books produced show all his transactions—there is no complaint that they did not show any transaction—and having regard to the fact that accused banked his cash and produced a bank-book, and that he forwarded his invoices and books and stock lists, the fact that the accused did not keep a formal cash-book was not enough to justify a conviction. Having regard to the particular trade or calling of the insolvent, I think the Magistrate would have been better advised if he had not convicted the insolvent. I think it is a fair case in which the appeal might be allowed.

The conviction will be quashed.

REX V. TSOTSOBE.

Act 23 of 1897, Secs. 80 and 81.

Under Sec. 80 of Act 23 of 1897, any police officer or other person authorized by the local authority or the Minister may enter at all reasonable times upon any lands or premises for the purpose of making any inspection or doing anything required by the Act, and any person obstructing such officer in the execution of his duty is liable to the penalties specified in Sec. 81.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the A.R.M. of Port Elizabeth.

Appellant had been charged in the Court below with having on the 12th April last wrongfully and unlawfully refused entrance to one John Sprang, a sergeant of the C.M.R., stationed in the district of Port Elizabeth, and being a person duly authorised thereto and acting in the course of his duty. The charge was laid under the Public Health Act, No. 23 of 1897, and proclamations duly published in the "Gazette" from time to time. Accused pleaded not guilty, but was convicted and fined £6 or five weeks' imprisonment, with hard labour.

From the record it appeared that accused occupied a dwelling at the Hills Location, Korsten, and that the Acting Resident Magistrate of Port Elizabeth had been appointed by the Colonial Secretary to direct the removal of all persons in that area to a place which he might point out. Sergeant Sprang, in default of the woman's compliance with an order to vacate the premises, went there under the instructions of the Acting R.M. for the purpose of evicting her, but the accused stood outside the house, the door was locked, and she declined to give the officer the key or in any way to enable him to carry out the directions of the Acting R.M.

Mr. Gardiner for appellant; Mr. Nightingale for the Crown.

Mr. Gardiner said the defendant was accused in terms of the section with wilfully refusing entrance to a duly authorised officer. In order to see whether she wilfully refused entrance it must be seen what Sprang's duty was. Sprang was only instructed to go in and take her things out if she did not go out herself. Sprang, counsel contended, had no authority to demand any further entrance from the appellant. Then again there was no proof that the appellant had the key of the hut, and, if she did refuse entrance, she was acting under compulsion by her husband, who, after all, was the occupier of the place. In conclusion, counsel submitted that Sprang was not a duly authorised officer in terms of the Act.

Mr. Nightingale was not called upon.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said: The accused was charged under the 80th section of the Public Health Amendment Act with refusing entrance to the premises in question to a sergeant of police. The section refers to "aforesaid officers or duly authorised persons in the performance of their duty." The "officers aforesaid" are officers of police, or constable, or other person duly authorised. The principal objection raised in this case is that the woman was ordered to leave, and refused admission to the house to a person who was not duly authorised. The person who attempted to carry out the directions of the minister was the sergeant of police, and not only was he acting under the directions of the minister, but he had specific and special instructions from the Magistrate to eject this woman from the location. The appellant had been previously ordered to remove from the location, but as a favour had been allowed to remain on until the 13th of the month, and not quitting then, the Magistrate insisted on his previous decision being carried out. It was a matter of urgency with plague in the district, and I think the sergeant not only being a sergeant of police, but also having special instructions, was a duly authorised person. The next point is that the accused wilfully refused entrance. She was told she had to leave this hut, and go away to another location, and she refused. She looked the door, and sat outside, and that is not in compliance with the order to quit the location. She does not deny she had the key. She was the only person on the premises, and I think it is clear she contravened the section of the Ordinance, and wilfully refused the admittance to a police sergeant in the discharge of his duty. On these grounds the appeal will be dismissed, and the conviction confirmed.

CIVIL APPEAL.

SCULLARD V. PRICE.

This was an appeal from a decision of the R.M. of Elliot, in an action instituted by the plaintiff to recover £50 6s 2d. for work and labour done at the defendant's request. The defendant acknowledged his indebtedness to the plaintiff in the sum of £6 15s. 8d., which amount he tendered to the plaintiff. The defendant prayed for judgment for the amount of the tender, with costs against the plaintiff. Judgment was given in reconvention for the sum of £34 9s. 2d., and in convention for the sum of £54 17s. 11d., each party to pay his own costs.

Mr. Gardiner was for the appellant, and there was no appearance on the other side.

Mr. Gardiner submitted that the Magistrate had wrongly refused to allow two items in the claim in reconvention for £13 1s. 3d. and 11s. 9d., for re-boring sleepers, which the plaintiff had failed to do according to the contract, and if he had allowed these items it would have brought the amount to that tendered by the defendant.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the Magistrate, in going through the accounts, appeared to have gone a little astray. The effect of an examination of the accounts was to show that the tender made by the defendant was sufficient, and the appeal would therefore be allowed, with costs, and judgment entered in the Court below for the plaintiff for the amount of the tender, the plaintiff to pay the costs.

CIVIL APPEALS.

SMUTS V. POOLE. } 1905.
 } May 31st.

Payment of costs by telegraphic money order.

Payment of costs by telegraphic money order is a good and sufficient payment.

This was an appeal against a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Wynberg, in a case in which the appellant, who was plaintiff, sued the respondent (defendant) for the sum of £1 for goods sold and delivered. The defendant's agent, Mr. Walker, excepted on the ground that the costs in a previous hearing had not been paid. A telegram was put in during the trial, which read as follows: "Silberbauer to Walker: Smuts v. Poole, cash, 14s. costs, herewith." The telegram was not answered, Mr. Walker stating that he was waiting on the money, and that the telegram was not sufficiently explicit. The exception was sustained, with costs, the Magistrate not considering payment by telegram a sufficient tender. In his reason, he added he did not consider it incumbent on the defendant's attorney to attend the Post Office for the money. Counsel said it appeared that the previous case went off on non-appearance of the plaintiff. On Nov. 17 the plaintiff's attorney sent the telegram, which was put in. The plaintiff's attorney, in order to save the preparation of a bill of costs, sent the telegraphic money order for the sum of 14s.

Mr. Burton was for the appellant, and Mr. Upington was for the respondent.

Mr. Upington said a telegram was sent to pay the costs of the previous hearing, but no order was included.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: It is attached to the telegram?]

Mr. Upington said he did not know that, but he would submit that the creditor was not bound to go to the Post Office in order to obtain the money, and that the payment must be made directly in cash. The tender must be made in cash unless the party consented to accept the cheque. Supposing Mr. Walker had gone down to the Post Office to obtain this money, he would have wasted his time, and presumably he would have been entitled to charge his client for that.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The plaintiff sued the defendant in the Magistrate's Court on a debt of £1 for goods. On the return of the summons, the plaintiff was represented by his agent, but the plaintiff himself not being present, his agent applied for a postponement, and he tendered the costs of the day. The defendant's agent objected to this, and the Magistrate, exercising his discretion, refused the postponement, and dismissed the summons, with costs. No doubt, under the rules of the Court, these costs must be tendered before the case can be re-heard. A summons was taken out, and on the return day of the summons the defendant's agent again objected that he did not receive the costs, but, as a matter of fact, when he made that objection he had received a telegram, in which was included a postal money order for 14s., the amount of the costs of the previous case. He does not object to the telegram or the amount, but he says it is not a proper tender. He had, however, never demanded his costs, and he had kept the telegraphic order for the amount due. Under these circumstances, the Magistrate should have heard the case, instead of dismissing it. Though the Magistrate erred in judgment, the agent was to blame in having taken the objection, and his client must take the consequences. The objection will be overruled, the case remitted to the Magistrate for hearing, and the appeal allowed, with costs.

Maasdorp, J., concurred.

HART V. FORMAN.

School—Notice of withdrawal of pupil.

Notice of withdrawal of a pupil given to the secretary of a public school is sufficient notice to the head master. Where, however, the school authorities stipulate for a quarter's notice, such notice must be given at the beginning of a school quarter.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Cathcart, in a case in which the appellant was summoned by the respondent for £10, which was alleged to be due in lieu of a quarter's notice to the plaintiff (Forman) on the occasion of the defendant's minor daughter leaving a boarding school, of which the plaintiff was the principal. Judgment was given in favour of the plaintiff, and against that decision the defendant appealed. From the evidence it appeared that the defendant agreed to give a quarter's notice if he should have occasion to take his daughter from the school, and it was contended on his behalf that the notice he sent to the secretary of the school on the 24th October was sufficient, although the plaintiff denied any knowledge of it. The plaintiff contended that a quarter's notice meant the school term, and not any three months' which might be selected by the defendant. The Magistrate, in his reasons, said that the plaintiff sued the defendant for £10 for board charges, due in lieu of a quarter's notice. The defendant contends that in giving notice to the secretary it was sufficient as regards the school, and the boarding departments, but he admits that he never treated with the secretary in regard to the boarding department. The Court was of opinion that a school term was implied, as shown on the school calendar, and that notice should have been given before the opening of the school for the new term.

Mr. Burton for appellant; Mr. Gardiner for respondent.

Counsel, having been heard in argument on the facts,

Mr. Burton, in reply, submitted that the whole thing was a pure technicality, and a mere legal quibble. This technicality was disposed of by the secretary of the school, who said he agreed that there should be three months' notice from one date to another. He submitted that the plaintiff really had no case.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The plaintiff is the principal of the Cathcart Public School, and besides being principal of the school, he, assisted by his wife, kept a boarding establishment for boys and girls. The defendant sent his girl to this boarding establishment in 1902, and kept her there until the end of the school term in December, 1904. The contract between the parties, beyond what was stated in the letters, is shown by the prospectus of the school, which is published in every issue of the local newspaper, and which it is admitted was seen by the defendant. Indeed it is not in dispute that this prospectus was the basis of the contract between the parties. On the 24th October, 1904, defendant gave notice to the secretary of the school that he would remove his daughter from the school at the end of that term. This notice came to the principal's knowledge at the meeting of the Board in November, 1904. The girl was removed at the end of the term in December, and was not sent back to the school afterwards. The plaintiff now sues defendant for not having complied with the contract in giving one quarter's notice before removing his daughter. The Magistrate held that notice to the secretary of the committee of the school was not notice to Mr. Forman, the principal, and he has also held that the notice was not given in sufficient time. On the first point, looking at the advertisement, which simply stated that Mr. Forman was principal and that Mr. Bentley was secretary, it is a fair inference to be drawn by the public that communications should be made to the secretary, and consequently that notice given to the secretary would be sufficient. In his evidence, it is true the secretary says that, as far as the boarding establishment is concerned, he does not think that notice should be given to him, but notice should be given to him in regard to school fees. I do not see on what principle the secretary can divide this prospectus into two parts in this way. I do not think that the Magistrate was sound in his reasons when he says that this notice given to the secretary was insufficient. But the question remains whether this notice was given in time? Now, one would say that "a quarter's notice required" would mean a quarter of the year, so that, under ordinary circumstances, notice should be given on the 1st January, 1st April, 1st October, and so on, but, looking at the advertisement, another interpretation is given to the word "quarter." The quarter therein referred to evidently means the school quarter, and the question is, has notice been given at the beginning of the school quarter for the removal of the girl in that quarter? Notice was not given until some time after the quarter commenced, though, as it turned out, it was given just three months before the pupils had to re-assemble in January for that quarter. I think that the Magistrate erred in saying that notice to Bentley was not sufficient, but that he was right in holding that a quarter's notice in terms of the contract between the parties was not given, and on that ground the defendant is liable for the quarter's fees. On that ground, the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

PRIEST V. STEGMAN AND OTHERS. { 1905.
May 31st.
June 19th.
„ 26th.

Beneficia S. C. Velleijuni et Authentica si qua mulier—Promissory note—Endorsement by women—Act 19 of 1893.

P., a married woman, had signed a promissory note made by her husband on the back "as surety and co-principal debtor," without expressly renouncing her benefits under the S. C. Velleijna et Authentica si qua mulier. When sued on the note in an R.M. Court, she pleaded these benefits and further urged that the note was not presented to her and noted at the due date.

Held on appeal, that by Sec. 20 of Act 19 of 1893, it is not necessary that a woman, who accepts or endorses a note or a bill, should renounce the said benefits, in order to be held liable.

Held further, that a surety who binds herself in solidum and as co principal debtor, incurs the same responsibilities as the maker of the note (dis. Muusdorp, J.), and that presentation is not necessary, in order to render such surety liable.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Graaff-Reinet, in an action brought by the respondents upon a certain promissory note, which the appellant had endorsed on the back as surety and co-principal debtor.

From the record it appeared that the appellant was sued in the Court below for £33 4s., due upon a certain promissory note dated the 4th April, 1904. The appellant was the wife of the maker of the note, T. P. Priest, and at the hearing of the action an exception was taken that she was married out of community, and that she had not renounced the exceptions of excussion and division. The Magistrate gave judgment for the plaintiffs for the amount claimed.

Mr. Upington for the appellant; Mr. Sutton for the respondents.

Mr. Upington, in argument, said that he was unable to find any case in the reports which was on all fours with the present case. He submitted that where a woman signed as surety and co-principal debtor, the creditor had notice that she was signing, not for her own benefit, but for the benefit of the maker of the note. He contended that a person who signed a promissory note, as Mrs. Priest had done, although liable for the amount of the note, was not really the maker of the note in the sense required by the Act. His submission was that the position of a surety who signed as such, and as co-principal debtor was really the most onerous form of suretyship. If this were not so, why put in "surety" at all: why not sign only as co-principal debtor? The phrase would be meaningless, if it had the effect of making a person the joint maker of the note.

The case of McAlister (Kotze's Rep., 6 Natal, 10) is much stronger than the present case.

[Buchanan, J.: A woman need not renounce benefits if she gets value.]

Oak v. Lumsden (3 Juta, 144) hardly goes as far as that. The case of a woman who has received money for her own use is distinguishable from that of one who has signed as co-principal debtor. The important thing is the knowledge of the creditor, as was pointed out by De Villiers, C.J. in Hope's case.

[Maasdorp, J.: If a person signs a note in the place where the maker should sign, will he not be held liable?]

No; see Klopper v. Van Straaten (11 Juta, 94). A person who writes his name on the back of a note is not necessarily a maker. He may be liable in solidum on the note, but he is not the maker. Take the case of a man who signs as security for a lease. He is responsible, but he is not the lessee. So, a pari, a man who endorses a note is liable if he receives consideration, but he is not a joint maker. Here the creditor has notice ex facie of the document that the surety is signing merely as a surety. See Oak v. Lumsden (3 Juta, 144) and Smuts and Co. v. Coetzee (Buch., 1876, p. 55). In this case the defendant did not discuss the defence raised. It has been held in the High Court that a female is entitled to the benefit of the S.C. Vellijani; see the judgment of Barry, J.P., in Estate Klueagen v. Adrass (7 E.D.C., 171). There the woman was the actual maker of the note. That is a very different case from the present. See also Whitnall v. Goldschmidt (3 E.D.C., 314). A woman cannot sign a note as surety. In English law she would be stopped from denying her signature. The knowledge of the creditor as to the relation between the principal and surety is all important. This case raises an interesting point of law as to what was the liability of a woman married out of community of property, who endorsed a promissory note for the benefit of her husband as surety and co-principal debtor. He (counsel) was not able to produce any direct authority upon the point; as far as he knew, the point had not been decided in our courts. Dr. Nathan, in his work on the Common Law of South Africa (vol. 2, p. 897) made the statement that in such a case the woman would be liable, but the cases that he cited in support of that view—Collison, Sons and Co. v. Guildenhuy (5 Searle, 62) and Guildenhuy v. Swart and Others (5 Searle, 162)—were not to his (Mr. Upington's) mind, any authority in favour of the view of the learned author. One had, under the circumstances, to go back to the provisions of the Bills of Exchange Act, and the main principles which had been enunciated in the cases that he should venture to quote. Proceeding, counsel first addressed the Court on the question of what was the nature of the endorsement on this promissory note. He submitted that the correct way of looking at this matter was not to look upon Mrs. Priest as endorser. The maker of the note should be gone against. An endorser was entitled to claim the benefits of an endorser, and those benefits had certainly not been allowed to the present appellant. If it was contended that this woman was to be regarded as an endorser, then the defence could be raised that the note had not been presented on the due date which was a very good defence, and it would be giving her an even wider interpretation of co-debtor.

Maasdorp, J., said it had been decided in the Supreme Court that a person signing as a surety did not require notice.

Mr. Upington said his main contention really was that the defendant in this case intended to contract, and did only contract the liability of a surety, and nothing more than the liability of a surety. The appellant was not getting the consideration of a principal. If that view was not held by the Court, then at the least she must be looked upon as an endorser with the privileges of an endorser, and when the note was not presented on due date in that line of defence she must succeed, and she could not in any way be looked upon as a joint maker of the note, inasmuch as she contracted all her liability without her name appearing on the face of the note.

Mr. Sutton for the respondent.

The appellant cannot now take advantage of the Senatus consultum Vellijani and authentica si qua mulier. She loses her privilege by reason of section 20 of Act 19 of 1893, which is intended to apply to all cases where women become sureties to promissory notes or bills of exchange. The appellant, if not actually a joint maker of the note sued upon, signed as co-principal debtor and surety, and so is in the position of a maker. She is not entitled to notice of dishonour or presentment for payment. Michaelis v. Mosina (5 E.D.C., 129). She is not entitled to the ordinary benefits of a surety, e.g., the benefits of excussion and division. Collison, Sons and Co. v. Guildenhuy (5 S., 62); Guildenhuy v. Swart and Others (5 S., 165); Willems v. Widow Schendler (2 M., 24); Kennedy, N.O., v. Haarhoff (2 H.C., 215).

If not a joint maker, she has indorsed the note within the meaning of section 20 of Act 19 of 1893. See section 54 of Act 19 of 1893, Chalmers' Bills of Exchange, n. 6 and p.p. 188 and 189; Evan Cape Bills of Exchange, p. 30; Klopper v. Van Straaten (11 J., 97), Coetzee v. Tiran (1 F.; 43). Such an indorser is not entitled to notice of dishonour or presentment for payment, Michaelis v. Mosina (5 E.D.C., 129). A surety is not entitled to notice of dishonour on presentments for payment. Hyal v. Lyons (1 H.C., 238)).

Mr. Upington said he had nothing further to add, but referred the Court to a case decided in the late Orange Free State, and reported in 14, "Cape Law Journal," page 286.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (June 26):

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The defendant was sued in the Magistrate's Court upon a promissory note signed by her husband, Thomas Priest, in favour of the plaintiffs, Messrs. Stegman, Eeselen and Roos. On the back of the note appears the following: "As surety in solidum and co-principal debtor.—A. S. Priest." This endorsement is that of the defendant, who pleaded non-liability thereunder on the grounds, first, that she had not renounced the benefit of the exceptions senatus consultum Vellijani and de authentica si qua mulier, and, secondly, that if she was to be regarded in the light of an endorser, she had been discharged from liability owing to the fact that the note was not duly presented and noted for non-payment at the due date. The suit was for provisional sentence on the note, consequently no evidence was led, but it seems to have been assumed that the payees were aware that defendant had signed only as surety for her husband. The Magistrate overruled the defence and gave judgment for plaintiffs as prayed, with costs. Against this decision the defendant now appeals. As to the first plea filed, it is true that there had been numerous cases in our courts in which it has been held that women who had entered into contracts by which they had bound themselves as sureties for their husbands were not liable thereon where they had not expressly or impliedly renounced these beneficia. But the Bills of Exchange Act, No. 19, 1893, has modified the law on this matter, at any rate as regards bills and promissory notes. Section 20 of that Statute enacts as follows: "Capacity to incur liability as a party to a bill is co-extensive with capacity to contract, provided that to the validity of a bill accepted or endorsed by a woman, the renunciation of the benefits senatus consulti Vellijani and authentica si qua mulier shall not be requisite." Independently of this enactment by our law, women, whether married or single, had the capacity to bind themselves by contract, provided they complied with the proper legal forms. Several cases are given in the reports, in which judgments have been given against married women upon negotiable instruments. In other cases the exceptions relied upon here have been sustained as affording a good defence, but the fact that it
